James Robert Peck, 21, a University senior, died at NC Memorial Hospital at 4:45 a.m. Sunday from injuries sustained in an auto accident near Raleigh Oct. 26.

Peck is the son of Town Manager Robert Peck.

Thrown from his car when it overturned about one-half mile from the town limits on N.C. 54, he suffered loss of an eye, brain damage, and broken bones. State police reported that he was not wearing his seat belt.

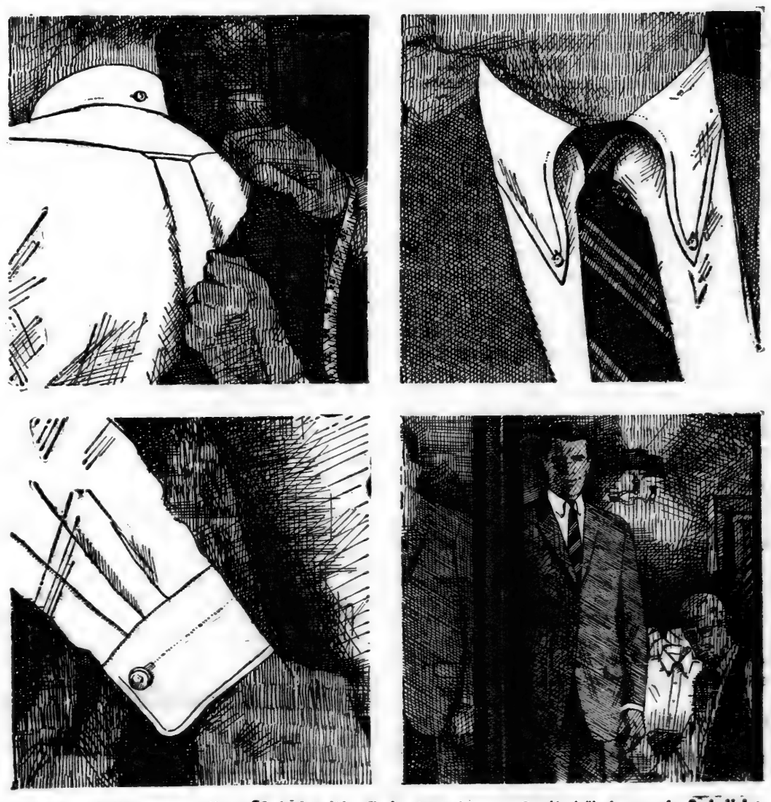
what's a Shirt?



To Gant it's more than fabric; it's flair, fit, show—3 vital "inherents," visible only when a shirt is worn. Gant is finicky about shirts—fit and roll of collar, proper amount of "show" when jacket is worn. Gant is finicky about drape, fold, trim; all must "homogenize" to achieve flair—that viable ingredient which gives the wearer comfort and aplomb.

Been taking your shirts for granted? Many men do. Try Gant; we think they'll be a tradition with you. At discerning stores.

ON THE LEVEL with JOHN MONTAGUE

IT WAS LEO DUROCHER who once said that "nice guys finish last." Most of us like to think it isn't true, but all too often it is. Let's take, for example, the case of Frank Howard and Andy Gustafson.

Everybody knows Frank Howard. He makes himself heard all over theSoutheast. And what he has to say is guaranteed to make you see red, unless you happen to be a member of the "IPTAY" club, or Pat Crain, or somebody like that.

Win or lose, Howard will make your blood boil. Several weeks ago, his Clemson Tigers, sporting a 0-4-1 record, paid a visit to Charlottesville, Va., where they finally made it into the win column. And what did Howard have to say after his team's 35-0 romp over the hapless Cavaliers?

You see, this fellow never misses a chance to rub it in. And that's what makes him so well liked around the league. Tactless? Yes. Successful? Also yes; that is, if you measure the success of a football coach by his won-lost record.

No Losing Season In 10 Years

NOW IN HIS twenty-fourth year as head man at Clemson, Howard has won 136, lost 87 and tied 10. He hasn't had a losing season in the last ten years. His success here in Chapel Hill ten days ago probably kept this string going.

Big Howard came in here bellowing like a bull and left with an 11-7 victory and bellowing even louder. He isn't a nice guy, and he doesn't finish last.

Andy Gustafson isn't a loser either (115-75-4). And the big Swede is a nice guy, which would seem to disprove Durocher's theory. Yet, in a way, Gustafson is finishing last when you consider what a big disappointment his last year at Miami has been. For such a brilliant career, Gustafson is winding up on a sour note.

In pre-season polls, the Hurricanes were a good bet for the nation's top ten. With George Mira at quarterback, the Miamians would surely be one of the most colorful teams and would probably end up in a bowl game. All of this was said; very little of it was true.

The only color has been provided by the fantastic Mr. Mira and a lot of that has been blotted out by an endless stream of dropped passes. The team currently stands at 3-4, and will be the underdog in its last three games—against Florida, Pitt and Alabama. Because of his loss to the Tar Heels here last Saturday, Gustafson will be a loser in his last season unless he can pull a couple of upsets. But Andy isn't crying or cussing or ranting or raving.

Pipe-Puffing Andy Praises UNC

DRESSED IN A SNAPPY red vest and puffing on his pipe, Gustafson stood alone (except for a couple of student managers) in the visitors' dressing room about 4:30 Saturday afternoon.

"Carolina is the finest team we've played all year," said Gustafson. "They've got a great deal of poise. They don't make many mistakes. They are well-rounded. These are the markings of a good team."

The man, who will continue as athletic director after he hangs up the whistle next month, talked in a soft, dignified tone—the dignity amplified by the smouldering pipe. You got the feeling he meant what he said—that he wasn't just trying to lessen the impact of defeat by building up the conquering opponent.

"We knew we had to stop Lacey if we wanted to win. We didn't do it. We had two men on him and we couldn't stop him. That run he made after catching that pass in the fourth quarter was the play that broke our back.

"I was also very impressed by your interior line play and your two big backs. We haven't seen any better runners all year. And you've got two quarterbacks. See what I mean about well-rounded?"

Lacey Vs. Crisson For Record

WHAT GUSTAFSON had so much respect for was undoubtedly very pleasing to those of us who sat on the Carolina side of Kenan Stadium Saturday afternoon, deafening Mira and yelling such all-time great cheers as "Stand up faculty," and "Referee ain't got no daddy."

Offensively the Tar Heels played perhaps their best game of the year. Junior Edge was hitting (13 for 21), Gary Black was hitting (7 for 10), and everybody was catching—even Gene Sigmon, on a tackle-eligible play. Bob Lacey gathered in eight pitches for 108 yards, giving him a two-catch lead on Duke's Stan Crisson (94 to 92) as the two go down to the wire in their battle for the ACC record for career receptions. Both have already shattered the old mark of 74 set by Maryland's Gary Collins in 1959-61.

Lacey vaulted into the record book as the new career yardage leader for pass receiving. His 1,278 yards are 96 more than Collins compiled during his sparkling career for the Terps.

Big Ken Willard rushed for 112 yards, which was just one shy of his best total—113 against Clemson last fall. The Virginia giant gouged his way through Miami's big line time after time, and, on several occasions, was but a step-away from going the distance.

In enjoying his best day of the year, Willard also took over the ACC rushing lead. He has 583 yards now, putting him 15 ahead of Duke's Jay Wilkinson, who had led most of the season.

Thus, this Saturday's Duke-Carolina game will feature two personal duels, Lacey vs. Crisson and Willard vs. Wilkinson, as well as the tense fight for at least a piece of the ACC title—possibly all of it if Wake Forest can just make it two in a row by beating State. Duke and UNC are in agreement for the first time in history as both pull for the Deacons at Winston-Salem Friday night.

On The Art Of Bowling

This week Carolina is thinking about one thing alone—beating Duke. But the Gator Bowl directors are looking further ahead. They're thinking about the Tar Heels in Jacksonville on December 28, IF Duke is disposed of this Saturday.

And the Gator folks aren't the only ones busying themselves by looking at football games these days and hoping that already-hot teams will remain hot. Many eyes are on many teams right now, in hopes that many eyes will be on many television sets come the post-season season.

In addition to the Tar Heels, teams that are under close scrutiny are: Navy, Pitt, Penn State, Syracuse, Delaware, Mississippi, Alabama, Auburn, Mississippi Sttae, Georgia Tech, Memphis State, Texas, Baylor, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Michigan State, Illinois, Washington, Southern Cal, UCLA and Utah State. Here is the way the picture looks from this level:

ORANGE BOWL: Oklahoma vs. Pittsburgh
SUGAR BOWL: Mississippi vs. Alabama
COTTON BOWL: Texas vs. Navy
ROSE BOWL: Washington vs. Michigan State
GATOR BOWL: North Carolina vs. Syracuse
LIBERTY BOWL: Penn State vs. Auburn
BLUEBONNET BOWL: Nebraska vs. Mississippi State
SUN BOWL: Memphis State vs. Utah State

There are several million things which can mess up this lovely picture. Like suppose Penn State beats Pitt, Army beats Navy, Notre Dame beats Syracuse, Duke beats Carolina (hey, wait a minute!), Mississippi State beats Mississippi, Auburn beats Alabama, Illinois beats Michigan State, Nebraska beats Oklahoma and Washington State beats Washington. These are things to think about.

This week, the Daily Tar Heel presents pictures and profiles of the men who'll make the fortunes on the hardwood in a UNC BASKETBALL GALLERY.

Mike Cooke

Senior (Co-Captain). 6-2, 186 from Mount Airy, N. C. Played guard and forward last year when he averaged five points a game and had 44 rebounds. Field goal percentage: 43.6. Free throw percentage: 60.

English major, Cooke has been given the job this year of UNC's quarterback (the middle guard or point man in the 1-3-1 offense). Likes the long, one-hand jumper which he shoots with a perfect form. Has good speed and moves well with and without the ball. Needs work on defense to come up to level Brown and Poteet showed last year in backcourt. Fair rebounder, must prove himself as leader and ball handler at important position he now holds.

Charlie Shaffer

Senior (Co-Captain). 6-3, 194 from Chapel Hill, N. C. Played forward last year, but has been moved to backcourt to fill void created by departure of Brown and Poteet. Averaged 9.9 points and had 130 rebounds (second on team). Field goal percentage: 53.1. Free throw percentage: 59.7.

A pre-Law major, Shaffer is one of the team's great competitors. He, too, can play both forward and guard and may be switched as such this year. An outstanding shooter with picture follow-through, hit on 63.3 per cent of his shots as soph. High points last against Georgia in opener (20) and Clemson (19). An aggresive and strong rebounder.

Phi Delts Win Two To Take Frat Lead

By AL KAPLAN

Phi Delta Theta, by winning the first two intramural point events, is currently the leading team in the Frat Division.

In second place, with 214.98 points, is SAE, followed by Zeta Psi, 195.67, and Chi Psi, 181.10.

Phi Delt also is in first place in the White League. The Whites have a total of 160 points for the football. ATO with 140.34 is second, with Kappa Psi third and Chi Psi fourth.

Navy is the leading team in the dorm division. The Sailors took a second place in the track meet and made the first-round playoff in football, for a point total of 233.7.

Aycock, the number two tag football team and a third-place finisher in track, is a close second in overall point total. Aycock received 147.0 for football and 82.83 in track for their total of 229.83.

Gator Bowl?

North Carolina's 27-16 victory over Miami here Saturday shoved the Tar Heels solidly back into the national limelight —and that means BOWL.

The Orange and the Gator Bowls are still interested parties, but the word is that it'll be the Gator that snaps up UNC.

George Olsen, general manager of the Jacksonville, Florida classic (held this year on Saturday, December 28, watched Carolina's win and was quite impressed.

"We are very much interested in North Carolina. It's an interesting and colorful football team, one that is exciting to watch. UNC is probably the best I've seen from this area."

UNC Cross Country Team Will Race In National Meet

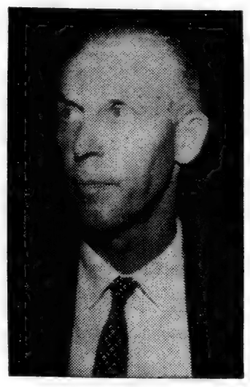
By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC cross country coach Joe Hilton said yesterday his team will make the trip to East Lansing, Mich. next week to compete in the National Collegiate Cross Country Championships.

The Tar Heel harriers, unbeaten in seven dual meets during the regular season and winners of both the North Carolina State and Atlantic Coast Conference Championships (the latter for the fourth straight year), are expected to enter seven men in the national race.

The UNC team will leave for East Lansing on a regular flight out of Raleigh-Durham airport Saturday at 9:30 a.m. and will return to ChapelHill after the nationals on Monday afternoon.

Hilton said Monday he would definitely start his "big five" of seniors Bob Bennett, Mike Folk, junior Jerry Smith and sophomores Art Maillett and Jimmy Meade. Injuries to Bill Janowitz (knee) and Worth Helms (hip) have stalled the process of selection of Carolina's final two places.



JOE HILTON

As of now, it looks like Bob Fawcett and Charlie Lefler will get the nod, but Hilton said he would make a definite decision by Wednesday. Fawcett has made tremendous improvement over the year and placed 16th and 22-nd in the recent two big meets.

About 50 schools are expected to be represented at the race, scheduled for 11:30 Monday morning on an East Lansing golf course. The distance, as usual, will be over a four-mile course.

Hilton expects approxim ately 500 runners to participate, some of them lone representatives of schools, others running as independents.

"It will make me real happy if we were able to place in at least the top ten," said the UNC coach. "If you finish as one of the ten best in national competition, you're in pretty good shape."

Hilton said he expected the toughest competition from San Jose State (the defending national champion), Villanova and Houston.

"Those three are always among the best in the country, and I would say they'd be up there again this year."

IFC Repeals Ruling Against Bull Pledges

By PETE WALES

A rule prohibiting bull pledges and inactive brothers from attending fraternity social functions was repealed in an IFC meeting Monday night.

IFC officers will meet with the Faculty Committee on Fraternities and Sororities Friday to discuss the change and possibly make alterations.

Dr. Clifton H. Kreps, chairman of the faculty committee, was not available for comment.

Bull pledges and inactive brothers are still not allowed to eat or sleep at the house. They are not allowed to participate in intramurals, pay house bills other than social fees or attend chapter meetings.

The rule about social functions was passed last spring by the IFC in answer to faculty criticism. Faculty members felt that members inactive because of grades were keeping all the privileges of active fraternity men.

In other business, a motion was introduced on procedure for dealing with the delinquent payment of fines to the IFC Court.

The motion, if passed next Monday, will give fraternities who have not paid their fines for two months a general probation. After four months the fraternity will be put on intramural probation. After six months the penalty will be social probation.

Zeta Beta Tau was fined $50 and given an official reprimand for their homecoming display a week ago.

The display was considered indecent by the Court.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Wave Of Violence Rips Caracas

CARACAS, Venezula (UPI) — Pro-Castro terrorists unleashed a wave of violence that killed 5 persons and wounded 45 others Tuesday in Caracas.

Members of the underground anti-government Armed Forces for National Liberation (AFLN) resorted to bullets, bombs and burnings to enforce a strike order. The strike, however, was a failure. It was business as usual in most of the city.

Violence was sporadic and largely confined to the poorer sections of Caracas. Small shopkeeps in the slum areas received personal visits from terrorists Monday warning them their shops would be put to the torch if they opened Tuesday.

Fighting Reported In Bagdad

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI)—Diplomatic reports said "fairly heavy firing" was heard Tuesday in Baghdad although the new revolutionary regime partly lifted the 24-hour curfew and reported the Iraqi capital calm.

The diplomatic reports indicated the army was carrying out mopping-up operations against diehard members of the national guard who resisted Monday's coup that ousted the Baathist government.

Cambodia Claims U.S. Plot

PNOM PENH, Cambodia (UPI) — Chief of state Prince Norodom Sihanouk staged Cambodia's first Communist-style public trial Tuesday in support of his claim that the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency was plotting against him and his government.

The prince exhibited two confessed member of a Cambodian rebel group before a mass rally attended by an estimated 20,000 Cambodians who had to be kept by troops from lynching the rebels.

It became evident quickly that the United States was on trial at the mass gathering and not the two supposed Cambodian rebels.

Turncoat Jailed In Shooting Incident

AKRON, Ohio (UPI) — Korean war turncoat Lowell Skinner was charged Tuesday with assault with a deadly weapon and jailed in connection with a shooting incident Monday night at the home of an East Akron woman.

Skinner, 32, who returned here in August after spending nine years in Communist China, was held on $2,500 bond pending a hearing in Municipal Court Friday.

The former U. S. Army corporal was one of 21 Americans who stayed in Red China following the Korean armistice in 1953.

ROTC Programs Voted Revamped

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Armed Services Committee voted Tuesday to completely revamp ROTC programs at both the college and high school levels. But it rejected an anti-discrimination proposal.

The legislation, recommended by a subcommittee headed by Rep. F. Edward Hebert, D-La., would authorize a two-year ROTC training course for universities. Students entering, however, would first have to complete a six-to-eight-week accelerated summer training period as privates.

Cons Caught Here After Escaping

Two Franklin County escaped convicts were captured at gunpoint early yesterday morning in Chapel Hill after forcing a Durham doctor from his car on a highway near Wake Forest College.

According to Chapel Hill Police Chief William Blake, the apprehension was made after patrolman Amos Horne recognized their car as the '59 Buick described in an auto theft report made by Durham Police several hours earlier.

Dennis H. Westmoreland, and James L. Sprinkle, both 21, were forced from the stolen car by Chapel Hill police on the west end of Franklin Street shortly after 3:45 a.m. Both were serving prison terms for felony charges.

The car was reportedly stolen about two hours earlier near Winston-Salem from Dr. Ralph Baum of Durham. Blake said that Baum offered the two escapees a ride when he saw them hitchhiking east of Durham. Around 3:24 a.m. they forced him from the car with an order to "start walking."

PAT INITIATES

The local chapter conducts meetings during the academic year to broaden the scholastic and social acquaintances among its members.

Qualifications necessary for membership include: Undergraduates: 12 semester hours of History, including Modern Civilization with better than a B average in two-thirds of other course work.

Highest Honorary For Carolina Coed

In pre-dawn ceremonies this morning, black-hooded figures stalked the women's residences calling forth five undergraduate women and one honorary to membership in the Order of Valkyries, the highest women's honorary organization on campus.

Tapped were Fay Hensley Coker, Canton, Georgia; Ann Susan Dellinger, Charlotte, N.C.; Elizabeth Darden Ward, Winston-Salem, N.C.; Kristin Clover Waterman, Knoxville, Tennessee; Jaene Carolyn Yeager, Winston-Salem, N.C.; and as an honorary Sue Fields Ross, Fayetteville, N.C.

Valkyries corresponds to the highest men's honorary, the Order of the Golden Fleece. It was founded in 1941 when it replaced Alpha Kappa Gamma, national women's honorary society. Members are recognized for excellence in scholarship, leadership, character, or service to the University; however they must be outstanding in each of these areas.

Citations to the new members read as follows:

MISS COKER . . . . .

"One who has shown devoted and consistant leadership in religious activities, especially through her work with the Baptist Student Union. At the same time, she has demonstrated outstanding academic ability—seeking knowledge as a true scholar. Her lively interest and genuine concern for those around her are reflected in all aspects of her work."

MISS DELLINGER . . . . .

"One who has readily assumed responsibility as the President of the Stray Greeks and as President of McIver Residence Hall. Her tireless enthusiasm and her efficiency has contributed significantly to the success of the Rush season. She shall be remembered because of her humble and selfless service to the University."

MISS ROSS . . . . .

"Valkyries recognizes her because of her interest in freshmen women and understanding of their problems. She has made possible the establishment of a new and more effective Freshman Counselor Program. First as a graduate counselor and now as assistant to the Dean of Women she has exhibited perfection in her administrative duties. Her enthusiasm and keen perception underscored by her warm sense of humor have won the admiration of all who know her."

MISS WARD . . . . .

"One who has exhibited excellence in her positions as clerk of the Women's Council and as a member of the Executive Cabinet of the YWCA. Her dependability, organizational skill, and willingness to serve others characterize her participation in these activities. She has developed her artistic abilities in the fields of dance and drama as well as achieving academic excellence."

MISS WATERMAN . . . . .

"One who has attained excellence in all academic persuits. She is the third student in the history of the University who has been selected to participate in research for an honors degree in Botany. In addition she has demonstrated further leadership by active participation with the YWCA as a co-chairman of the Campus Chest Auction. Her boundless energy and dedication have been an influential and motivating force for her classmates."

MISS YEAGER . . . . .

"One who has contributed to the betterment of the University through her thorough and conscientious efforts in training the women's orientation counselors. Her forsight as Chairman of the Honor System Commission has served to convey the significance of the Honor System to the students in high schools throughout North Carolina as well as to the students at the University. The genuine and kind manner with which she has carried out her responsibilities has served as an inspiration to all."

DISCOVERS BODY

A UNC student in search of a quiet place to study discovered the body of Anthony Lynch, 61, of Durham in a clump of woods near Chapel Hill about 3 p.m. Sunday.

Lynch was found with a 12-gauge shotgun across his body, his head apparently shattered by a single blast from the gun. Suicide was ruled as the cause of death by Orange County corner Allen Walker Jr.

The body was discovered by Grey Carpenter who said he had walked from his campus dormitory to find a quiet place to study on the balmy Sunday afternoon.

Papers in Lynch's pocket identified him as a resident of Durham County.

At Ackland

Ackland Art Center has announced its schedule of exhibits for the 1963-64 season.

The current exhibit, "The Mannerists," a collection illustrating the 16th century artist's interest in "unresolved tensions and ambiquities," can be seen until Dec. 3. Circulated by the American Federation of Arts (AFA), the collection contains 32 prints from the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City, and 10 bronze sculptures from the Walters Art Gallery in Baltimore.

An exhibition of prints from the private collection of Dr. W. P. Jacocks will be featured at Ackland from Dec.5 to Jan. 5.

"The John White Drawings," which depict life in the "Lost Colony" in 1585, will be shown from Jan. 7 to Feb. 14.

Seventy-nine drawings by living sculptors will be shown from Feb. 15 to March 15 including the work of Giacometti, Lipton, Hepworth, Marini, Moore, and Calder. The exhibit is circulated by the Smithsonian Institute (SI).

"Great Paintings of Our Time" is the title of a collection of contemporary paintings by outstanding artists from 40 International Exhibitions held at the Carnegie Institute. The artists represented include Afro, Dubuffet, de Kooning, Hartigan, Pollock, Tobey and Francis. To be held Mar. 3 thru the 31st, the collection is circulated by the AFA.

Ink and wash drawings from the Donald Oenslager Collection trace the history of stage design from the 16th century to the present day. Entitled "Four Centuries of Theatre Design," the collection is circulated by the AFA and will be presented Mar. 15 to April 12.

Photographs and drawings showing the recent architectural trends in the designs of educational facilities at Yale, Princeton, Harvard, M.I.T. and others can be seen April 15 to the 26 in a showing entitled, "On Campus: Recent Buildings." This collection is also circulated by the AFA.

"Selection from the Princeton Collection," works of art from one of the outstanding university art collections in the United States, can be seen April 21 to May 17.

During the summer months from May 27 to Oct. 1, "The 28th Student Art Annual" can be seen. This exhibition is designed to show the progression of the art students through the university's department of art.

Carolina Symposium Selects Committees

106 UNC students have been selected for the staff of the 1964 Carolina Symposium, according to Chairman Dick Hesse.

All committees of the Symposium met last week to begin work on the biannaul program, which will be presented next spring. The topic is "Arms and the Man: National Security and the Aims of a Free Society."

The committees, their functions and their members are:

Related Discussions: This committee will arrange discussion sessions to be held in the weeks before the Symposium in classrooms and campus living units. The topics will provide background for the general Symposium subjects. Professors and other qualified speakers will lead the seminars.

Social and Hospitality: Members of this committee will act as hosts for the guests of the Symposium, and coordinate social functions during the week of the program.

Intercollegiate Seminar: This body will extend invitations to students at other schools to attend the Symposium, and will co-ordinate a series of seminars to be held in the morning during Symposium week for visitors.

Finance Committee: The Symposium treasurer, Al Sneed, is chairman of this committee. Its function is to raise funds for the budget, and account for all expenses. Members are Chris Fink, George Frank, Dan Hartman, Wally Lowenbaum, Bob Speight, Jim Stikeleather, Phil Strubing, Richard Taylor, John Ward, Diana Wellons, and Mel Wright.

PHYSICAL ARRANGEMENTS: Meeting halls, schedules, and accomodations for guests will be secured through this body. Chairman is Archie Davis, and members are Jean Dillon, Al Moran, Reed Thompson, and Joe Warfel.

SECRETARIAT: This body will perform typing, mimeographing, registration, and other functions. It is chaired by Symposium secretary Bev Haynes. Members are Snow Anderson, Connie Burroughs, Carson Foard, Betty Humphries, Ann Parker, Patsy Parker, Mary Roper, Sylvia Shields, Faryl Sims, and Molly Snead.

PUBLICITY: This committee, chaired by Ginny Carnes and Harry DeLung, is divided into three sub-committees. The Exhibits sub-committee will be responsible for displays about Symposium topics and speakers. Chairman is Dave Edwards, and members are Mike Bissell, Nancy Fry, Roxanne Kalb, Don Lewis, Shirley Truitt, Eric Van Loon, and Tom White.

The Handbook committee will write and publish the Symposium handbook which contains information about the program and speakers. Patti Perrin is the chairman, and members are George Butler, Pat Dearborn, Susan Goode, Steve Hoar, and Al Shivers.

Remaining publicity work will be done by a committe headed by Carnes and DeLung. Members are Bert Bradshaw, David Broadhurst, Dave Crockett, ane Dallen, Helen Ehrhardt, Miles Foy, ohn Froneberger, Steve Lackey, Suzanne Micaud, ohn Seago, Hugh Stevens, Franklin Tew, and Frank Welsh.

BULLETIN

A small fire in a refrigerator motor at Memorial Hospital brought several hundred students and three Chapel Hill Fire Department engines scurrying to the scene about 8:30 last night.

About $20 in damage was done when the motor, located in a seventh floor pantry, became overheated. The fire was put out by a hand extinguisher before firemen arrived.

Exclusive Cuban Film To Be Shown

Robert Cohen, photographer and lecturer, will present a film entitled "Castro's Cuba" Thursday at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall. The uncensored film was shot in Cuba this summer, and records Cuban life for the first time since Castro came to power.

The free film is sponsored by the GMAB Current Affairs Committee.

Cohen was granted authorization to enter Cuba at about the time American students were being refused entrance to the country. The entire film was developed in the U. S., and the Cubans had no opportunity to approve or disapprove.

The film shows a number of aspects of Cuban life, including Russian artillery sites, communist power plants, and state and private farms. There are sequences of an illegal Coca-Cola plant being run by the socialist government, and of Russian oil being produced in former Esso and Shell refineries.

There is also film of Castro in action, including the negotiations with American congressmen over the release of political prisoners. Mr. Cohen was official photographer for such sessions.

CADETS OF THE MONTH

Three UNC Air Force ROTC cadets selected as "Cadets of the Month" were announced recently by Lt. Col. Gordon D. Kage, professor of air science and commander of the UNC Air Force detachment.

Named were Cadet Sergeant Robert P. Lukens, a junior from Lansdale, Pa.; Cadet Ronald J. Logan, a sophomore from Chapel Hill, and Cadet Basic Lawrence W. Markham, a freshman from Durham.

The cadets were selected for their excellence in appearance, military bearing and knowledge of leadership functions within the Cadet Corps.

Owe Kemp, Julian Money? Loan Fund's Got A Million

The Student Aid Program administered by the University now exceeds one million dollars a year.

This amount has been allocated to students for 1963-64 in the form of loans, scholarships, and on-campus jobs, Julian D. Mason, Jr., director of student aid announced recently.

Although more than half of this figure has been awarded to UNC students in the form of loans thus far $247, 689 has also been given in the form of scholarships to some 1,049 students, and 543 students now hold part-time jobs on campus which provide them approximately $258,000 per year. This amount does not include athletic grants-in-aid or National Merit or Morehead scholarships.

"Because of these three programs, no student who can maintain a 'C' average needs to leave UNC for financial reasons," said Mason. "These programs can be used in a variety of combinations. We have a great many students who take advantage of two or more programs, and some who utilize all three."

"The two primary sources for our scholarships are escheats funds ('unclaimed' money in banks and other institutions which has reverted to the state and then been given to the University) and profits earned from the student stores. These funds constitute about 80 per cent of UNC's scholarship money," continued Mason.

However, every UNC student actually benefits from a "scholarship" from the N. C. legislature in the form of $776 per year for in-state students, and $351 for out-of-staters. This is money the legislature allocates to the University to make up the deficit between the amount of tuition and fees the students pay ($285 for in-state students and $710 for out-of-state students) and the actual cost of the academic year per student.

With the cost of higher education rising each year, it is becoming more and more difficult for students to work their way through college. Most need other help in the form of scholarships or loans, said Mason. The average part-time job on campus provides about $450 per academic year, only one-third of what the student needs. According to this year's figures, the total cost for an academic year for an in-state student is $1352, including all expenses.

Prospective students interested in scholarships or part-time work should contact the Office of Student Aid, 2 Hanes Hall for applications and information.

To be eligible for a scholarship a student must be in the upper quarter of his high school class, and he must have a College Board examination score the total of which is at least equal to the average score made by North Carolina students in the present freshman class (at least 1050). For most scholarships, a student must also show financial need.

"We are particularly interested in the above average student who has financial need," said Mason.

There is a single application for all scholarships with the exception of the following: the Alston - Pleasants, the Blanchard, the Herbert North Jackson and the Marvin B. Smith scholarships. Separate applications are needed for each of these due to the special qualifications required.

Prospective students can apply for part-time work at the same time they apply for scholarships, explained Mason. Typical student jobs include work in the University's library, planetarium, dining halls, or student stores.

Applications for loans will not be accepted until late May when the student can furnish a more accurate picture of his financial resources. After this time, loan applications may be made any time, up to and during the academic year.

To Clear Up Or Compound The Confusion

As the Anne Royal Carter case draws more and more attention and gives no indication that it might come to an end in the near future, the confusion about the various court orders mounts.

Miss Carter was originally suspended in May, 1961 by the Women's Honor Council for cheating on a Latin make-up quiz. She appealed to Chancellor Aycock, President Friday, and finally to the Board of Trustees. But all said they could find no grounds on which to review the case.

After these appeals failed, Miss Carter hired Chapel Hill lawyer John Manning and the case went to Wake County Superior Court. The suspension was challenged on two grounds: first, that the Trustees could not delegate final authority in matters of suspension of a student, and therefore the suspension was unconstitutional, and second, that the evidence presented in the Honor Council case did not support the verdict of guilty.

On the first of these contentions, the presiding judge, Judge Heman Clark, ruled that the Trustees recognition of the student council's suspension was, in fact, constitutional in Miss Carter's case since the Trustees had heard it, and even appointed a committee to study it. But the Trustees had also adopted a resolution that "no individual disciplinary case be referred to or considered by the entire Board of Trustees or any special committee thereof."

Miss Carter's contention that the Trustees could not delegate full and final responsibility to an administrative group or student council, since the Constitution of North Carolina fixes them with the responsibility, would seem to be borne out by Judge Clark's order. He carefully says that this does not apply to Miss Carter's case, since the Trustees did hear it, but it seems implicit in this judgement that the Board of Trustees' resolution not to hear individual cases would not be upheld if a similar case were to arise.

Concerning Miss Carter's second contention, Judge Clark said, "It is the opinion of this Court that all of the evidence offered against Miss Carter fails to rebut the presumption of innocence. . . . Her conviction therefore was not in accordance with due precess under the Resolution of the Board (of Trustees) or provision of the Student Constitution."

Judge Clark continued, "Miss Carter should be exonerated from the charge of cheating by the proper administrative authorities of the University." On the matter of her readmission to the University Judge Clark said, "To deny her readmission solely on grounds of the suspension for cheating on the evidence in this case would, in the opinion of this Court, be arbitrary and capricious."

Then the Chancellor, through the University's lawyer, suggested that the case be returned for further consideration in view of some evidence not known in review. Judge Clark considered this action "appropriate" and remanded the case to the Trustees and directed them to refer the matter to the proper administrative authority for a review and further action they deemed appropriate.

That is where the trouble came in. Miss Carter and her lawyer take the Judge's decision to mean she has been cleared, since he said she should be exonerated in his order. They believe that the "further administrative action" meant clearing her records and readmitting her. The University assumed the order to review meant a full review of the case by the Faculty Committee on Student Discipine, and arranged for that hearing. Miss Carter declined and took a case against the University demanding that it carry out the original order.

This case is the one recently declined. It stayed Miss Carter's suspension until final settlement of the matter, but presiding Judge Clawson Williams interpreted Judge Clark's "review" to mean de novo, or an entirely new hearing, by the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

Miss Carter naturally took exception to this interpretation, and her lawyer has given notice of appeal of Judge Williams' order. The appeal must now go to the North Carolina Supreme Court.

Thus it will be up to the State Supreme Court to decide, not on the merits of the case, but on the validity of Judge Williams' interpretation of Judge Clark's meaning of "review" in his original order, and several other technical objections to Judge Williams' order.

Like we said, it gets more and more confusing.

No More Support For The Unworthy

Late last May quite a row developed over the fact that the Senior Class held their annual shindig at The Patio, a segregated Chapel Hill restaurant, with the result that a Negro senior and his white friend were arrested and charged with trespassing.

The incident was duly regretted by several class leaders — not, one got the impression, because it was a shameful thing to have happen to a classmate, but because it hurt the class' image at a most delicate time, just before graduation.

It developed that what was really responsible for the incident was not segregationist tendencies lurking in the hearts of the party's planners, but simple lack of foresight. No one in authority had thought about whether The Patio was segregated or not. It was that simple.

Obviously, the best way to prevent a recurrence of such an incident in the future is to impress upon student leaders and others the fact that segregation still exists in Chapel Hill and it must be taken into account in planning student functions off the campus.

In addition, it is absolutely indefensible to allow money appropriated from all students to be used to bankroll parties at places where all students aren't admitted.

For these reasons we are glad to see that Student Body Vice-President Bob Spearman has set up a special committee to ensure that student government funds are not spent at segregated establishments.

The action is long overdue, but that does not detract from its commendability. It appears that the choice of the committee members — Neal Jackson, Judy Freider, Linda Simpson and Mal King — is as wise as the action itself.

The existence of the committee alone, aside from what it specifically does, should result in heightening the effectiveness of the boycott which responsible members of the University community have imposed upon Chapel Hill's lingering remnants of segregation.

"Hello—Sen. Neuberger? Maurine, What Are You Doing Next Summer?"

Quiet Chapel Hill Would Be A Cause For Alarm

The Smithfield Herald

Any suggestion that University of North officials should stop criticizing the "Speaker Ban Law" passed by the 1963 Legislature runs contrary to sound public policy in a democratic society.

Fortunately, UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock did not keep silent after the state press carried news reports quoting Johnston County's Senator Whitley as saying that continued criticism of the speaker law could result in the election of only those trustees and University officials willing to carry out legislative policy.

"When we do not work against something which we think is injurious to the state, then I think we are derelict in our duties," Mr. Aycock declared.

Let it be emphasized that the Chancellor did not speak defiantly. He made it clear that University officials "should make every effort to carry out the policy of the Legislature," and he went on to declare that as long as the speaker law remains in the statutes the University administration intends "to carry out the letter and the spirit of it to the best of our ability."

But the Chancellor could not refrain from saying (and he should not have refrained from saying) that "if we really believe this law is injurious to the University and say nothing, then by our silence the people would assume we think it is in the best interest of the state."

As an executive in charge of a division of State Government, Mr. Aycock has witnessed harm done to education and the democratic way of life. And he is telling both Legislature and people that the law is a bad law.

This is democratic America, not some totalitarian Communist country. And, in democratic America, it is wise public policy to insist, even demand, that executives in charge of the various divisions of State Government speak their minds openly on any difficulties encountered in carrying out state policy.

The Legislature should know how its policies work or don't work. And the people, the ultimate source of authority, should also know.

It is sad to contemplate a university campus on which there is restriction of basic freedom. Indeed, there is no true university without freedom to inquire into any idea or subject; without freedom to express ideas in classrooms, assembly halls, or wherever students and teachers gather; without freedom to speak views in administrative halls.

The effective defenders of the democracy we seek to save from Communism are the champions of free inquiry, free thought, free expression. Since the Communist ideology has no chance of thriving in an atmosphere of intellectual freedom, the true university is one of the great bulwarks against Communism.

Chancellor Aycock and the other University administrators who oppose the speaker law are better anti-Communists than their bitter critics because they are unyielding in their allegiance to democratic freedom. Let them keep speaking. When Chapel Hill is silent, North Carolinians will have real cause for alarm.

The Future Of The University

By JOHN W. GARDNER
in Saturday Review

Over the past fifty years, the universities have risen to a position of extraordinary prominence in our society. The prophecy being circulated today is that we are moving into a period in which society will be organized around the universities. I don't know what the Establishment will think of that rumor. Perhaps they started it. At any rate, it is an exhilarating notion—even, I should think, to those worthy professors who want as little as possible to do with the rest of society.

As for me, I am easily carried away by such glittering ideas, and I am quite willing to contemplate this one—provided that it be regarded as one of three possibilities.

The first possibility, let us say, is that society will be organized around the universities.

The second possibility is that it will not.

The third possibility—and I ask you to consider this one carefully—is that as industry and government, with their huge research and educational programs, come to look more and more like the universities, and as the universities with their worldly interests come to look more and more like the rest of society, we shall achieve a condition in which no one will be quite sure what is university and what is non-university and non one wil lhave the faintest idea what is organized around what.

The general public stands in awe of the universities. And the fact that it is also a bit suspicious of the universities doesn't diminish the awe. So it is likely that many will welcome the new prophecy.

But, all things considered, it would be better if the universities themselves took a more critical view. It would be well if they were to ask themselves whether they are quite prepared to have society organized around them. It might even be well for them to remind themselves that like every other social institution, universities are subject to disintegrative forces, are the scene of power politics, and are susceptible to the decay that so often sets in at precisely the hour of triumph.

I suppose that every man or woman with the capacity to face reality—which eliminates most of us at once—recognizes that this is a time of decision for the universities. The first item on the agenda is whether the university will have a voice in its own future.

We like to think that institutions are shaped according to the best vision of the best men in them, and sometimes this is so. Let me put that more positively: History offers many persuasive examples of just that consequence—able and vigorous men sharing a vision of how they might shape their future and creating institutions to that end.

But that is not the only way that institutions get shaped.

Sometimes institutions are simply the sum of the historical accidents that have happened to them. Like the sand dunes in the desert, they are shaped by influences but not by purposes. Or, to put the matter more accurately, like our sprawling and ugly metropolitan centers they are the unintended consequences of millions of fragmented purposes.

Now I believe—and will never cease to believe—that men can shape their institutions to suit their purposes — provided that what those purposes are are clear and provided that the men concerned are not too gravely afflicted with the diseases of which institutions die: complacency, myopia, an unwillingness to choose, and an unwillingness on the part of individuals to lend themselves to any worthy common purpose.

Happily, I have no responsibility today to suggest what the worthy purposes of a university should be at this moment in history. I gladly leave that to clearer and wiser heads than mine. But I cannot forego one comment.

I don't know whether the universities are in the grip of society or society is in the grip of universities, but I like to think that no matter how much the university becomes entangled with the world on its outer fringes, the inner city of the university will be above the battle in some quite distinctive ways. I should like to believe that it will, to borrow some lines from Bernard Shaw, "stand for the future and the past, for the posterity that has no vote and the tradition that never had any . . . for the great abstractions, for the eternal against the expedient; for the evolutionary appetite against the day's gluttony; for intellectual integrity, for humanity, for the rescue of industry from commercialism and of science from professionalism . . ." I like to think that it will stand for things that are forgotten in the heat of battle, for values that get pushed aside in the rough and tumble of everyday living, for the goals we ought to be thinking about and never do, for the facts we don't like to face and the questions we lack the courage to ask.

Book Review

Biography: Edgar Allan Poe

By NANCY LAWSON

Edgar Allan Poe, The Man Behind the Legend, Edward Wagenknecht, New York Oxford Press, 1963, $5.75.

Very few authors are surrounded by more mystery, more conflicting tales, and more controversy than Edgar Allan Poe. There is controversy over almost every aspect of his life. He is said to have visited Russia, Africa, and France, which in fact he never did. He has been called an alcoholic, a dope fiend, a necrophiliac, and a Gothic monster. Critics cannot even decide whether he was a genius or not worth reading. Tennyson called him "the most original genius that America has produced", while Emerson dismissed him as "the jingle man." To complicate matters even more, his first biographer deliberately lied about him. Baudelaire referred to this man, Griswold, as a "pedagogical vampire."

In this book Professor Wagenknecht has undertaken to dispel the legends about Poe, and to present the man in a more accurate light, with his strengths and weaknesses judiciously balanced. In his scholarly and critical approach, Wagenknecht considers Poe's own work, the accounts of people who knew him, and all that has been written about him since his death. He states that his purpose here is "to pursue the study of Poe's character and personality as far as ascertainable evidence will take us." While the author uses Poe's works in as much as they reflect on the man, he does not in this book attempt a critical analysis of the works themselves.

Wagenknecht investigates six major aspects of Poe: his life, living, learning, art, love and God. His life, although he lived little more than a century ago, has even in its facts become confused and contradictory. In the first three sections the author presents much evidence to disprove many of the Poe slanders, and corrects wrong impressions which have been drawn from the misconstrued facts of his life. Here the autor deals at length with the problem of Poe's drinking, and sifts before the eyes of the reader the evidence pro and con of his alleged alcoholism.

The last three sections are much more interesting as they deal with the mind of this unusual man, rather than with the facts of his life and the literary gossip which has surrounded it. Again the author, confining himself to documentary evidence, uses Poe's work and the statements of those who knew him to shed more light on the nature of Poe's career as a poet, fiction writer, essayist, and critic. He attempts to draw conclusions as to the relation of Poe's religious and philosophical writings to his literature and his life. His approach here remains as objective and conservative as in the first sections.

It would seem that the author has succeeded at his stated purpose. The book presents a good stepping off point for a study of Poe. It enables a better understanding and evaluation of his work by presenting the author in a clearer light. In view of the facts which he has presented, Wagenknecht concludes that while there may always be mystery about Poe, he is nonetheless a man of dignity, with a sincere and deeply thought-out philosophy; definitely a man of scruples, not at all the damned monster he is so often thought to be. He finds in Poe a sensitivity beyond the ordinary, which to Wagenknecht accounts for much of his peculiarity. "His greatest fault was an instability which, despite all his capacity for work, made him unreliable in his personal relationships . . . " The author has presented a scholarly analysis of the Poe material. Unfortunately in so doing, he occasionally engages in mudslinging at those who have slung mud at Poe. Perhaps, in regard to the many contradictory things that have been said about Poe, usually slanderously and without proof, or even, according to Wagenknecht, any evidence, he is justified in doing so.

It does, however, startle the reader who is considering the statements which the author is attempting to refute.

Edward Wagenknecht is Professor of English at Boston University, and has also written "Nathaniel Hawthorne: Man and Writer," "Washington Irving: Moderation Displayed", and biographical portraits of Mark Twain, Theodore Roosevelt, and others. He has written histories of both the English and American novel and edited many anthologies. "Edgar Allan Poe: The Man Behind the Legend" is another excellent contribution to the field of literary biography.

Letters To The Editors

Disgusting!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The University of North Carolina has always been acclaimed a liberal campus. But how godawful liberal it has recently become! Saturday, after the Miami Hurricane had "huffed and puffed and blown itself out," a friend of mine who lives in Winston Hall asked me to drop by his room with him so he could get dressed for dinner. We were walking down the first floor hall (eastward) away from the TV lounge when what do our wondering eyes behold but two live females going into the men's room in the eastmost section of the floor. I did not know whether to give the wolf call or run; perhaps I should have done both.

Granted girls do now come into the lounges of men's residence halls to wait on a date or watch TV and on moving days mothers and little sisters help carry pillows and rugs up the stairs. All that I had seen before. But these were BIG sisters! My friend and I did not go into the men's room while the girls were in there, but we DID feel that our privacy was being invaded. We were almost late for a dinner engagement because we had to wait for them to come out—and when they did they were still rougeing and powdering and giggling as if they had enjoyed "the thrill of it all." While the girls were in the bathroom, a boy came down the hall with his clothes off (as men naturally will do in residence halls); after all they DO live there. Is this the kind of pigpen living our University wants?

Encounter Show Reveals

Folksingers Not All Alike

By JIM NEAL

There are thee kinds of folk singers, "Encounter" revealed Monday night on WUNC-TV (Channel 4).

The first group is the "fraternity, Kingston Trio type," which loves music for the sake of the music, in the same way as it loves rock and roll. But this group generally has no feeling for the people from whom folk music comes.

The second group is the "tennis-shoed, bluejeaned crowd," which has a great interest in the folkways of the people who sing the music and runs around the country to listen to it. This is perhaps the most authentic group of the three.

Then there is the "academic group," which is interested in studying the forms of the music and the people who sing it. This group is usually totally objective in its interest in folk music, as opposed to the more or less subjective interest of the other two groups.

Dr. Wilton Mason, director of the Folk Music Institute, outlined these three groups, and said he belongs more to the "academic" group than either of the other two.

Dick Mandell, Miss Stevie Wilber and Shelton Langford, all UNC students, sang and played folk music on the show, and then discussed their interest in the medium with Dr. Mason and RTVMP Professor John Clayton, moderator of the show.

Mandell, an art major from New York, said he was of the second or "bluejeaned" type of folk music enthusiast. He said he believes a song must be actively performed to have any existence.

Mandell said he picked up most of his songs from records. According to Dr. Mason, so do most non-professionals.

Miss Wilber, a junior in comparative literature from Washington, D. C., said she merely jumped on the bandwagon of interest in folk music a year or so ago, found she could carry a tune, and began playing. She said she sings mainly for her own enjoyment and entertainment.

Dr. Clayton said he had first heard Miss Wilber in one of his classes. A graduate student brought her in for a classroom demonstration, and Dr. Clayton, inspired by her interest and enthusiasm, decided to talk about folk music on the "Encounter" show.

Miss Wilber said she thinks the current "protest songs" represent "what is going on these days, these years" in American society.

"Encounter" is a weekly show which discusses the "Minds, Manners and Morals" of students in an effort to find out how they act and what convictions they have which lead them to act the way they do.

Next week's "Encounter" will be with "The Role of the Newspaper in a University Town." Guest will be James Shumaker, editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly, and two of his staff writers, J. A. C. Dunn and Bill Scarborough. Air time will be 8:30 p.m.

Dr. Mason said social commentary has long been a major ingredient in folk music, and that we are creating another type of folk music of our own based on it. He said part of the effectiveness of its depends on the willingness of the artist to use the old well-known cliches.

Langford, a psychology major from North Wilkesboro said he had developed an interest in playing the guitar from playing background while his room-mate practiced singing the lead. He said his room-mate played and sang with a combo, and was also a folk-fan.

Langford said he had learned old mountain ballads at his mother's knee, but they were so sad and mournful he didn't like them. Then, he said, he had to go back and try to learn them when he became interested in folk music.

Dr. Mason remarked this was an example of the oral tradition by which folk music has been passed from generation to generation through the years.

The contemporary folk music is a reflection of the contemporary scene, Dr. Mason said, and praised folk musician Pete Seegar, who sang on campus last year, as a folk music scholar.

Dr. Mason said scholars in such fields as sociology and anthropology have been studying folk music for years. Their interest has been in tracing the cultures of peoples and tribes of various lands. Dr. Mason said in the study of "ethno-musicology" the emphasis has been on the people.

But, Dr. Mason said, "aculturization, or inter-cultural contamination," has blurred the lines and made the study more difficult.

He qutoed Pete Seegar as saying, "In just a few years, the world's folk music is going to be so snarled up" nobody will be able to understand it. As an example, Dr. Mason cited Ceylon and Japan, where American rock and roll is very popular to the exclusion of the traditional folk music of those countries.

The current "exposure" given folk music on radio and television, Dr. Mason said, is both good and bad.

It is bad, he said, because we are wearing out our contemporary folk music almost as soon as it comes to life; but it is good, he added, because it shows we are returning to those musical forms "which have stood the test of time" and have "a germ of truth in them."

Chanin Resigns UP Post; Held Longest In History

The longest University Party Chairmanship in party history came to an end Monday night, when Mike Chanin, chairman since September 1962, resigned effective December 10.

In a very unexpected move, Chanin told a party meeting that he is resigning for three reasons.

Chanin's first reason was because of his greater interest in the area of Student Government where he has worked extensively in the area of the United States National Student Association.

Chanin said that he felt that NSA is "just now beginning to become a truly national union of students . . . and I feel a definite responsibility as the author of the NSA basic policy declaration on Student Welfare to work extensively in this area for next summer's NSA Congress."

Chanin's second reason for stepping down was a feeling of greater responsibility to the students, student government and himself "to seek action on many of the ideas and programs that I have stood for during the last year."

Lastly, Chanin felt that he should resign his position because of "an obligation to the UP, its members, and to its leaders, to work for the fulfillment of our platform from last year through the student legislature and student government."

Chanin went on to say that he felt that "the UP has come a long way in solving its major problems, but that the other problems remaining demand new directions and re-orientation."

Chanin closed his speech by thanking various UP officers and Executive Committee members for their help during his chairmanship.

In other UP action, Dean Long's speech was postponed until the next meeting, Nov. 25 at 8:15 in Gerrard Hall. Also on the agenda for that meeting will be voting on two UP resolutions and on the by-law changes.

MICKSUP

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

The search goes on. The committee to select a new Chancellor has met several times. They have completed most of their organizational work and from now until spring, the committee will be working almost daily to pick a successor for retiring Chancellor Aycock.

Already many names have been brought to the committee's attention, and believe it or not, among these have been Choo-Choo Justice and Terry Sanford. Don't laugh, especially at that last name.

* * *

State American Legion head L. J. Phipps has already caught the editorial wrath of many of the state's newspaper writers. But one thing good can be said about the former Orange County representative. He hasn't missed a Carolina home football game in 42 years. How about those bananas.

* * *

Just about every University president has had a building named after him . . . Battle Hall, Graham Hall, etc. There is one exception however, and that is former president Poole. It seems that the committee who names the buildings don't want to have a Poole Hall on campus.

* * *

Reports of petty thievery have been turned in to the Dean of Men's office. Matthew Ott, assistant to Dean Long says that most of the thefts involve clothing, football tickets and personal items. He says that most of the thefts result from leaving dormitory rooms unlocked.

So, Ott says, please lock the doors, even if you are going to be out of your room for just a short time.

One of the most liked persons in South Building and one who has one of the toughest jobs is Housing Director Jim Wadsworth. Despite his tight schedule, Wadsworth still finds time to give lectures at the Morehead Planetarium. He is also an avid collector of sea shells and recently attended a convention of sea shells collectors on the N.C. Coast. Drop by the office sometimes and listen to some of the shells. Very interesting.

There are probably no more avid football fans on campus than Chancellor Aycock and Dean Cathey. Aycock went to Michigan to see the UNC-Michigan State encounter, and Cathey journeyed to Columbia to view a UNC victory over USC. Cathey told his History 112 class that he was going down to Columbia to watch the Tar Heels "Black them out." As it wound up, the Heels just barely "Edged them out."

* * *

In the future, a committee will be formed to look into the possibility of letting girls visit in men's dormitory rooms. It has worked at other schools, committee head Bob Payton says. So why couldn't it work at UNC. For the answer, Bob is referred to Kitty Carmichael.

UPHOLDS SENTENCE

The Faculty Review Board met for six hours Monday night and upheld two suspensions imposed by the Women's Council, according to Dean of Men William G. Long.

The students were convicted last week on violations of the Honor and Campus Codes and were suspended for one full academic semester by the Women's Council.

They had been charged with falsifying their sign-out slips, driving in an automobile after closing hours without special permission and drinking to the extent that their judgment was impaired.

There were no student observers on the Review Board hearing.

ACCOUNTING SCHOLARSHIP

Ralph W. Pope of Rich Square was given the 1963-64 Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. Accounting Scholarship, it was announced recently by the Scholarship Committee of the UNC School of Business Administration.

Pope is a member of Beta Gramma Sigma, honarary Business Administration fraternity, and was among the top four accounting students, one of the scholarship's requirements.

LAW AND GOVERNMENT

Mayor Sandy McClamroch of Chapel Hill and two other panelists will discuss law and government in relation to desegregation here as the second of a three-part series on "Desegregation in a Small Southern Town" Thursday at 7 p.m. on WUNC radio.

Dr. Earle Wallace, associate dean of the Graduate School and associate professor of political science, is moderator for the the three-part program.

Other guests are Professor Daniel H. Pollitt of the UNC Law School and Robert B. Midgette, assistant judge of the Chapel Hill Recorder's Court.

A segment of "Carolina Round-table," the panelists invite listeners to telephone questions to 942-3172 while the program is on the air.

An 'Explosive Attack' Says Hickey Of Duke

By JOHN MONTAGUE

"Duke is the most explosive team we have faced all year," said Jim Hickey without a trace of doubt in his voice. The statement, made at the weekly press conference at the Carolina Inn yesterday, set the tone for the Tar Heels' Duke game preparations.

Just about everyone agrees that if the Heels are to take the measure of the Blue Devils Saturday, they will have to stop, or at least hold down, the potent Duke attack which has been producing points at the rate of 24 per game.

"We'll hold 'em down to three touchdowns and hope our offense can score four," joked Emmett Cheek, UNC's defensive coach. Cheek also has scouted the Duke club against Wake Forest and Navy, and his report brought anything but a feeling of security to the Tar Heels.

"They use what we call the 'lonesome set' with Crisson flexed wide at end and halfback Wilkinson playing just off the outside tackle," explained Cheek. "They use an unbalanced line with both tackles playing on the same side as the lonesome end and the end on the weak side playing in tight."

From this formation, Duke has three basic running plays which have proved most effective. They are:

1. POWER SWEEP — Quarterback Scotty Glacken pitches to strongside halfback Jay Wilkinson and he sweeps strong side. Off-side guard pulls and he, along with fullback, is principle blocker.

2. RIDE PLAY — Glacken fakes to fullback (Rich Kraft or Mike Curtis) and gives to off-side halfback (Billy Futrell or Biff Bracey) cutting back.

3. LEAD PLAY — Glacken gives to fullback as off-side halfback blocks.

The Blue Devil passing game centers around lonesome end Stan Crisson. A favorite pass is for Crisson to go down about eight yards, then cut back toward line of scrimmage for toss from Glacken.

Another is the famous bootleg-reverse pass which sees Glacken pitching out to his halfback, then taking the ball back on a hand-off and bootlegging the option pass or run. If Crisson is covered, Glacken will look for Wilkinson up the middle.

"Their overall thinking," said Hickey, "is that you can't stop Crisson with one man. And if you put two men way out there on him, then they feel they can run on you."

One of things which has hampered the Blue Devils in the last few games has been the injury bug—especially the inactivity of halfback Futrell and fullback Curtis. Futrell is expected to be fully recovered for Saturday's game and Coach Bill Murray hopes he'll also have the services of Curtis.

UNC Basketball Gallery

Bryan McSweeney

Senior 6-5, 192 from Hewlett, N. Y. Ankle injury much of season slowed him last year when he averaged 6.8 points and had 72 rebounds. Field goal percentage: 53.7. Free throw percentage: 61.8.

An Industrial Relations major, McSweeney is probably best defensive man on the team. Long and tall with good agility on boards, he has quick moves under neath where he is invaluable scrambler. As soph, led team in scoring much of first half 1961-62 season. Could improve outside shot. Work in close and on fast breaks makes him possible starter but more probably sixth or seventh man.

Art Katz

Senior 6-6, 191 from Williston Park, N.Y. Expected to provide help in relief of front-court men. Has seen action in 15 games over two years. Served only limited time in junior season with participation in four games.

Physical Education major, Katz received more than 40 scholarship offers on graduation from high school before deciding on UNC. Has one of finest jump shots on team, but weak defensively and needs improvement in board work. Scored 12 points in reserve role in soph year. Could be valuable if foul trouble hits big men and jumper gets hot.

Hank Bauer New Manager At Baltimore

BALTIMORE, Md. (UPI) — Rugged Hank Bauer, who learned winning ways with such outfits as the U. S. Marines and the New York Yankees, Tuesday was named manager of the Baltimore Orioles. He insisted he wasn't upset by the delay in the announcement.

Orioles General Manager Lee MacPhail said in making the announcement that "Hank has been my preference right along."

However, the managerial job has been open since the close of the 1963 season when Billy Hitchcock was released, and Bauer has been under contract as a coach for most of that time and presumably ready and willing to say "yes" to becoming manager. Two weeks ago ex-Card Manager Eddie Stanky said he had been offered the job but decided to remain with the Cards as farm director.

Bauer, who got a one-year contract for an undisclosed salary, said he "wasn't a bit hurt" that Stanky had been approached first.

"That is Lee's department — to pick a manager," said Bauer by telephone from his home in Kansas City. "If he had picked Stanky, I would have accepted the situation. But I'm the guy he picked, and that's what counts."

MacPhail said only Bauer and Stanky had been under consideration. He hinted that Stanky had been sounded out, but not actually offered, the job.

"It would have been up to us to make a choice, had Stanky thrown his hat into the ring," said MacPhail.

MacPhail said he was happy about the signing of Bauer because "he knows our ball club and the rest of the league. He has the background and the type of personality that we were looking for."

Soccer Coach Allen Prophesied Season

By RON LOGAN

"We should be stronger this year, but I don't think that we will improve on last season's record," said North Carolina soccer coach Marvin Allen two months ago—and he was right

Last Friday's tie with Duke (1-1) left the Tar Heels with a 5-3-2 mark for the season, and put UNC in third place in the ACC with a 1-1-2 record. This is not as good as the 7-2 performance by the 1962 edition, but this year's schedule was much tougher.

Losses this season have come at the hands of Navy, Davidson, and Maryland — three of the best teams in the country. Navy had its best team in twenty years as did Davidson, and Maryland is as strong as last year when the Terps were national runner-ups.

Strong teams from Washington University (St. Louis), N.C. State, Pfeiffer, Belmont Abbey, and Emory were defeated by the Tar Heels, while Virginia and Duke held UNC to ties.

The current crop of soccer players did not have the scoring punch that last year's team had, but defensively the 1963 Tar Heels are vastly improved. This year only two opponents managed more than two goals in a game, and they were the Heel's first two opponents — Navy and Davidson.

In UNC's last eight games the Heels outscored their opponents 26-9, and suffered only one loss — a heartbreaking 1-2 setback against powerful Maryland. Nine players figured in those 26 goals with Jim Talbot leading the way with six and Pete Blake and Marty Kruming chipping in five each.

The team has picked the co-captains for next year in a banquet held in the Carolina Inn Monday night. Center halfback Park McGinty from Atlanta and Jim Talbot of Bucks County, Pa., will lead the team in 1964.

UNC Freshman Season Over But The Hard Work Continues

By BILL LEE

The freshman football season is over, but every member of the team still goes out to the practice field and works like he were going to get another shot at Virginia.

The players are getting individual attention from the coaches to prepare them for next year's jump to the varsity.

Coach George Barclay, overlooking the Maryland and Virginia losses, claims that this has been the best freshman team at Carolina in ten years. He is optimistic that quite a few of these boys are going to make a big contribution to the varsity in the next few years.

Probably the two most publicized players were the quarterbacks, Danny Talbott and Jeff Beaver, who are in Barclay's opinion, "as fine a pair of quarterbacks that we have ever had; Talbott, with his running, passing, and kicking, and Beaver with his passing.

"Beaver is an excellent passer, and he is improving on his running and faking." Beaver hit on 41 of 75 passes for seven scores, but had nine passes intercepted.

Talbott's rating as the better runner was shown by his 146 yards in 21 carries, topping the team in running. He also handled kickoffs, kicked ten extra points and a field-goal, and punted 18 times for a 35.5 average.

Two guards also drew acclaim for their outstanding line play. They were Joe Fratangelo and Dave Erimias. "They are both very fine varsity prospects," commented Barclay, "Fratangelo has the makings of a great guard. We may move Erimias to tackle next year."

Barclay praised tight ends Bob Powell and Bo Wood. "They're real good end prospects and are good short receivers." Bobby Knott drew praise as a split end with varsity potential. "Knott's not as fast as some, but he's got good moves and can catch real well."

Running halfbacks Jim Fortune, who was plagued by knee injuries, and Leon Fonvielle, second to Talbott in rushing, were quoted as "two good running prospects. Fortune's knee injury is not serious. Both have good speed and good moves, and love to play.

"Bud Phillips at wingback was one of our finest pass receivers and he has real good moves after he makes the catch."

At fullback, Spencer Barrow is expected to make a strong bid for the varsity. Barclay says about him, "Barrow is a big and strong boy and blocked well. He needs to improve on his running."

John Cornelius stood out at center during the season, and Barclay praised his play, "Cornelius is definitely a varsity prospect. He is a real football player, but may not be fast enough to play at center. He can always be moved to a tackle or a guard."

Gets Favorable Report

SL Expected To Act On Expulsion Bill

Phil Baddour, chairman of the Student Legislature Judicial Committee, announced yesterday that the committee had acted favorably on the expulsion penalty requested by the Honor Councils. The issue is expected to be heard by Student Legislature tonight.

Baddour said the committee met Tuesday afternoon and heard testimony on the expulsion issue. Woody Harrison reported that he had polled a number of students and found reaction "generally unfavorable." Jim Riley reported a similar reaction from members of his fraternity, and a representative from the Nurses Dorm said the feelings there were split about even.

Baddour said the point was made that this case is one in which it is difficult to tell how majority of students feel about the issue.

"We felt that the legislators have access to all sides of the question," he said. "They should be able to make their decisions and then explain them to their constituents."

Baddour said his committee had heard testimony from both sides concerning expulsion, and found opinions divided. The committee met in executive session yesterday afternoon to discuss the penalty further.

The penalty must be approved by Student Legislature before it can go into effect. The Men's and Women's Councils have asked for the penalty in order to "make the punishments more consistent and give a wider range of penalties to fit all cases."

Other bills which may come before legislature include the bill to abolish the student judiciary system, and a number of appropriations for campus and student government organizations.

The bill to abolish the student judiciary was introduced after the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline had voted to remove students from the Student-Faculty Judicial Review Board. It was introduced by Hugo Spechar, who then resigned from the body.

Tonight's meeting will be the final session of the 35th Assembly. The 36th Assembly will convene the first Thursday after Thanksgiving vacation, and any bill not acted upon after tonight must be reintroduced and face the legislative process again.

"I hope that the students of this campus will avail themselves the opportunity to visit the student legislature," said Speaker Bob Spearman yesterday. "SL handles all the student fees, and everyone should watch the group in action."

PLANETARIUM HAS ARTIST

The Morehead Planetarium has acquired a staff artist, its first student artist since it opened in 1949.

Philip Whitley, a UNC sophomore art major, guitar player and skin diver, has taken the Planetarium position and has already demonstrated his skill by creating striking astronomical exhibits for the Planetarium.

REMSBURG AWARDED

Frank Raine Remsburg, a graduate student in the Master of Business Administration (MBA) program at UNC is the recipient of the 1963-64 Cargill, Wilson, and Acree Scholarship, awarded by the advertising agency with offices in Richmond, Va., and Charlotte.

The $500 scholarship is awarded annually to an outstanding student entering the UNC MBA program.

FRESHMAN PRE-REGISTRATION

Challenge

The staff of the Daily Tar Heel challenges the yellow-bellied members of student government to a tag football game on the lawn of Graham Memorial at 4 p.m. Monday.

Each team will field nine members, and the game will consist of two 15 - minute halves. Referees will be announced in the DTH and the winning team will be awarded one typewriter by the losing squad. Cheerleaders for the journalists will be Swivel - Hips Simonds, Fan-Jet Riggs and Give-Em-Hell Hile.

Roundtable

Mayor Sandy McClamroch of Chapel Hill and two other panelists will discuss law and government in relation to desegregation as the second of a three-part series on "Desegregation in a Small Southern Town" tonight at 7 p. m. on WUNC radio, 91.5 on the FM dial.

Dr. Earle Wallace, associate dean of the Graduate School and associate professor of political science is moderator for the three-part program.

Other guests are Professor Daniel H. Pollitt of the Law School and Robert B. Midgette, assistant judge of the Chapel Hill Recorder's Court.

A segment of "Carolina Roundtable," the panelists invite listeners to telephone questions to 942-3172 while the program is on the air.

Need A Job?

Monday, Nov. 25—The Upjohn Co.; American Viscose Division, FMC Corp.; The Kendall Co.-Textile Division; E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Tuesday, November. 26—E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.; Baxter Laboratories, Inc.; Dover Textile Group; Liberty Mutual Insurance Co.

Wednesday, Nov. 27—E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Tuesday, Dec. 3—Cornell University Graduate School of Business and Public Administration; Union Bag-Camp Corp.; United Aircraft Corp. Research Laboratories; United Church for World Ministries; U. S. Army Materiel Command-Biological Laboratories.

Wednesday, Dec. 4—New York University Graduate School of Business Administration; National Security Agency.

Thursday, Dec. 5—General Aniline & Film Corp.

CURED

Citizens United For Racial Equality and Dignity (CURED) will launch a local voter registration campaign at an open meeting Friday night at 8 p.m. in the First Baptist Church on Roberson St.

Professor Donald R. Matthews of the Political Science Department will speak on "Negro Voter Registration in the South."

Student Nite Is Successful

By SOT BOBSAM

The Carolina Playmaker's second Student Night was a success. All seats were taken Tuesday night when "Long Day's Journey Into Night" opened in the Playmakers Theatre.

Mr. John W. Parker, Playmakers' business manager, announced that Student Night performances will be held for the remaining three plays this season.

Ticket sales for this play had a very slow start, but were heavy during the last two days. The last forty-five tickets were sold at the box office before curtain time.

Ninety-six season tickets were bought, and only 234 tickets will be on sale for each of the remaining Student Nights at $1.00 each. Advantages for theatre-going students will probably be increased next year.

"It is thrilling to see so many more students coming to the plays, both on Student Night and on other nights," said Parker.

Frosh Committee Interviews Set

Interviews for the Freshman Class cabinet will be held today and Friday in Roland Parker 2 of GM from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m.

Chairmen will be selected for the Finance, Publicity, Talent Show and Social Committees of the freshman class. Several sub-committees will also function under each committee. All interested freshmen are urged to apply for cabinet positions.

Jim Brame, freshman president, announced yesterday that a calendar of activities for the class is currently being drawn up by the class officers. Among the scheduled projects is a Merchant's Sale during the first week of December, when freshmen will work as salesmen with their commissions going to the class treasury.

UNC PROF HELPS MAINE

UNC professor has developed a set of welfare work concepts which have been adopted for use by ministers, student deans, probation officers, medical teams, the U.S. Agricultural Service, and the Maine Department of Health and Welfare.

For the past five years Dr. Alan Keith-Lucas, Alumni Professor of Social Work at UNC, has headed a project sponsored by the Maine Welfare Department to upgrade the skills of Maine's welfare workers. His teaching methods are so effective that courses can be taught in short periods of time without loosing their effectiveness.

The New Christy Minstrels

SINGING AND SWINGING — The New Christy Minstrels will twang and swing Saturday night at the fall German's Concert in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. The group, composed of eight men and two women will show how to swing out with a fiery combination of the charm of the Norman Luboff Choir, the Weavers and the Kingston Trio all rolled into one record-hot group. The New Christies are patterned after the original Christy Minstrels who started in 1842. They are following the same tradition in an effort to make folk music "more fun than ever."

Voter Registration Fund Drive Is Initiated By SPU

A fund-raising campaign to aid Negro voter registration in Danville, Va. was launched here yesterday by the campus chapter of the Student Peace Union.

The money will be used to pay the $4.76 poll tax needed to register a voter in Danville and to finance projects by the Danville Christian Progressive Association (DCPA), according to Rick Doble of the SPU.

Doble indicated the SPU would be soliciting contributions this week at its headquarters in the Y building and that contributions could be mailed directly to the DCPA, 220 N. Union St., Danville.

The DCPA, which conducted anti-segregation protests in Danville this summer, is trying to register at least 1000 additional Negro voters by the Dec. 5 deadline, Doble said.

He added that the civil rights groups there recently began a new program, "Operation Dialogue," to improve relations between Negro and white communities. In the program, white and Negro members of integration groups visit door-to-door in Danville to establish a dialogue between communities.

Other campus organizations are expected to support the fund-raising projects, Doble said.

It's 'Beat Dook' Parade Time Again

Start with tons of Kleenex, yards of chicken wire, assorted paint and crepe paper. Add beautiful girls, a really swingin' band, and a frenzied anti-Dook atmosphere.

Now put 'em all together. What have you got?

If you said the "Beat Dook" Parade, you were right. The annual event kicks off tomorrow at 3 p.m., sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity. It will feature the "Beat Dook" Queen and float competition among fraternities, sororities, and dorms.

Tommy Harris, parade chairman, said yesterday the queen will be chosen from five finalists selected Thursday night. They include Joanna Houston, Jaene Yeager, Nancy Pruitt, Susan High, and Joye Cain.

Harris said 31 floats have been entered, including 21 by fraternities and sororities and 10 by dormitories.

The Lincoln High School band, a feature for many years, will groups from the Air Force and return, along with marching Navy ROTC units.

spect the floats at 9 a.m. Friday and again at 2:30 to make sure all entries are acceptable for public display. The inspection was ordered after last year's parade in which several floats brought widespread protests.

FOOTBALL MARCH

Head cheerleader Tom Gruehn announces a march to UNC's football field this afternoon at 4:30.

One group will leave from Craige and Ehringhaus, another from Graham Memorial, both marching down to the field which is located on the level below Fetzer Field and behind Parker and Teague dormitories.

The pep marchers will surround the team as it goes about its regular afternoon workout. Several sororities have promised to have girls there at that time.

Weekend "Beat Dook" spirit will continue on Friday with the "Beat Dook" Parade in the afternoon. Also, the DTH Sports Staff and the cheerleaders have announced that a telegram will be sent to the Wake Forest football team Friday night, to let the Deacons know they have UNC's full support in their game against N. C. State Friday night.

A gigantic pep rally, featuring a fireworks display, will blow the lid off the whole thing—Friday night at Fetzer Field.

Speaker Ban Is Unconstitutional, Says GOP Sen.

By SUSIE LEWIS

GOP State Sen. Charles Strong of Guilford County said Tuesday night the spirit, procedure and enforcement of the Speaker Ban Law is un-American and the Little Federal Plan is an effrontery to intelligent people.

Senator Strong told the UNC Young Republican Club that the Gag Law indicates people think they can avoid facing their problems if they outlaw the persons whom they do not approve of.

"I am not concerned with the direct application of the law but of the principle behind it and how it was passed.

"I was in the House on the afternoon the bill was passed. I was fraternizing with Thad Eure, who is always in a back corner of the room. Eure was very much aware of this bill, although it was in the waning hours of the session and everyone was tired and worried about the bills which had not been considered. There were more than 100 still pending in the House and some were very pertinent.

"Then this bill was introduced, and without being studied by a committee, it was passed with virtually no comment."

Senator Strong described it as the kind of bill which appeals to the emotions and can be passed under suspension of rules with no evaluation.

"The implication was given that if you were against this bill you were not quite all true blue.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Lady Godiva On A Motor Scooter?

CHINGFORD, England (UPI)—A modern Lady Godiva—a nude girl riding a motor scooter—has started a storm here.

The nude, wearing only a crash helmet, has been suggested as a poster for a council road safety campaign aimed at young people. It carries the slogan:

"But always wear a helmet."

Road safety officers are for it but the town's clergymen are against it.

"Disgusting," said the Rev. Harold Goldsack, a Methodist.

"The slogan seems to suggest that they can do what they like provided they wear a crash helmet."

But Charles P. Henderson, the town's chief road safety officer, said "let's face it—we are living in the age of the nude. If the body beautiful will help to save lives, why shouldn't we do this in road safety?"

Quiet Returns To Venezuela

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI)—Government forces acting on "get-tough" orders from President Romulo Betancourt appeared Wednesday to have smashed terrorist attempts to strong-arm Venezuela into a general strike.

Comparative quiet returned to Caracas Wednesday after Tuesday's terrorism, the most widespread for one day since the pro-Castro underground declared war on Betancourt's pro - Western democratic government nearly two years ago.

Khrushchev Told To Rock In Time

MOSCOW (UPI)—Danish Foreign Minister Per Haekkerup presented Premier Nikita Khrushchev with a rocking chair Wednesday and said he hoped the Soviet leader would rock in the "same rhythm" as President Kennedy.

A T&T To Give Another Bonus

NEW YORK (UPI)—The American Telephone and Telegraph Co. electrified the business community Wednesday by promising stockholders a bulging package that included a dividend boost, a two-for-one stock split and a large new offering of stock.

The nation's largest corporate entity told its more than two million stockholders they will have their quarterly dividend rate boosted from 90 cents a share to $1 a share next April, a stock split next June.

Congolese Arrest 2 Soviet Diplomats

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (UPI)—Congolese state security police arrested two Soviet diplomats, beat them, tore the shirt off of one of them and seized "compromising documents," it was disclosed Wednesday.

There were strong government hints the "compromising documents" involved a plot to overthrow the central Congolese government.

Queen Elizabeth Said Threatened

LONDON (UPI)—London police today charged a man with writing a letter threatening to kill Queen Elizabeth.

George William Mead, a 40-year-old clerk, appeared at the Mansion House Court today, and was ordered held in custody until Nov. 28.

He was charged with "uttering a letter" threatening to kill the queen.

Mead was picked up by detectives after he had spoken with a clergyman at historic St. Paul's Cathedral.

Lenoir Hall: Campus Center

By MARGARET LANEY

Busy . . . vibrating . . . cosmopolitan is Lenoir Hall, the campus dining center. Here, three times daily UNC students gather at mealtime.

The atmosphere of Lenoir is all its very own. Collegiate informality sets the mood for students who represent a wide range of interests.

"I like to eat in the main dining room so I can see everybody," says Jim Hutchens, a junior in education.

"Lenoir is just great!" according to Carol Brown, a bacteriology major. "The people are interesting, and the prices are grand for students."

Student employee Harold Stevens called the atmosphere "down-to-earth." "Here," he said, "You can feel right at home and use the manners you want to—that is—if Otelia isn't looking."

The staff members at Lenoir likewise find the atmosphere stimulating.

"It i sa pleasure to work here, because the students are nice to get along with," line-worker Nellie Crocker of Chapel Hill said. "I look forward each morning to getting up and coming to work." She has served at Lenoir for 21 years, the hall's longest employment record.

But, away from the changing scene of people is a phase of Lenoir Hall that is seldom thought about.

This is the drama of management and kitchen production.

Prillaman has been at Lenoir for 15 years. He bases his philosophy of food service on student benefit. "Our aim is to give students good wholesome food in sizeable amounts at the lowest possible prices; and, at the same time, to make enough profit to reinvest in their best interest."

Vice-president of the National Association of College and University Food Service, Prillaman calls the "Student Special" the heart of cafeteria operation.

"Outside of the University, this 40-cent special is a freak," he said. "We are not subsidized by either North Carolina funds or federal surplus; and yet, we have been able to maintain this complete meal at its 1951 price in the face of rising costs of labor and raw food materials.

"I feel that this special is helping to keep many students in school by giving them basic food for a dollar per day."

Prillaman said that two-thirds of the 14,000 meals served daily are the Special. Two favorites are Canadian bacon with applesauce and liver with onions.

Lenoir Hall has 225 employees, 150 regular and 75 students. The full-time workers spend approximately 1,200 manhours daily in food preparation.

This work centers itself in the 120-by-50 foot kitchen where vegetables are cooked in 80 gallon steam kettles.

The electrical appliances are large, modern, and efficient. Among the newer items is a pie crust machine.

"One of the reasons we haven't had to turn to mixes is our pie crust machine," Prillaman said. "I can turn out finished pie crust, which has hardly been handled, in minutes."

All pies, cakes and rolls are baked in the kitchen from Lenoir's own recipes.

The 42 basic menus served in Lenoir were developed through a scientific study in 1948. At that time every imaginable food was offered in the line and student response was recorded.

At any given breakfast 300 dozen eggs, 120 lbs. bacon, 25 lbs. oatmeal, and 50 gallons of orange juice may be consumed.

Lunch and dinner menus feature five entrees, six to eight vegetables, 20 different salads, and 12 different desserts.

Prillaman said that business is heaviest at the lunch meal and that weekend figures are off considerably.

Lenoir Hall will be spotlighted in an upcoming edition of a national industrial magazine, Inplant Food Management.

'But Everyone Already Knew That'

Of all the mumblings heard in the wake of our recent series on fraternity and sorority discriminatory clauses, the bulk has come from members of fraternities and sororities. Their consistent opinion has been that the stories were unnecessary. The typical argument runs, "Everybody already knew that the fraternities and sororities discriminated, so what good did it do to run the fact on the front page?"

In the first place, we have serious doubts as to whether "everybody" knew, since the Inter-Fraternity Council President last year didn't know. He went so far as to tell the whole Orientation class that only one fraternity on this campus had a restrictive clause. It turns out he missed the count by at least 10.

But the claim that Greek discriminatory policies are well known and therefore don't need to be publicized, aside from being incorrect, shows a basic contradiction. If these are the standards of admission they set, and they are proud of these standards, then it seems they should be delighted to see them printed on the front page of the DTH. Instead, the fraternities mutter weak and embarrassed defenses of their right to discriminate.

But let's examine that right which they claim as inalienable. Should a Jew or a Negro pay taxes in North Carolina to help support a university in which discrimination is practiced? We aren't saying that the fraternities get money from the University, but the University does regulate and grant recognition to them. So the claim of private social organization, with all the rights of discrimination attendant on it, is not a valid argument.

This argument does, however, bring us to the question of the University's position in the matter. The current administration policy is that no fraternity or sorority may establish a chapter on this campus if it has a discriminatory membership clause. This is fine, but what of the eleven houses already have these clauses? If the University says that these clauses are bad, and not in the best interest of the campus, as is certainly implicit in the rule, is it not then a compromise with morality to allow this discrimination to exist as it does now? This would certainly seem to be the case.

Then, too, we are often subjected to the rather strange argument from house members that fraternities and sororities are discriminatory by nature, and while discrimination may not be a good thing, it is the basis of the whole system. We agree with every point in that apologia. But what does it say? It tells us to accept something which is evil as the cornerstone of an institution, and then accept the institution as something good. The logic of this plea escapes us.

But it brings to light another point which is even more important. Fraternities and sororities don't just discriminate against Jews or Negroes, they discriminate against everybody. So we arrive at another interesting question: Should a white protestant American pay taxes to support an institution which officially sanctions a system which might discriminate against his son or daughter on the basis of how he or she looks, speaks and dresses?

Many people are not bothered by a fraternity or sorority rejection, but many are cruelly hurt by the rejection. And who are these people who are hurt? In most cases they are the ones who most need the companionship and sense of belonging a fraternity or sorority can offer. They are dependent on this sort of attachment for their total assimilation into the University Community, and rejection is not something they take lightly.

So what is to be done?

Abolition of the whole fraternity-sorority system is often suggested, but arguments against this action are present on many of the campuses across the nation. At Brown, Amherst, Dartmouth and many more, the system is a vital and constructive force in the whole social pattern. Fraternities are open to anyone who wishes to join. While some may not get their first choice, all may join. While the homogeneity of the group may suffer slightly, the crippling insularity is also gone, and no one is hurt by rejection.

Should the University step in and open the fraternities and sororities up? Such action is obviously within its jurisdiction, and would get our administrators out of the position of allowing something to exist which they have ruled is wrong.

Another technique used to excellent effect on many campuses is a referendum of the student body. Usually the students get three choices: (1) Leave the system as it is, (2) Do away with discriminatory clauses and 'gentlemen's agreements,' (3) Open the system to anyone who wishes to join.

In all cases this referendum has been used, the administration has carried out the mandate of the student body.

This referendum idea seems to us to be the fairest and most representative method. The Student Legislature could authorize such a referendum to be presented to the student body in the Spring elections or could call a special election for that purpose.

The results would dictate whether the fraternity system is to become a truly effective community force, as it is elsewhere or whether it is to remain the artificial, ingrown order which currently prevails at Carolina.

Needed: Another WUNC-WCHL Hook-Up

An issue of great significance to Chapel Hill—desegregation—currently is being aired over WUNC Radio, but unfortunately the three-part series doesn't seem to have stimulated much interest.

This is undoubtedly because WUNC Radio is an FM station, and most people don't even own or have easy access to FM receivers.

In the interest of giving this series the audience it deserves, we suggest that the station manager check with Chapel Hill's AM radio station, WCHL, and see about getting it to cooperate in airing the remaining two parts of the show.

Tonight's show and the final one two weeks from now could be taped by WUNC Radio, then re-played over WCHL at that station's programming convenience. In addition, if the first show was taped, it too should be offered for re-broadcast over WCHL.

This would not be the first time that the two stations have worked together for a common end, and we think this would be a fine way for both stations to continue their traditions of public service.

This past summer was dramatic proof that Chapel Hill's desegregation problems are far from over, and the frank comments offered by the participants of WUNC's series could make a positive contribution to settling the problem. But those comments must be heard by the people of Chapel Hill for them to do any good.

"He Says That After The Bloodletting He Can Bring Us Peace"

Book Review

A Harvest Of Paperbacks

By STEVE DENNIS

One of the major American paperback lines, Dell, has come out with a very competent and stimulating list of new titles for this fall. Some of these are the inevitable reprints, now made available to a larger audience at a reduced price, but a few are originals, members of a new genre which the phenomenon of the paperback seems to be encouraging. More and more books are now being printed only in a paperback version.

A good idea is the combination of all three parts to Shakespeare's Henry VI into one portable volume. This will be useful for readers interested in tracing the developing of ideas in the different parts of this historical trilogy. (95c).

For the Tolstoy fan to whom the great tomes of the master are at times forboding, there is now a Dell collection of six short stories and novels, including The Death of Ivan Ilyich and The Kreutzer Sonata along with four other lesser - known selections. (75c).

Reprints of T. H. White's The Sword In The Stone and Katherine Anne Porter's The Leaning Tower have also been brought out by Dell. White's novel (50c) about Arthurian England is now being made into a movie by Walt Disney, and the Porter collection has been a minor American classic for many years now. (50c).

An almost excellent collection of short plays by ten Americans ranging from Sherwood Anderson to Gore Vidal is also in the new Dell line. Unfortunately, most of the selections, with the exception of Wilder's The Happy Journey To Trenton and Camden, are minor. Space limitations dictated this unhappy fact, but it is still regrettable. (60c).

A Dell original is The New Handbook of Modern Birth Control, by Dr. Paula Seiler. A straightforward, simple explanation of its subject, this book also considers religious and moral problems connected with birth control. The principal methods of birth control available today are explained and evaluated. (50c).

Elizabeth Drew, whose Poetry: A Modern Guide To Its Understanding and Enjoyment has been a choice item in the Dell list now for several years, has just completed a work which is as skilufully and perceptively written as its predecessor. It is entitled The Novel: A Modern Guide To Fifteen English Masterpieces. Discussed are Moll Flanders, Clarissa, Tom Jones, Lord Jim, Vanity Fair, Emma, The Mill on The Floss, Tristram Shandy, Far from the Madding Crowd, Wuthering Heights, A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, Women in Love, The Portrait of a Lady, To The Lighthouse and Great Expectations. This is obviously a very creditable sampling of over two hundred years of English fiction to be considered in a one-volume paperback. (60c).

Miss Drew makes her critical intent plain at the outset: "All kinds of creative artists flourish in the field of literature, but the only kind of criticism of literature which is of any value is that which makes us want to go and read or reread the books it discusses. This collection of essays is written in the hope that it will do that."

This list seems to suffer from the usual faults found in paperbacks lines, such as overly sensational covers, but the books are at least reputable and cheap. This one economic consideration alone has made the paperback a force to be reckoned with in all the groves of Academe.

NEW HAVEN—Yale Professor Frederick C. Barghoorn, telling newsmen of his arrest on spy charges:

"Behavior which we regard as completely innocent becomes an object of police suspicion . . . arrest, investigation and indictment on espionage charges is a deeply disturbing experience. It is true any place, but different in the Soviet Union, where law is the instrument of the state, not the individual.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Spectator

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Enclosed pix of unidentified student/friend/alumnus (?) taken Saturday (16) during Miami game. Most loyal and enthusiastic ever seen—bowed three times to the west at every great N. C. play, face mirrored every emotion that the play in progress deserved and fairly leapt out of the stands at a touchdown. The jacket under his arm was a brilliant red color which made his actions much more colorful until he got warmed up and took it off.

We nominate him for the UNC Spectator of the Week.

Government For All The People Will Not Perish

By THE DAILY KANSAN

One-hundred years ago next Tuesday, Abraham Lincoln dedicated a battlefield cemetery at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, and set a standard for American belief which has so gained in stature that now, a century later, it is probably better known and more beloved than even our Declaration of Independence itself. There is good reason for this durability.

Thousands of men had already given their lives in battle, and similar fields would become burial grounds in the weeks and months before the Civil War would end.

These men were fighting for what they believed was right, not only for the solidarity of the Union, but also for the "proposition that all men are created equal." They were simple, straight-forward beliefs, ennobled that day by an equally honest, heartfelt respect, laced with the confidence that "these dead shall not have died in vain."

Who does not recall the words: "The world will little note nor long remember what we say here," but how many could complete the sentence to state what we were to recall instead: "but it can never forget what they did here."

What they were fighting about was the right of free men to be free.

That year, 1863, marked the application of the Emancipation Proclamation, freeing all the slaves. It was an instance in which we had neither intended nor succeeded in beating the Russians to an opportunity. On the day before Lincoln was inaugurated, the czar's official decree was published setting all serfs free. Nor was Lincoln primarily concerned with the slaves as individuals.

In answering Horace Greeley's plea of freedom for the Negroes, Lincoln said, "What I do about slavery, and the colored race, I do because I believe it helps to save the Union."

December of 1865 saw the ratification of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution, declaring that neither "slavery nor involuntary servitude . . .shall exist within the United States.

At the time, William Lloyd Garrison's Boston Liberator proclaimed editorially that the amendment was the "final crowning and completion of the labors of the American abolitionists." But, in the same breath, the article added: "We are now to concentrate the whole power of American law, justice, conscience, sense of consistency and duty, and bring all to bear on the work of making the freedmen in every sense a free man and citizen."

Legally, slavery was abolished. But Abraham Lincoln, assassinated eight months earlier, did not know of it. The editorial might as well have been written yesterday.

The first "Civil Rights" law was passed by Congress in March of 1866, guaranteeing the Negroes the rights and corresponding duties of citizenship. President Johnson vetoed this legislation on the basis that it overcompensated for the Negro and discriminated against the whites, but Congress overrode the veto.

Anticipating an inevitable attack on the constitutionality of the Civil Rights Act of 1866, a set of resolutions was formulated which ultimately became the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. This amendment required the states to apply equal protection of the laws to all citizens, and has been construed to mean that a state cannot make unreasonable distinctions between different persons as to their rights and privileges.

For example, the Supreme Court has held that a state cannot arbitrarily deny some of its citizens the right to vote or to serve on juries. Nevertheless, the state remains free to make reasonable classifications. Thus, the Supreme Court has held that, under certain circumstances, a state may grant voting rights to the literate, but deny them to the illiterate.

The fifteenth amendment is more explicit: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

But over the years it has become apparent that laws aren't what make the final difference. Even as far back as 1835, Alexis de Tocqueville suggested that freedom for the Negro intensified rather than alleviated the prejudice on the part of the whites. Slavery might recede, said Tocqueville, "but the prejudice to which it has given birth is immovable."

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights pointed to a similar situation in noting that "the presence of qualified Negroes in ever increasing numbers often only heightened the unwillingness of many Americans to grant the Negro that equality to which the law said he was entitled, and which the Negro increasingly asserted he deserved."

This tendency was reflected in the recent testimony of Ralph E. Odum, the Assistant Attorney General of Florida, before a Senate committee studying voting rights. Said Odum, "We are fearful that if Congress should enact the bills you are considering here, the practical result will be a regressive trend in Negro registration. The reason for this is obvious: The exertion of outside pressure and coercion by the Central Government in local matters is regarded as a usurpation of authority which stimulates resentment rather than understanding, tolerance, and racial cooperation."

Odum indicated the people of Florida would prefer to let discrimination end in its own good time. Said he, this "may be a longer road than some might like, but we believe it to be the best and most effective road leading to ultimate dignity, mutual respect, and equal opportunity for all our people."

The question has been, of course, whether the Negro will wait much longer. The Reverend Martin Luther King Jr., says no: "We have waited for more than 340 years for our constitutional and God-given rights. The nations of Asia and Africa are moving with jet-like speed toward gaining political independence, but we still creep at horse-and-buggy pace toward gaining a cup of coffee at a lunch counter."

President Kennedy, in a recent address to the United Nations General Assembly, took account of this when he expressed his regret that some U.N. delegates have been discriminated against in this country. He made it clear the situation would not persist if he could help it.

"I ask you to believe me when I tell you," said Kennedy in apologizing, "that this is not the wish of most Americans — that we share your regret and resentment and that we intend to end sch practices for all time to come, not only for our visitors but for our own citizens as well."

And, speaking to the American people, the President has made it clear he feels the best solution "lies not in what we say today, but in what we do in the days and months ahead to complete the work begun by Abraham Lincoln. 'In giving freedom to the slaves,' President Lincoln said, 'we assure freedom to the free.' In giving rights to others which belong to them, we give rights to ourselves and to our country."

Obviously, legislation, discussion, and even the most determined efforts of those who have been denied their rights have not been, nor will be enough to span the gap between white and black. Then, is there an answer?

We must legislate, each of us, in our own minds, the laws of human brotherhood. We must stand up in our own consciences and be counted among those willing to discard the shabby mask of social aloofness and come face to face with reality—that human dignity exists as much beneath black skin as white. We must stand behind Arnold Toynbee's reminder that "without freedom, men would no longer be human."

And, thinking back over the years to Gettysburg, we must accept with renewed courage the challenge put forth by Abraham Lincoln—one man who took a stand and, without realizing the timelessness of his actions, gave to future generations the charge we remember today:

"It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

— Senator Strong Attacks Speaker Ban —

I am a member of the American Legion, I was in the Navy for two and a half years, and I then served as a Chaplain in the Army, so I consider myself as good as proponents of the bill. Some people have demonstrated their patriotism without voting for the bill.

"This bill was outside the process of good procedure because it was rammed through the House and then reported immediately to the Senate where again it was not referred to a committee. It was rammed through the Senate — and rammed is the right word."

Thirteen senators, including Senator Strong, signed and filed a protest in the Senate Journal that day, protesting the content of the bill and the manner in which it was passed.

"The content of the law is subject to debate. The trouble is that people do not sit down and think through these things. They think with their emotions and not their minds. I am personally convinced that the law is unconstitutional, but this can only be established with a test case. I would like to see it tested, but it might have to be in a federal court.

"Because freedom of speech and freedom of assembly are fundamental to our concept of freedom, it becomes a serious threat to freedom when a legislature can say that because someone has taken the Fifth Amendment they are guilty by inference.

"I question the Legislature's right to say who shall have or not have the right to speak, or its right to tell the administration of a state college who it may invite to speak."

Senator Strong said he believes truth is the strongest weapon of a democracy.

"If we do not meet this challenge to our principles head-on then we will drive the subversive action underground. We cannot do away with sin by failing to recognize it.

"To deny anyone Constitutional rights such as the Fifth Amendment is to declare many people guilty by association. This makes it hard for people to change their minds, yet we must realize that the greatest advocates of freedom are those who have been won to it from other beliefs.

"I personally hope the law will be repealed, but it must have a strong educational and social background. It would be political suicide to sponsor a repeal in the Legislature without strong support because the only way to be effective in the Legislature is to have support.

"If we cower before the Legislature, the Governor, or the President and feel that we do not have the right to express ourselves, then we have lost our freedom.

"This law does not eliminate the Communist threat. Instead it makes Communism more attractive by putting it in a haze of the mysterious. It would be better to have Communism openly debated rather than carried on in secret meetings."

Speaking of the Little Federal Plan, Senator Strong said it was "neither little nor federal."

He described the bill as "a clever plan to dissipate Republican strength." He did not vote on it at all because there were enough legislative votes to pass it.

"If the amendment passes, the Senate membership will be increased to 70 and the House will be decreased to 100. Each county will have one representative. A majority of 51 votes could come from counties representing only 19 per cent of the population.

"This bill is a tool of gerrymandering from its own definition. The General Assembly does not have to make the Senate districts as close as possible in population, so a senator could represent from 50,000 to 80,000 people.

"The Grange is making this a rural vs. big city fight. The problem centers around the Rural Electrification Association. REA is no longer rural, but is competing with private, tax-paying companies and yet it pays a minimum of taxes. The point is if the Little Federal Plan passes it will guarantee control of the General Assembly to REA areas.

"We must make people see that freedom can be eroded—they are no longer on fire about freedom, and as a result the American way of life will soon begin to suffer from dry-rot, just as a tree."

"If we measure up to our opportunities we will see the greatest total Republican vote ever cast in this state. If Lake is the candidate we can elect a Republican governor, and even if Preyer is the candidate, we have a good chance."

In a brief question and answer session, Senator Strong said he favors a Statewide liquor referendum.

"If North Carolina is going to be in the liquor business, it should be in it. We spend $85 million a year to buy alcohol outside of North Carolina. The State's total intake is less than $22 million. Let's either get in the business or out of it."

NO ALARMS IN DORMS

Business Manager J. Arthur Branch said yesterday that fire alarm systems are not required in dormitories.

"All our building plans go to the State Fire Office," he said. "They recommend fire extinguishers but never an alarm system."

Branch explained that fire alarms were set off by heat. "Most of our dorms are fireproof, except for the furniture or bedclothing. A fire in a room would not be detected by an alarm unless the heat was intense."

Fire extinguishers are recharged regularly, he said, and police patrolling the campus are supposed to watch for fires or evidence of fires. The State Insurance Department inspects campus buildings for fire hazards.

Officials at the Fire Department said there was no regulation requiring fire alarms in dormitories.

Lacey, Willard, Hanburger Named To All-ACC

End Bob Lacey, a unanimous choice, running back Ken Willard and center Chris Hanburger were the Tar Heels chosen for the number one squad among a "dream team" of 32 named yesterday.

Other unanimous selections were quarterback Dick Shiner of Maryland, running back Jay Wilkinson of Duke, tackle Bert Wilder of North Carolina State and guard Billy Weaver of Clemson.

Six of the eight ACC schools were represented on the first eleven. Every school but South Carolina and Wake Forest had a man on the top team, and all but Wake placed as many as two men on the squad.

Clemson claimed the most spots with seven while UNC and NC State had six apiece and Duke and Maryland four each.

The team line averages 212 pounds while the backfield comes out at 193 apiece. Clemson's Jack Aaron is the DTH's heaviest at 234 while wingback Darryl Hill of Maryland is the lightest member at 165.

Shiner and Wilkinson in the backfield appeared to be easy choices for the DTH panel. The 6-0 Maryland signal-caller, playing with a relatively weak Maryland team this year, has been a standout all season long.

A sure choice for the pros, Shiner has had the scouts' eyes on him ever since he started throwing at the College Park campus.

Noted for his pin-point passing, Shiner, with one game remaining, has completed 102 of 209 passes for 1,084 yards and nine TDs. He leads the league in this department and is second in total offense with 1,092 yards, 67 behind UNC's own Junior Edge.

Wilkinson, probably the most explosive perfromer to hit the ACC in years, has been a jack-of-all-trades for the Blue Devils while leading the conference in rushing most of the year.

He has been Duke's chief runner, punt return man and kick-off return man, and is among the country's top five scorers with 66 total so far this season. Wilkinson is also a sure bet to make some post-season All - American teams.

The other two backfield posts were quite a chore for the DTH staff. The final choice of UNC's Willard and Maryland's Hill leaves out Pat Crain of Clemson with some misgivings.

Willard, the big pile driver who has been Carolina's meal ticket for the past two years, took over the league rushing lead from Wilkinson with his 112-yard day against Miami last Saturday.

Hill, a Negro transfer from the Naval Academy, has been Shiner's main passing target and was shifted from his regular end position to the flanker back spot on the DTH team solely because of his ability as a receiver. He is the conference's leading pass catcher, and has maintained the advantage much of the fall over such fine terminals as Lacey and Stan Crisson of Duke.

The latter two were named to the two end positions, Lacey unanimously, Crisson by a close count over State's Don Montgomery .

Lacey has established two new league career records for a flanker this year—94 catches and 1,278 yards. Crisson has caught 92 in the race down to the wire for the record.

The two tackle positions are filled by men who anchored their defensive lines and performed respectfully on offense as well—State's Wilder and Aaron of Clemson.

The big Wolfpack lineman was State's man-on-the-spot in important tackling situations, and his absence from the UNC game (due to his already having played against the Tar Heels three times) definitely hurt State's defensive performance.

After being shifted from guard last year, the Tigers' Aaron has been the main tackling cog of Clemson's best-in-the-league defensive wall. He just beat out Duke's Chuck Walker for the first team spot.

Guard was, after the selection of Clemson's Weaver, another tough position to pick. Turnley Todd, Virginia's lone representative on the number one 11, edged Tracy Childers, also of Clemson, for the remaining place.

Weaver, possibly the best offensive blocker in the conference, played a right linebacker spot in the Tigers' 5-4 defense and was outstanding there.

Todd, the Cavalier captain, played both center and guard this season and made half the Virginia tackles in many games.

Hanburger, noted by Coach Jim Hickey this week as "the best offensive blocker I've had since I came here," was shifted from end this year and has served as the team leader on the first unit, as well as being its leading tackler.

Besides its three first-team members, Carolina had one second-team man (tackler Cole Kortner) and two honorable mention nominees (quarterback Junior Edge and running back Eddie Kesler).

UNC Basketball Gallery

Billy Cunningham

Junior, 6-5 218 from Brooklyn, N. Y. The big gun at center for the Tar Heels last year when he scored 22.7 points per game and set a school record of 339 rebounds. Field goal percentage: 48.7. Free throw percentage: 61.8.

Probably the most exciting and colorful collegiate basketball player in America today, Cunningham was unanimous All-ACC last year. Long arms, tremendous leg spring make him unusually good rebounder, defensive player and shooter around basket. His effortless moves, especially on gliding jumpers where he hangs in the air. Uncanny timing brought him 16.1 rebounds a game and point highs of 33 (Virginia, Maryland), 32 (Wake Forest) and 31 (Duke).

Bill Brown

Junior, 6-2, 172 from Durham, N. C. Saw action as reserve guard last year when he appeared in eight games and scored four points. Expected to be used more this season as backcourt insurance for Cooke and Shaffer.

After starring for three years at Durham High School, Brown as freshman, averaged 12.3 points, hit amazing 53.6 per cent from outside. Good shooter and consistent performer, especially around boards where he is exceptionally tough for size. A low-70s shooter on the golf course, he needs more game experience before proof of value can be known. Two brothers, Bob and Mike, graduate from UNC this year.

Bauer Names Aides

BALTIMORE, Md. (UPI) — New Baltimore Oriole Manager Hank Bauer Wednesday completed three-fourths of his coaching staff with the appointment of ex-Yankee teammates Gene Woodling and Billy Hunter and says he is now looking for a catcher as a bullpen coach.

Bauer said he had talked to several people about the job but as yet had made no decision.

"We should have something final in about a week," he said.

Harry Brecheen is the other coach. Bauer increased the Oriole coaching staff from three to four and intends to have Brecheen, the pitching coach, in the dugout with him during the games. Brecheen had served in the bullpen under 1963 Manager Billy Hitchcock.

The newly-appointed manager said Woodling would serve as first base coach and Hunter as third base coach, a position held down by Bauer last year.

Bauer said Hunter, a former second baseman and shortstop, would also help in giving instructions in base running and infield play.

Phi Delts Win Title Over Poobah, 24-7

By AL KAPLAN

Phi Delta Theta scored early and held the lead to the end as they whipped the Alexander Poobahs 24-7, in the All-Campus football Final, Wednesday.

The Phi Delts made two first half interceptions pay off. Just after the opening kickoff, Phi Delt intercepted a Poobah pass deep in its own territory. Three plays later Phi Delt scored, the TD coming on a pass to end O. H. Parrish. The PAT failed.

The Poobahs received the kickoff and were again deep in their own territory. The same pattern prevailed. Phi Delt picked off another pass and added six more points, with Holden Thompson making the tally.

With the score 12-0, the Poobahs started to move. Alexander scored their TD on quite an unusual play. Quarterback Jim Hardison lofted a high pass into the end zone. Monty Harrel out jumped two Phi Delt defenders and tapped the pigskin to center Danny Whiseit, good for a touchdown. Bob Cornwell caught a Hardison pass for the extra point.

The Delts had control for the rest of the way and scored once more before the half ended, Erky Duff getting the tally. The PAT failed and the Delts led 18-7 at the half.

During the second half, the Poobahs had three good chances to score. Twice they had the ball inside the five yard line, but failed to make headway.

The only scoring in the second half came when Duff scored his second TD by running the ball about forty yards. The PAT was no good, the fourth the Delts missed yesterday.

Phi Delts offense was baffling the Poobahs. The Delts usually worked double and triple reverses and kept the ball moving very well on short passes.

The Delts also put on an effective rush. Numerous times quarterback Hardison had his passes batted down before the line of scrimmage.

Carl Grossman, of the Poobahs, played an excellent offensive game. During the first helf Grossman caught three passes and helped set up Alexander's lone tally.

For Phi Delt, again the mainstays on offense were Parrish and Duff, who scored three of Phi Delt's four TDs. This game was the fourth time this year Duff has scored two TDs in one game.

The Team of West Cobb-1 and Aycock defeated East Cobb-2 and Chi Psi two straight to win the Co-Rec Volleyball Championship, Monday.

In Speech To Bar Association

Aycock Tells Lawyers: 'Bomb The Ban'

By JOEL BULKLEY

Chancellor William B. Aycock Thursday night called on North Carolina lawyers to remove "the false sense of security" generated by the controversial state Speaker Ban law.

Speaking as a lawyer, he challenged the belief that the so-called Gag Law was a remedy to any supposed evil in Chapel Hill saying, "if there is an evil, be assured that this legislation is highly ineffective in meeting it. It is not good to deceive our people into a false sense of security by extolling a remedy which is no remedy at all."

Aycock's remarks came in an address to a meeting of the Greensboro Bar Assn. last night in Greensboro.

He said the University "has produced as a student the founder of the John Birch Society and, also as a student a one-time leader of the Communist Party in North Carolina . . . If we were in the business of producing John Birchers, or Communists or Progressive Labor Party members, we have failed. For each one of these strange individuals we produce 10,000 solid American citizens who provide sound leadership in all walks of life."

He commented that the law was posing serious problems to the University. "We are being deprived of the opportunity to learn from visiting scientists who have something worthy to offer us in the areas in which we need to catch up. We are in the process of losing our reputation as being a great institution, unafraid of the free flow of ideas.

"There are equally troublesome questions which have not yet occurred to those persons who are prone to make charges but at the same time are quite unwilling to follow through.

"For instance, Channel 4, the television station of the University is a facility. Is it a facility within the meaning of the 1963 Act? If so, is it legal to let a member of the Communist Party say a single word on any subject on Channel 4? What about news programs?

"Would it make any difference if the programs were live or taped? Would it be all right to telecast Communist speakers over Channel 4 so long as all the sets on the campus were off?

"Another question presents itself in connection with telecasting Communist speakers or Fifth Amendment takers over a University-owned television receiving set in the Carolina Inn, for example, even though the program originated on a commercial station. Would this violate the 1963 Act?

"Quite apart from the difficulties involved in trying in good faith to enforce the 1963 law is the purpose of the law. Why such legislation in the first place? No one really knows—the usual hearings and debate which normally provide essential information about legislative intent was totally lacking. Certainly any legislation which both meets our constitutional requirements and combats communism is desirable.

"If this legislation meets these tests why isn't it good for all of North Carolina? I have been wondering why the few radio, television stations and newspapers who proclaim the virtues of the 1963 legislation do not voluntarily bring their operations under the ban now and also start a campaign to get the law extended. Do they dare? Obviously not.

"In the first place, they would not know how to apply the law. They would find it impracticable to enforce it, and moreover, they would be the first to scream that they should not be required by law to deprive their audiences, listeners and readers of a fundamental right to hear all sides of all questions.

"At the same time, they could not seriously assume that their audiences have more education and more capacity to discriminate between democracy and communism than the audiences who hear speakers on college and university campuses.

"There is no evidence that any speaker on the campus ever influenced any of the handful of students who either went astray or continued the path they had chosen before enrolling to adopt or to continue their extreme positions."

"The fact of the matter is that the overwhelming majority of speakers on the campus are conservative in their views and in general students today are more conservative than thir predecessors of the 1930's. To be other than cnservative is neows and a few students deliberately seize this pportunity to make news. So it is with speakers who are not conservative.

"Two years ago there was a Progressive Labr Grup rganoized in Chapel Hill. The rganizer lives in Nrth Carlina but he does not have any connection with the University. He has never made a speech on the campus.

"Leaders have a duty to inform a sufficient number of people that the 1963 Visiting Speakers Law is a departure in every respect from our traditional practice of freedom . . ." Aycock said.

"It is important to recall that over two centuries ago Montesquieu said that 'in a republican government . . . the whole power of education is required.'

"It may take years for the whole power of education to exert itself. It will require much time and great effort on the part of many people," he said.

Toronto Exchange Starts Here Today

Twenty-six students from the University of Toronto will arrive on campus this morning at 9 a.m. in the first phase of this year's Toronto Exchange.

The Canadians will be treated to lunch at the Villa Tempesta today. Afterwards, they and their UNC hosts will visit the State Capitol Building in Raleigh.

The group will receive a personal tour of the Capitol from Tom Lambeth, administrative assistant to the Governor, Hugh Cannon, director of the Department of Administration, and George Stephens, special assistant to the Governor.

The Canadians will receive an official UNC welcome from Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey at a banquet which will be held at the Morehead Planetarium. They will also see the Playmaker's production of "Long Day's Journey Into Nnght" Friday evening.

On Saturday, the exchangees will attend various classes, participate in a discussion of student government and attend the UNC-Dook football encounter.

Consolidated University Secretary Fred Weaver will address the group later Saturday afternoon and that night the group will attend the Germen's concert.

9-5 Vote

By BOB SOTSAM

The Di-Phi senate voted 9 to 5 against a resolution urging student endowment of teaching professorships this week.

The bill provided that the holders of these professorships would not be under institutional pressure to publish, would not be required to have a PH.D degree or be subject to "other encumbrances nonessential to good teaching."

Supporters of the bill said that a precedent was established in the writer-in-residence program because the professor for that post is chosen by the students.

Opponents of the bill replied that the expense was unnecessary because the present professors are satisfactory. They argued that the students were no more competent in choosing professors than are the trustees.

A vote of the senate and guests also defeated the bill, 8-7.

Soph Committees Named By Ehrhart

Some 56 sophomores have been named to the class cabnet and committees, President Larry Ehrhart announced yesterday.

All committee members are asked to attend an important organizational meeting Monday at 7:30 p.m. in Howell Hall.

Committees and their members are:

Majors Handbook Committee—to be in charge of writing and publishing a handbook on the major courses of study open for juniors and seniors. Ehrhart is chairman.

24 Pledge NROTC Unit

The local unit of the Scabbard and Blade has named 24 Midshipmen and Cadets as pledges for th fall semester.

NROTC pledges are seniors T. M. Cribbin, W. D. King, H. G. Roser, D. C. Rumsey, R. G. Segrest, C. M. Vollmer and juniors J. S. Fluet, K. R. Furr, A. V. Monnette, R. T. Oliver, W. M. Parham, and J. L. Peddicord.

AFROTC cadet pledges are seniors C. P. Dunnegan, Jr., D. W. Howe, B. R. Matthews, J. J. McDonald, J. R. Poole, R. D. Skees, C. E. Stull and juniors J. P. Hoybach, H. L. Jones, W. J. Nelson, C. M. Tate, and B. F. Warlick.

William Poteat represented the local unit, Company L, 8th Regiment, at the 31st National Convention of the National Society of Scabbard and Blade in Philadelphia on Nov. 15 and 16.

Membership in the Scabbard and Blade consists of outstanding juniors and seniors in ROTC at more than 170 colleges and universities who successfully complete training. It was established at the University of Wisconsin in 1904-05.

DENNY TO HELP AWARD

Floyd W. Denny, Jr., M.D., Department of Pediatrics at UNC, has been named to a three-year term on an awards committee of the American Academy of Pediatrics, according to E. H. Christopherson, M.D., executive director.

He is a member of the committee which selects the recipients of the E. Mead Johnson Awards, given annually, for outstanding research in the field of pediatrics. The Academy makes the awards from money given by the Mead Johnson Laboratories.

Committee Makes Study Of Book-X

By PATT BETTS

Proposals for raising refund values on used texts and lowering prices at the UNC Book Exchange and improving the choice of dormitory furniture were discussed by the Campus Affairs Board Tuesday night.

Ken Simon, chairman of a sub - committee investigating the Book Ex. price procedures, reported that texts are marked 20% above publishers' prices. Used books are re-bought for 50% of the retail price and resold at 75% of the retail price, according to Elmer Oakley and Tom Shetley, present management.

Simon said he was told that the 25% difference went to "repair of damaged texts." He said no progress was made in negotiating a change in priceing because the manager resigned last spring and at present there is no official manager. He said he was told that the manager was the only person with authority to act on price rates.

The Board also proposed establishing a "furniture pool" by the university in which students might be able to rent extra lamps, book cases, lounge chairs, rugs etc. during the academic year.

The sub-committee on housing reported that high student living expenses are due in large part to the university's self-liquidation program, which is still increasing because of inflation. It reported that the Lenoir Hall bond was paid off in 1939 and the gym was also paid off but that self-liquidation continued.

"The state makes all colleges and universities self-liquidating, but UNC as a state university has to self-liquidate more because it is growing more and faster. Costs have gone up over a 5-year period approximately 18%, and dorm rent has gone up 20% and will probably go up again next year for the new dorm which will be ready by 1965," a student said.

The Campus Affairs Board also outlined plans for an off-campus housing survey which would investigate heating, water, food, furniture, size and type of available accomodations during registration. The Board reported that of approximately 10,884 students, 5,500 live on campus and the remainder live in private housing, fraternities or sororities, or are commuters.

Football Horrorscope

T. D. Gridley scratched his bushy hair and shouted "Hey, How You?" to the five horrorscopers who had been invited to dinner among the trees.

Laid out on the table of leaves and bark were banana splits, banana cream pies, peanut butter and banana sandwiches, banana stew, bananas and turnips, banana pudding, banana jello, banana ice cream, and bananas — fried, baked, mashed, hot-buttered, kosher, fricasseed and a la (Wayne) king.

T. D., who has rated the top 60 teams in the country for us for the past three weeks, kept up a running chatter ("Have A Banana") while we gave him the selection sheet.

"Umba, umba. Erksh, erksh. Eassby, easshy, Umba, umba, umba, burp, burp. Have a Banana," said T. D. We did (it was yellow) and he picked immediately. Choosing upsets by Yale, Oregon Stat and Student Government.

"Uh, about this Student Government selection, T. D.?" we said. "What is the meaning of this Why have you gone against us to pick the no-goods at the other end of GM?"

"Have a banana," he said. "I figured with Johnsye Massenburg at tailback the DTH won't be in the game after the first half."

"But T. D.," we said, "we have Swivel Hips Simonds and Fan Jet Riggs at the tight ends. There's no way anybody can cover them."

The distinguished prognosticator looked puzzled. "Hmmm, that may be a problem," said Gridley. "But those passes to the flats, uh, I mean in the eflats, are only short gainers. Student Government will stop the long thrusts."

Last week, the Horrorscope took a dreadful beating — its worst of the season. Guest star Kitty Carmichael did finish over .500 at 10-9-1, but the group together was only 67-47-6 for .587. Mat Friedman led at 13-6-1 with Curry Kirkpatrick second at 12-7-1.

With one week left, the mark is 656-356-48 for .648. Kirkpatrick is now four games ahead of the pack at 119-48-8 while Al Kaplan retains second (115-52-8) despite a 10-9-1 last time.

Order Of Old Beanbirds Selects 11 Fledglings

To compensate for the seasonal losses of its wild turkey friends, the Order of the Old Beanbirds pecked 11 new fledglings today at dawn. Although it caused a momentary delay in their Southern freedom flight, the BeanBirds felt they could not fly over the birdlike qualities of these 11.

Such qualities are often indefineable and aesthetic, though the fledglings must all have certain distinguishing characteristics:

1. A BeanBird must be able to perch . . .
2. To go out on a limb and then not fall off, even if pushed.
3. To give a worthy demonstration of the BeanBird shuffle.
4. To fly alone even with a broken wing.
5. To twitter-tweet.
6. To control squawks on the ground and in the air.
7. And to use its claws to cling to the strong and sturdy limbs of educational ideals.

Also given an honorary pecking was George "Skunk-Headed Blackbird" Barclay.

Following the ceremony, the BeanBirds, with fluttering wings and typical birdlike gaiety, feasted on bird seed. They will continue their avian activities throughout the day.

Playmakers Hold Tryouts

The Carolina Playmakers will hold tryouts for a bill of three new one-act plays written and directed by students today at 4 p.m. in the Playmakers Theatre.

The plays will be presented on December 7 and 8.

The new one-acts, written by students in Prof. Thomas M. Patterson's playwriting class, are "The Button" by George Gray of Gastonia; "Sydney" by Richard N. Philp of Vero Beach, Fla.; and "A Matter of Distinction" by Tom Benenson of New YoYrk City.

A total of eight men and three women are needed for the casts of the three plays, which will be directed by Dramatic Art graduate students Susie Cordon, Tom Hull, and John Whitty.

The directors have announced that anyone in the Chapel Hill area, as well as any University student, is eligible to audition.

Frosh Committee Interviews Set

Interviews for the Freshman Class cabinet will be held today in Roland Parker 2 of GM from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m.

Chairmen will be selected for the Finance, Publicity, Talent Show and Social Committees of the freshman class. Several sub-committees will also function under each committee. All interested freshmen are urged to apply for cabinet positions.

Jim Brame, freshman president, announced yesterday that a calendar of activities for the class is currently being drawn up by the class officers. Among the scheduled projects is a Merchant's Sale during the first week of December, when freshmen will work as salesmen with their commissions going to the class treasury.

DTH Fire Editor Igor Hotbox came by the office yesterday to give us a detailed report on the fire (if you can call it that) at Memorial Hospital Tuesday night.

Igor says there were over 200 students milling around the hospital and he says there were a large number of nurses literally hanging out of the windows.

One enterprising young nurse who couldn't get a clear view of the scene decided to unlatch the window screen and push it open.

But when she did, Igor reports, she found that it was not hung to the top of the window and the screen almost fell on the housemother who was standing below.

Several other young lassies came to the damsel's rescue and by combining their efforts, they were able to get the screen back on its hinges beore it fell to the ground, two floors below.

The football players have a ritual of going to a movie the night before the big Saturday game. Last Saturday, they got all fired up after seeing "McLintock" and promptly went out and deflated Miami's windbag.

But the Saturday before when the Heels lost to Clemson, guess what movie they saw the night before?

"The Secret Passion."

Did you know that William R. Davie (our esteemed founder) has a great, great, great, great grandson attending the University? Yes, friends, and his name is Mike Nase and he lives at 207 Graham dormitory.

Reality Is A Deep Shade Of Grey

Americans have always been deeply suspicious of power and compromises, the chief elements of politics, It is therefore not surprising that politicians have long been held in low esteem by most of us. Indeed, the word itself usually carries the strong implication that the person so described is an unprincipled scoundrel, intent only upon fleecing the public out of as much privilege and money as possible.

The reasons for this over-developed national skepticism of ours go back to our successful revolution against the 18th Century authoritarianism of England, and the Puritanical absolutism that guided our early development as a nation. Too much power in one man's hands, we learned early, can be mighty disastrous for the rights of the average man. Also, we learned, there can be no compromising with the Devil. You are either good, meaning right, or you are bad, meaning wrong. There isn't any greyness about it.

Down through the years other developments occurred which left a foul taste in our national mouth where politicians were concerned, not the least of these being incidents of graft, corruption and other forms of chicanery among those in high places.

To be sure, the more discerning among us have always recognized the obvious truth that there are good politicians and bad politicians. But most of us have been content just to lump them all together into one big pile and, figuratively holding our nose, mumble something about "oh well, what can you expect" when one of them does something we don't agree with.

Many of us have even worked out tight little theories to explain the whys and wherefores of politics. One of our favorite people, for example, has everything all worked out. When there's a hole in the road someplace that isn't fixed promptly, for example, it's because someone is getting a payoff. It doesn't even occur to this person that there are probaly several good reasons why the hole hasn't been fixed, such as lack of enough men, money and equipment to get all the roads repaired that need it, immediately.

In the case of our friend, and the millions of other Americans like him, however, this sort of thinking is understandable, even though it's terribly shallow and unrealistic. Our friend, like millions of other Americans, hasn't had much of an education and is understandably far from being able to comprehend the complexities of our political system.

Besides that, our friend is not in much of a position to mislead a lot of other people with his muddy interpretations of things in general. So we don't get too shook up over what he says and thinks.

We do get shook up, though, when we come across men who ought to know better doing the same thing, especially when these men occupy important positions in our society, and large numbers of their fellows look to them for guidance

A case in point is John S. Knight, publisher of the Knight Newspapers, a string of half a dozen or so high-quality newspapers which include The Charlotte Observer and the The Charlotte News.

"Why is it," he asked, "that newspapermen from all sections of this hemisphere, possessing different backgrounds and holding widely-separated social and political views can unite in a program of progress when the diplomats and the politicians are able to produce little more than continuning crises and chaos?

"The answer, I believe, is that the newspapermen . . . are dedicated to a common cause — the promotion and protection of freedom of the press and the people's right to know in the New World.

"Unlike the politicians who seek to advance their personal ambitions — too often by the sacrifice of conviction and principle — newspapers endeavor to light the torch of truth and serve the general welfare."

To be sure, much of this is just good old-fashioned speechifying, but not all of it. Besides a commendably fierce pride in journalism, Knight also exhibits that all-too typical attitude that politicians are bad, period.

The point is that here is a responsibly-situated man, typical of many in our society, who simply glosses over the objective factors that make for chaos and corruption, and blames it all instead upon the supposedly inferior characters of men called politicians.

Surely these men, these politicians— most of whom are honorable and conscientious — deserve better treatment than this. Surely they deserve to be judged as individuals, not lumped, labeled and lashed because the worst of them is very bad indeed.

Surely it is time for us all to grow up and recognize that politicians play a vital role in our society and others like ours, that most of them are honest and hard-working, that they are creatures of great pressures and interest, and that their duties and responsibilities are demanding indeed.

Surely, in sum, it is time for those of us blessed with an education and and an intimacy with reality to use our influence to foster the development of a better national sense of appreciation for the role and efforts of the men and women who mould and maintain the political context of our society, inside of which everything else occurs, and without which nothing lasting can be achieved.

We have, after all, come a very long way from those early days when everything was neat and easy, black or white. In today's world, grey is the predominant color, and we must strive to accomodate ourselves to that fact, difficult though that may be. Here, as in other areas of our private and national lives, we simply must get on better terms with reality.

We're Impressed

The Chapel Hill-Carrboro Fire Department was really on the ball Tuesday night when they sped to Memorial Hospital minutes after an alarm was turned in.

Fortunately for everyone involved, the fire was contained to a seventh floor refrigerator motor and was quickly extinguished.

But the fire department was there in full force just the same with three shiney red engines.

Perhaps the men at the fire station are so proud of their brand spanking new headquarters that they want to impress everyone with their promptness. Well, they've impressed us, and we feel a little safer knowing that the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Fire Department is on the alert 24 hours a day.

Commendation For Attempt

By NINA KING

"Long Day's Journey into Night." by Eugene O'Neill; a Carolina Playmakers' production; directed by Thomas Patterson, sets by Tommy Rezzuto, costumes by Irene Rains, lighting by Russell Graves; the Playmakers' Theatre, November 19-24.

Oh, for a world of black and white, for an absolute Good and a Bad destined for eternal damnation! After several years of mediocre productions of poorly chosen plays, the Carolina Playmakers have at last grasped the horns of that poor old bull and attempted one of the most important (and difficult) plays of the last 25 years. Such an event calls for an equally committed reaction: for unrestrained applause or for the catharsis of utter condemnation. But, alas, "Long Day's Journey into Night" elicits no such vehemence. Commendation for the attempt, yes, but for the production only faint damns and qualified pats on the back.

The autobiographical basis of Eugene O'Neill's lengthy masterpiece is a well-known fact. During the course of three long and grueling hours, the dramatist reveals to us the battered and somewhat bowed souls of the four members of his, the "Tyrone" family.

Father Tyrone (Earl Wynn) is a bombastic Irish actor whose poverty-stricken origins are manifested by a stinginess not limited to the purely monetary.

Tyrone's wife Mary (Marion Fitz-Simons) seeks to blame the tawdriness of one night stands and second-rate hotels for her inadequacy as a mother and her escape into drugs. Only morphine can restore to her the stability and peace of a genteel girlhood in a Middle Western convent.

Younger brother Edmund (Richard) is O'Neill as a consumptive and uncommitted young man, unable as yet to find artistic expression for a sensitivity sharpened by family tragedy.

"Long Day's Journey into Night" is a masterpiece of psychological realism, a realism which reaches beyond the immediate "tranche de vie" format into the realms of eternal truth. Technically, it is entirely a play of dialogue, a play of intricate inter-relations between characters developed during three hours of often banal, endlessly repetitive verbal hits and misses. Nothing external enters into the drama; the internal is merely confirmed and intensified by the two main events of the day, the discovery of Edmund's tuberculosis and Mary's return to morphine addiction.

The principal fault with the Playmakers' production as a whole is one of tempo. As written by O'Neill, the play moves from initial bad to climatic far worse on a gently rising crescendo. As directed by Patterson, it degenerates into one long shouting contest. The dialogue "formula" of accusation - contrition - self-flagellation - flashed warmth - reiterated accusation is impossible to maintain at a high degree of effectiveness for three hours without deliberate pacing and considerable restraint on the part of the director. In the current production, there is no gradual evolution, no build-up to the third act climax of love and hate.

As James Tyrone, Earl Wynn resembles a delightful cross between a demustachioed walrus and Edward G. Robinson. As the grandiloquent Irish actor who adores Shakespeare and sputteringly condemns Baudelaire, Dowson, et al. as "whoremongers and degenerates," he is enchanting. However, when the time comes for the mask to fall, he is unable to overcome his ability to quiver like an irritated domestic bull-moose; he is uable to convince us of the pains and sorrows of the soul thus charmingly disguised.

As Edmund, Richard Parks never quite succeeds in establishing an identity. Nor does he seem quite certain of the nature of the play itself. In his third act recitation of Dowson's "They are not long the weeping and the laughter . . ." he attempts the compromise between poetry and content required of the actor in a poetic drama. He seems unaware that he is not Olivier playing Hamlet, but rather a young man reciting a poem to his drunken father.

Frank McDonald as Jamie gives the best and worst performances of the eveining. Early in the first act, he trips on stage, stops, fixes his mother with a glassy gaze, and thus we are informed that there is something a bit odd about her. Throughout the earlier scenes, he cues the audience in on other important facts with similar finesse. But, in his climatic scene in the third act, in which he reveals to his brother and to himself the passionate confusion of a superior human being struggling with extremes of love and hate, he performs with a dramatic intensity and effectiveness unequaled by anyone else in the cast.

As Mary Tyrone, Marion Fitz-Simons dominates the entire play. It is a moot question whether this was the writer's (or, the director) intent.

In this particular production, it is somewhat unfortunate, for Mrs. Fitz-Simons' ability to steal a scene is not coupled with the ability to understand one.

Tommy Rezzuto's setting was both picturesque and ideally suited to the technical demands of the play. Irene Rains' costumes were generally effective, particularly those of Mrs. Fitz-Simons.

Despite one minor mishap in the third act, Russell Graves' lighting was well-planned and, considering the number of lights switched on and off during the play, well carried-out.

In general, then, the production, if far from impressive, was not a failure. In the face of three hours of O'Neill greater feats of bungling are possible.

Fuzzy Wuzzy

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Fuzzzymindedness has been given its greatest shot in the arm since Frank Crowther called Senator Goldwater a fascist. Mr. McInnis has demonstrated in his attack on Mr. Wilson the same fuzzyminded ability all liberals must use to attack conservatives.

McInnis makes the same fuzzy mistake most liberals make before he ever gets his fuzzirama rolling. He ridiculously equates the segregationist and the opponent of the Public Accommodations Act. Fuzzy, fuzzy, fuzzy! The question in the Public Accommodations Act is not segregation, but a violation of Constitutional rights. The Fifth Amendment has already settled the issue of public accommodations, and the New Fuzzitier is proposing a direct violation of this amendment. Our forefathers knew what they were doing when they authored the Fifth Amendment; therefore, the word "property" didn't get in there by accident. Is the whole Constitution required reading for liberals, Mr. McInnis, or do you just fuzzy along until you reach the Fourteenth Amendment?

Mr. McInnis defends broad goals on the grounds that they are "worthy." Fuzzykins! What about the direct consequences? McInnis says that the John F. (Fuzzzyminded) Kennedy administration has a knowledge of direct consequences. When the following administration policies are considered, McInnis does not have a fuzzy leg to stand on.

The freeing of the Cuban people from Castro's rule is a "worthy" undertaking, but the direct consequences of the Bay of Pigs invasion were a lowering of national prestige and a loss of several million dollars in ransom "donated" by Americans.

Helping small underdeveloped nations to become independent, strong, and in better positions to resist tyranny is "worthy," but the direct consequences of foreign aid are an open bartering on the part of small nations for U.S. and Soviet aid and a growing hate for U.S. intervention such as that being expressed in Latin America. By Fuzz, America did pretty well without foreign aid and intervention, so why must we help create a world of dependent little nations with greedy hands and a "give-me" attitude? Medical aid for the aged is "worthy," but medicare is a step toward socialism. What is wrong with the aged remaining independent? This is not New Delphi, you know. They're not dying in the streets for lack of care. Why should America want socialism?

Equal education for Negroes and whites is "worthy," but force by federal troops is reminiscent of totalitarianism. Likewise, equal accommodation for all races is "worthy," but can the rights of the property owner be taken in direct violation of the Constitution? Does the Kennedy Administration realize this direct consequence, Mr. McInnis?

"Fuzzy-wuzzy wuz a bear,
Fuzzy-wuzzy had no hair,
Fuzzy-wuzzy wuzn't fuzzy,
wuz he?

I suggest that before Mr. McInnis attacks Mr. Wilson or Conservatism again, he should get some logical arguments for hair or quit acting like a bear.

Not Both

We are warned by Dr. Pauling, says the reporter, that "the nuclear arms race can lead to doom for the world." Pauling himself is quoted as saying that: "As we consider the facts about the capabilities of destruction . . . we are forced to the conclusion that we are doomed to die if the world continues along the path of insanity."

I find these quotations both inaccurate and ambiguous. The world, even using the term to include human beings, is composed of matter. Now the principle of the conservation of matter—a cornerstone of modern chemistry and physics—states that the total mass of any material system is neither increased nor diminished by reactions between the parts. Clearly, matter is here to stay. Perhaps our reporter meant: can lead to death for the human beings, animals and, perhaps, plants inhabiting our planet. Although this statement is more modest than the quotation, the former would seem to be some gain in precision of expression.

Pauling's statement, on the other hand, that "we are doomed to die if . . ." is overmodest. The experience of people to date has led consistently to the conclusion that we are doomed to die in any case. Pauling draws an interesting contrast between "we" and "world." The world, he tells us, "continues along the path of insanity," and therefore, "we are doomed." Now if in Pauling's mind 'we" in general and himself in particular are to be conceived of as a part of the world, then it would follow that "we", including Pauling, are ourselves insane. The other possibility is that "we" and Pauling are not to be conceived of as a piece of the world. If this is the case, the intended implications may be that "we" and he are sane. However, this position raises the problem: if "we" and he are not a piece of the world, then what are "we" and he a piece of?

Either Pauling is a part of the world or he is not. Let us allow him to have it either way he chooses; but not both.

A Cage?

Editors, The Tar Heel

A friend of mine went to the UNC-Miami football game this past weekend. I was unable to go but listened to every minute of it on the radio and I thought it was an exciting game and was proud of the way Carolina played. Naturally I was all ready to receive the praise and congratulations of my friend. Much to my dismay this was not the case. When I asked how she had enjoyed the game she frowned and muttered something about it being "all right." Inquiring further, I discovered she had seen very little of the game as a result of having to duck the bourbon sloshed her way. Her disgust over the conduct of the students grew more and more evident as she talked.

Now if this had been my friend's first view of a college football game, her chagrin could possibly be dismissed as a "lack of knowledge concerning the ways of the college world but she has attended four years of a major North Carolina college and has seen many football games in addition to attending a few sloppy fraternity parties. Consequently, it must be inferred that her disgust came from the fact that the conduct of the Carolina students was much grosser than any she had ever seen.

I have experienced much of the same disgust but during the past two or three years the conduct at football games seemed to have been getting better. But judging from the reactions of visitors and personal observation the situation appears to have taken a giant step backwards this year.

I read in the paper after the Clemson game that Mike Lawler left his seat several times to restain some "over-zealous students." This is commendable but I hope his action didn't and doesn't stop there. In my four years at Carolina the idea was pounded into my head again and again that the students have the right to govern themselves. In principle I always agreed with this but when the student government does not exercise this power because they are so busy making sure they keep it, then it is time someone else steps in.

I confess I don't know what can be done but it isn't fair to the supporter who pays $4.50 to see a football game and then has to watch a sideshow of drunkenness and vulgarity—led by a barker who wears a cheerleader's outfit but sounds more like a marine drill sergeant with a bad hangover. I always thought that when a child abuses a toy one should take it away from him. But week after week he is allowed to yell his little many obscenities into his loud-talker.

Oh, yes, the new stadium left my friend a little awed but she felt there was one significant structure lacking—a cage!

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Here are a few tricks women might practice to enhance eye beauty and appeal: If you have deep-set eyes, try using white makeup on the eyelid above your eye shadow, following with darker base applied on the area immediately below the brow. Blend carefully, of course.

If you feel your eyes are too close-set, apply white makeup between your nose and your eye's inner corner. Carefully blend some of the white make-up a very short distance along the upper eyelid, then apply eye shadow, eyeliner and mascara a fraction of an inch from the inner corner of your upper eyelid.

Doing the right thing for your hair, however, is no problem at all—merely make your appointment at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon. All attentions to your hair are expertly and beautifully handled with personal attention at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon, 133½ East Franklin Street — Phone 942-4335. Open Friday evenings, too. Is the new 1964 SAAB in the same boat as Volkswagen?

As for styling or body changes, yes. They're few and far between. And both cars make a fetish out of sound engineering. But SAAB mechanical changes tend to be dramatic, year to year. Take the new 1964 SAAB. It has a completely new brake system: dual master cylinders with independent hydraulic lines that connect the front wheel on one side with the rear wheel on the other side. If one fails, you still get effective braking on both sides. So do your wife and kids. We made a dashboard change, too. Not one instrument, but the whole works.

Otherwise, SAAB sticks to the solid things it's always had: front-wheel drive, fantastic 2-stroke engine, and room — comfortable room. So it's not really in the same boat as Volkswagen. Nor is the price. SAAB costs about $300 more. Value-wise, it's worth it.

Only $1895 (right off the boat).

Reality Is A Deep Shade Of Grey

Americans have always been deeply suspicious of power and compromises, the chief elements of politics, It is therefore not surprising that politicians have long been held in low esteem by most of us. Indeed, the word itself usually carries the strong implication that the person so described is an unprincipled scoundrel, intent only upon fleecing the public out of as much privilege and money as possible.

The reasons for this over-developed national skepticism of ours go back to our successful revolution against the 18th Century authoritarianism of England, and the Puritanical absolutism that guided our early development as a nation. Too much power in one man's hands, we learned early, can be mighty disastrous for the rights of the average man. Also, we learned, there can be no compromising with the Devil. You are either good, meaning right, or you are bad, meaning wrong. There isn't any greyness about it.

Down through the years other developments occurred which left a foul taste in our national mouth where politicians were concerned, not the least of these being incidents of graft, corruption and other forms of chicanery among those in high places.

To be sure, the more discerning among us have always recognized the obvious truth that there are good politicians and bad politicians. But most of us have been content just to lump them all together into one big pile and, figuratively holding our nose, mumble something about "oh well, what can you expect" when one of them does something we don't agree with.

Many of us have even worked out tight little theories to explain the whys and wherefores of politics. One of our favorite people, for example, has everything all worked out. When there's a hole in the road someplace that isn't fixed promptly, for example, it's because someone is getting a payoff. It doesn't even occur to this person that there are probaly several good reasons why the hole hasn't been fixed, such as lack of enough men, money and equipment to get all the roads repaired that need it, immediately.

In the case of our friend, and the millions of other Americans like him, however, this sort of thinking is understandable, even though it's terribly shallow and unrealistic. Our friend, like millions of other Americans, hasn't had much of an education and is understandably far from being able to comprehend the complexities of our political system.

Besides that, our friend is not in much of a position to mislead a lot of other people with his muddy interpretations of things in general. So we don't get too shook up over what he says and thinks.

We do get shook up, though, when we come across men who ought to know better doing the same thing, especially when these men occupy important positions in our society, and large numbers of their fellows look to them for guidance.

A case in point is John S. Knight, publisher of the Knight Newspapers, a string of half a dozen or so high-quality newspapers which include The Charlotte Observer and the The Charlotte News.

"Why is it," he asked, "that newspapermen from all sections of this hemisphere, possessing different backgrounds and holding widely-separated social and political views can unite in a program of progress when the diplomats and the politicians are able to produce little more than continuning crises and chaos?

"The answer, I believe, is that the newspapermen . . . are dedicated to a common cause — the promotion and protection of freedom of the press and the people's right to know in the New World.

"Unlike the politicians who seek to advance their personal ambitions — too often by the sacrifice of conviction and principle — newspapers endeavor to light the torch of truth and serve the general welfare."

To be sure, much of this is just good old-fashioned speechifying, but not all of it. Besides a commendably fierce pride in journalism, Knight also exhibits that all-too typical attitude that politicians are bad, period.

The point is that here is a responsibly-situated man, typical of many in our society, who simply glosses over the objective factors that make for chaos and corruption, and blames it all instead upon the supposedly inferior characters of men called politicians.

Surely these men, these politicians— most of whom are honorable and conscientious — deserve better treatment than this. Surely they deserve to be judged as individuals, not lumped, labeled and lashed because the worst of them is very bad indeed.

Surely it is time for us all to grow up and recognize that politicians play a vital role in our society and others like ours, that most of them are honest and hard-working, that they are creatures of great pressures and interest, and that their duties and responsibilities are demanding indeed.

Surely, in sum, it is time for those of us blessed with an education and and an intimacy with reality to use our influence to foster the development of a better national sense of appreciation for the role and efforts of the men and women who mould and maintain the political context of our society, inside of which everything else occurs, and without which nothing lasting can be achieved.

We have, after all, come a very long way from those early days when everything was neat and easy, black or white. In today's world, grey is the predominant color, and we must strive to accomodate ourselves to that fact, difficult though that may be. Here, as in other areas of our private and national lives, we simply must get on better terms with reality.

We're Impressed

The Chapel Hill-Carrboro Fire Department was really on the ball Tuesday night when they sped to Memorial Hospital minutes after an alarm was turned in.

Fortunately for everyone involved, the fire was contained to a seventh floor refrigerator motor and was quickly extinguished.

But the fire department was there in full force just the same with three shiney red engines.

Perhaps the men at the fire station are so proud of their brand spanking new headquarters that they want to impress everyone with their promptness. Well, they've impressed us, and we feel a little safer knowing that the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Fire Department is on the alert 24 hours a day.

Commendation For Attempt

By NINA KING

"Long Day's Journey into Night." by Eugene O'Neill; a Carolina Playmakers' production; directed by Thomas Patterson, sets by Tommy Rezzuto, costumes by Irene Rains, lighting by Russell Graves; the Playmakers' Theatre, November 19-24.

Oh, for a world of black and white, for an absolute Good and a Bad destined for eternal damnation! After several years of mediocre productions of poorly chosen plays, the Carolina Playmakers have at last grasped the horns of that poor old bull and attempted one of the most important (and difficult) plays of the last 25 years. Such an event calls for an equally committed reaction: for unrestrained applause or for the catharsis of utter condemnation. But, alas, "Long Day's Journey into Night" elicits no such vehemence. Commendation for the attempt, yes, but for the production only faint damns and qualified pats on the back.

The autobiographical basis of Eugene O'Neill's lengthy masterpiece is a well-known fact. During the course of three long and grueling hours, the dramatist reveals to us the battered and somewhat bowed souls of the four members of his, the "Tyrone" family.

Father Tyrone (Earl Wynn) is a bombastic Irish actor whose peverty-stricken origins are manifested by a stinginess not limited to the purely monetary.

Tyrone's wife Mary (Marion Fitz-Simons) seeks to blame the tawdriness of one night stands and second-rate hotels for her inadequacy as a mother and her escape into drugs. Only morphine can restore to her the stability and peace of a genteel girlhood in a Middle Western convent.

Younger brother Edmund (Richard) is O'Neill as a consumptive and uncommitted young man, unable as yet to find artistic expression for a sensitivity sharpened by family tragedy.

"Long Day's Journey into Night" is a masterpiece of psychological realism, a realism which reaches beyond the immediate "tranche de vie" format into the realms of eternal truth. Technically, it is entirely a play of dialogue, a play of intricate inter-relations between characters developed during three hours of often banal, endlessly repetitive verbal hits and misses. Nothing external enters into the drama; the internal is merely confirmed and intensified by the two main events of the day, the discovery of Edmund's tuberculosis and Mary's return to morphine addiction.

The principal fault with the Playmakers' production as a whole is one of tempo. As written by O'Neill, the play moves from initial bad to climatic far worse on a gently rising crescendo. As directed by Patterson, it degenerates into one long shouting contest. The dialogue "formula" of accusation - contrition - self-flagellation - flashed warmth - reiterated accusation is impossible to maintain at a high degree of effectiveness for three hours without deliberate pacing and considerable restraint on the part of the director. In the current production, there is no gradual evolution, no build-up to the third act climax of love and hate.

As James Tyrone, Earl Wynn resembles a delightful cross between a demustachioed walrus and Edward G. Robinson. As the grandiloquent Irish actor who adores Shakespeare and sputteringly condemns Baudelaire, Dowson, et al. as "whoremongers and degenerates," he is enchanting. However, when the time comes for the mask to fall, he is unable to overcome his ability to quiver like an irritated domestic bull-moose; he is uable to convince us of the pains and sorrows of the soul thus charmingly disguised.

As Edmund, Richard Parks never quite succeeds in establishing an identity. Nor does he seem quite certain of the nature of the play itself. In his third act recitation of Dowson's "They are not long the weeping and the laughter . . ." he attempts the compromise between poetry and content required of the actor in a poetic drama. He seems unaware that he is not Olivier playing Hamlet, but rather a young man reciting a poem to his drunken father.

Frank McDonald as Jamie gives the best and worst performances of the eveining. Early in the first act, he trips on stage, stops, fixes his mother with a glassy gaze, and thus we are informed that there is something a bit odd about her. Throughout the earlier scenes, he cues the audience in on other important facts with similar finesse. But, in his climatic scene in the third act, in which he reveals to his brother and to himself the passionate confusion of a superior human being struggling with extremes of love and hate, he performs with a dramatic intensity and effectiveness unequaled by anyone else in the cast.

As Mary Tyrone, Marion Fitz-Simons dominates the entire play. It is a moot question whether this was the writer's (or, the director) intent.

In this particular production, it is somewhat unfortunate, for Mrs. Fitz-Simons' ability to steal a scene is not coupled with the ability to understand one.

Tommy Rezzuto's setting was both picturesque and ideally suited to the technical demands of the play. Irene Rains' costumes were generally effective, particularly those of Mrs. Fitz-Simons.

Despite one minor mishap in the third act, Russell Graves' lighting was well-planned and, considering the number of lights switched on and off during the play, well carried-out.

In general, then, the production, if far from impressive, was not a failure. In the face of three hours of O'Neill greater feats of bungling are possible.

Fuzzy Wuzzy

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Fuzzzymindedness has been given its greatest shot in the arm since Frank Crowther called Senator Goldwater a fascist. Mr. McInnis has demonstrated in his attack on Mr. Wilson the same fuzzyminded ability all liberals must use to attack conservatives.

McInnis makes the same fuzzy mistake most liberals make before he ever gets his fuzzirama rolling. He ridiculously equates the segregationist and the opponent of the Public Accommodations Act. Fuzzy, fuzzy, fuzzy! The question in the Public Accommodations Act is not segregation, but a violation of Constitutional rights. The Fifth Amendment has already settled the issue of public accommodations, and the New Fuzzitier is proposing a direct violation of this amendment. Our forefathers knew what they were doing when they authored the Fifth Amendment; therefore, the word "property" didn't get in there by accident. Is the whole Constitution required reading for liberals, Mr. McInnis, or do you just fuzzy along until you reach the Fourteenth Amendment?

Mr. McInnis defends broad goals on the grounds that they are "worthy." Fuzzykins! What about the direct consequences? McInnis says that the John F. (Fuzzzyminded) Kennedy administration has a knowledge of direct consequences. When the following administration policies are considered, McInnis does not have a fuzzy leg to stand on.

The freeing of the Cuban people from Castro's rule is a "worthy" undertaking, but the direct consequences of the Bay of Pigs invasion were a lowering of national prestige and a loss of several million dollars in ransom "donated" by Americans.

Helping small underdeveloped nations to become independent, strong, and in better positions to resist tyranny is "worthy," but the direct consequences of foreign aid are an open bartering on the part of small nations for U.S. and Soviet aid and a growing hate for U.S. intervention such as that being expressed in Latin America. By Fuzz, America did pretty well without foreign aid and intervention, so why must we help create a world of dependent little nations with greedy hands and a "give-me" attitude? Medical aid for the aged is "worthy," but medicare is a step toward socialism. What is wrong with the aged remaining independent? This is not New Delphi, you know. They're not dying in the streets for lack of care. Why should America want socialism?

Equal education for Negroes and whites is "worthy," but force by federal troops is reminiscent of totalitarianism. Likewise, equal accommodation for all races is "worthy," but can the rights of the property owner be taken in direct violation of the Constitution? Does the Kennedy Administration realize this direct consequence, Mr. McInnis?

"Fuzzy-wuzzy wuz a bear,
Fuzzy-wuzzy had no hair,
Fuzzy-wuzzy wuzn't fuzzy,
wuz he?

I suggest that before Mr. McInnis attacks Mr. Wilson or Conservatism again, he should get some logical arguments for hair or quit acting like a bear.

Not Both

We are warned by Dr. Pauling, says the reporter, that "the nuclear arms race can lead to doom for the world." Pauling himself is quoted as saying that: "As we consider the facts about the capabilities of destruction . . . we are forced to the conclusion that we are doomed to die if the world continues along the path of insanity."

I find these quotations both inaccurate and ambiguous. The world, even using the term to include human beings, is composed of matter. Now the principle of the conservation of matter—a cornerstone of modern chemistry and physics—states that the total mass of any material system is neither increased nor diminished by reactions between the parts. Clearly, matter is here to stay. Perhaps our reporter meant: can lead to death for the human beings, animals and, perhaps, plants inhabiting our planet. Although this statement is more modest than the quotation, the former would seem to be some gain in precision of expression.

Pauling's statement, on the other hand, that "we are doomed to die if . . ." is overmodest. The experience of people to date has led consistently to the conclusion that we are doomed to die in any case. Pauling draws an interesting contrast between "we" and "world." The world, he tells us, "continues along the path of insanity," and therefore, "we are doomed." Now if in Pauling's mind 'we" in general and himself in particular are to be conceived of as a part of the world, then it would follow that "we", including Pauling, are ourselves insane. The other possibility is that "we" and Pauling are not to be conceived of as a piece of the world. If this is the case, the intended implications may be that "we" and he are sane. However, this position raises the problem: if "we" and he are not a piece of the world, then what are "we" and he a piece of?

Either Pauling is a part of the world or he is not. Let us allow him to have it either way he chooses; but not both.

A Cage?

Editors, The Tar Heel

A friend of mine went to the UNC-Miami football game this past weekend. I was unable to go but listened to every minute of it on the radio and I thought it was an exciting game and was proud of the way Carolina played. Naturally I was all ready to receive the praise and congratulations of my friend. Much to my dismay this was not the case. When I asked how she had enjoyed the game she frowned and muttered something about it being "all right." Inquiring further, I discovered she had seen very little of the game as a result of having to duck the bourbon sloshed her way. Her disgust over the conduct of the students grew more and more evident as she talked.

Now if this had been my friend's first view of a college football game, her chagrin could possibly be dismissed as a "lack of knowledge concerning the ways of the college world but she has attended four years of a major North Carolina college and has seen many football games in addition to attending a few sloppy fraternity parties. Consequently, it must be inferred that her disgust came from the fact that the conduct of the Carolina students was much grosser than any she had ever seen.

I have experienced much of the same disgust but during the past two or three years the conduct at football games seemed to have been getting better. But judging from the reactions of visitors and personal observation the situation appears to have taken a giant step backwards this year.

I read in the paper after the Clemson game that Mike Lawler left his seat several times to restain some "over-zealous students." This is commendable but I hope his action didn't and doesn't stop there. In my four years at Carolina the idea was pounded into my head again and again that the students have the right to govern themselves. In principle I always agreed with this but when the student government does not exercise this power because they are so busy making sure they keep it, then it is time someone else steps in.

I confess I don't know what can be done but it isn't fair to the supporter who pays $4.50 to see a football game and then has to watch a sideshow of drunkenness and vulgarity—led by a barker who wears a cheerleader's outfit but sounds more like a marine drill sergeant with a bad hangover. I always thought that when a child abuses a toy one should take it away from him. But week after week he is allowed to yell his little many obscenities into his loud-talker.

Oh, yes, the new stadium left my friend a little awed but she felt there was one significant structure lacking—a cage!

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Here are a few tricks women might practice to enhance eye beauty and appeal: If you have deep-set eyes, try using white makeup on the eyelid above your eye shadow, following with darker base applied on the area immediately below the brow. Blend carefully, of course.

If you feel your eyes are too close-set, apply white makeup between your nose and your eye's inner corner. Carefully blend some of the white make-up a very short distance along the upper eyelid, then apply eye shadow, eyeliner and mascara a fraction of an inch from the inner corner of your upper eyelid.

Doing the right thing for your hair, however, is no problem at all—merely make your appointment at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon. All attentions to your hair are expertly and beautifully handled with personal attention at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon, 133½ East Franklin Street — Phone 942-4335. Open Friday evenings, too. Is the new 1964 SAAB in the same boat as Volkswagen?
As for styling or body changes, yes. They're few and far between. And both cars make a fetish out of sound engineering. But SAAB mechanical changes tend to be dramatic, year to year. Take the new 1964 SAAB. It has a completely new brake system: dual master cylinders with independent hydraulic lines that connect the front wheel on one side with the rear wheel on the other side. If one fails, you still get effective braking on both sides. So do your wife and kids. We made a dashboard change, too. Not one instrument, but the whole works.
Otherwise, SAAB sticks to the solid things it's always had: front-wheel drive, fantastic 2-stroke engine, and room — comfortable room. So it's not really in the same boat as Volkswagen. Nor is the price. SAAB costs about $300 more. Value-wise, it's worth it.
Only $1895 (right off the boat).

Dear Wake Forest Football Team (?)

Billy Hildebrand is thy shepherd, You should not lose; He maketh you to put on the black and gold; He leadeth you beside the still crowds, he restoreth your scholarships. He has led you in the paths of ineptitude for a good laugh's sake.

Yea, though you walk through the valley of the shadow of your alumni's anger and disgust, fear no evil for the Coach of the Week is with you; his chalk and his whistle, they comfort you.

He preparest a loss before you in the presence of the hated Wolves he anointed your heads with black eye grease, your fullback runneth over. Surely losses and humiliation shall not follow you all the Saturdays of your seasons, and you shall not dwell in the house of ridicule and hilarity forever.

Come the twilight, O Wake Forest Demon Deacons, and you will go forth to do battle with the hated Wolfpack of the hated North Carolina State University of the University of North Carolina at Raleigh.

Please have the love that forgives and have mercy upon your beloved brethren, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and beat the hell out of the hated Wolfpack of the hated North Carolina State University of the University of North Carolina at Raleigh.

We come unto you, O beloved Wake Forest Demon Deacons to deliver to us the Championship of the Atlantic Coast Conference and to give us hope and protection in our hour of need at 2:00 on Saturday afternoon against the hated Blue Devils of the hated University of Duke at Durham.

Sing, O Beloved Wake Forest Demon Deacons, Sing (to the tune of "Hold On") "Keep your eyes on the ball. Don't you fumble, don't you fall. Come on, please hit your peaks, O Deacs."

Yours victoriously,
The UNC Bananas

Billy Galantai

Junior, 6-5, 220 from Brooklyn, N. Y. Weight problem all last year kept action at minimum as he battled to take off some of 265 pounds melted on at Wilmington Junior College. Had totals of 10 points and 15 rebounds in 11 games.

The epitome of desire, Galantai may well be key to this year's UNC squad. Spelled Cunningham in forecourt last year, but lack of work effected confidence and performance. Seems to have nailed down starting position up front this campaign, and only question left is can knees hold up. A good rebounder and excellent outside shooter, he is probably best passer on team.

Ray Respess

Junior, 6-4, 195 from Pantego, N. C. Proved to be one of UNC's hardest workers and toughest competitors last year when he averaged 6.7 points and had 94 rebounds( third best on team) as sophomore. Field goal percentage: 59.1. Free throw percentage: 73.8.

A steady, two-way ballplayer, Respess came on strong at end of last year after curing reluctance to shoot in early games. Finest game was final one against Wake Forest in ACC tourney (15). Strong rebounder, but must improve ball-handling outside to be of help at guard (where Smith may play him occasionally). Best free throw shooter on team and has great accuracy on outside jumper.

A New Star Emerges At Milton's—Executive Old School Traditional

Many of the smartly dressed faculty set and graduate students have been clamoring for a more befitting career suit. Hence Milton has designed a slightly looser fitting and more mature suit model that abounds in many hand detail so important for permanent good looks.

Some of distinguishing features are hand basted linings, making and setting of the collar by hand, hand pressing of the entire suit, forty separate hand under-bastings, entire assembly by hand, such as linings to the sleeves and armholes. To all these hand detailings is added an exclusive shape-retaining detail—the pressure chamber. All suits go through a special dehumidifying drying chamber under 100 degree temperature for 24 hours, to remove all the moisture from the suit before final hand pressing. Consequently a Milton Executive Old School Traditional Suit retains its good looks for many seasons.

One of our knowledgeable customers who was formerly in the clothing business was recently stopped by several of his acquaintances in downtown Raleigh who couldn't get over how smart his suit looked—he was wearing a basic medium gray worsted herringbone in our new career styling.

Interesting suit selections—$95.00 Hand-woven shetland sport jackets — $69.50.

Won't you drop in at your earliest convenience and ask to see our new Executive Old School Traditional Suitings?

MORE KINDS OF CHEVROLETS THAN EVER BEFORE!
CHEVROLET

JET-SMOOTH LUXURY CHEVROLET 15 models. Four series. One brand-new series—the Impala Super Sports. More luxury, too. Even the Biscaynes are now fully carpeted. There's seven different engines' worth of power—140 hp to 425 hp (optional at extra cost). It's a matter of knowing if you'd like your luxury on the gentle side or on the other side.
Model shown: Impala Sport Coupe

TOTALLY NEW CHEVELLE! 11 models. Three series. An entirely new line of cars sized a foot shorter than the big cars, so you get the handling ease of smaller cars. But don't sell it short! Chevelle gives you generous passenger and luggage room. Engine choice: 120 to extra-cost 220 hp.
Model shown: Malibu Sport Coupe

NEW CHEVY II Six models. Two series—Nova and Chevy II 100. Both now offer an extra-cost 195-hp V8 or a 155-hp six, to give you more Chevy II power than ever before. Match this added power with Chevy II thrift, and you can see why Chevy II will be harder than ever to keep up with this year.
Model shown: Nova 2-Door Sedan

NEW CORVAIR Seven models in four series. Two Greenbriers. A new standard 95-hp engine (nearly 19% livelier). An extra-cost 110-hp engine on all Corvairs and a 150-hp Turbocharged engine in the Monza Spyder. Styling? Never been cleaner. Interior? Never been brighter. Fun to drive? Never been more so.
Model shown: Monza Club Coupe

NEW CORVETTE Two models—the Sport Coupe with a new one-piece rear window plus improved interior ventilation, and the dashing Sting Ray Convertible. Both boast smoother rides, improved sound insulation. Both go with four big V8's, including a new extra-cost 375-hp engine with Fuel Injection.

'The President Is Dead'

Campus Reacts In Shock As Tragic News Spreads

By JOHN GREENBACKER
And JIM NEAL

The first reaction was disbelief. It was followed by shock.

There were no warning bells on the UPI wire in the newspaper office here, as is customary when big news breaks.

The first knowledge was the editors's cry, "What's this on the wire about the President being killed?"

No one believed he was serious.

According to wire reports, the same was true all over the country, and was certainly the case on the campus and downtown.

Students and townpeople, returning to work or classes from a late lunch, heard the news and flocked to radios, television sets and wire service tickers in town and on the campus.

Preparations for the Beat Dook parade ground to a halt as the parade was cancelled. The floats were judged in front of the gym, then returned to the houses and dorms from which they came.

A personal friend of the dead President said, "This is a terrible tragedy for our nation. That's all I can say. I'm stunned." The friend was Consolidated President William C. Friday, several times a visitor to the White House.

Chancellor William B. Aycock said classes would be on scheduled today. Of the cancellation of today's football game with Duke, the Chancellor said, "This is a time for work and serious concerns, and not for public entertainment."

As the news spread over the campus and the town, traffic gradually slowed and shocked people didn't want to comment on their feelings.

Bells began tolling in South Building three minutes after the official confirmation of the President's death.

Slowly life on campus and on the town's sidewalks began to pick itself up and go on about its business.

People remembered the President's visit to the campus on University Day, Oct. 12, 1961.

From Kenan Stadium, where the President spoke that day, an Air Force cadet's bugle poured forth the mournful notes of "Taps."

Another ROTC unit, watched by students surrounding the quadrangle between South Building and the Library, went through the ceremony of lowering the Flag to half-mast.

"At this time of great national tragedy, we, your visitors and friends, express our sincerest sympathy. We share your shock and sorrow.

"We, as must all citizens of the Western democracies, feel as a personal loss the regrettable and untimely loss of a great statesman and humanitarian."

The President of the United States was dead.

★ ★ ★

Several campus activities were called to a mournful halt today in the wake of President Kennedy's violent assassination in Dallas, Texas.

Chancellor William B. Aycock included in an official statement to the University yesterday the news that though this was a time of "deep concern," classes will be held as usual.

Dean of Men William Long said, "We are strongly recommending that all fraternities and sororities cancel any social activities they might have planned out of respect for President Kennedy."

The "Beat Dook" Parade, scheduled for yesterday was immediately cancelled at the news of the President's death. Parade Chairman Tom Harriss announced that Miss Johanna Houston of Delta Delta had been named parade Queen.

Watts Carr, president of the German's Club, announced tha the Germans Concert, scheduled for tonight, will not be held. He requested those who have tickets to keep them. Tickets will be honored for the next German's presentation on February 6 and 7.

The Carolina Playmaker's performance tonight of "Long Day's Journey Into Night" has been cancelled according to Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey. Whether or not there will be a performance Sunday has not been determined.

Hillard Caldwell, president of Citizens United for Racial Equality and Dignity (CURED) has announced that the mass meeting scheduled for last night had been postponed until next week.

Castroite Ex-Marine Number One Suspect

By MERRIMAN SMITH
United Press International

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

JOHN B. CONNALLY

DALLAS — President Kennedy was assassinated by a sniper yesterday. Police seized as a prime suspect a pro-Castro former Marine who once sought citizenship in Russia.

The 46-year-old Kennedy—35th President of the United States—was mortally wounded in the head at 1:31 p.m. EST as he drove, smiling and waving, in an open car through a Texas crowd of a quarter of a million people.

Lyndon B. Johnson was sworn in as President at 3:39 p.m. inside the presidential plane, and then left for Washington with the body of his late chief. Johnson had been in the downtown Dallas cavalcade, but several cars behind Kennedy and he was not hurt.

Texas Gov. John B. Connally, riding on the jump seat facing Kennedy in the famous bubble-top presidential limousine — its top down — was wounded by one bullet through the right shoulder. His condition was satisfactory, as of last night.

The wives of both men were also in the car. Neither one was reported injured.

The fatal shot apparently came from a window of the Texas school book depository building overlooking Main Street. A Mauser rifle was found on a fifth floor landing. Three empty shells were nearby.

Oswald was seized in mid-afternoon in the Texas movie theater where he fled with two Dallas city police in pursuit. He shot and killed one of the officers before he was subdued and jailed.

Oswald, a crew-cut man of five feet, eight inches, of Fort Worth is chairman of a local "Fair Play for Cuba" committee.

In 1959 he renounced his American citizenship and went to the Soviet Union. Russian authorities refused him citizenship and he returned to the United States.

Kennedy had flown to Love Field outside Dallas from nearby Carswell Air Force Base Friday morning and skies lifted as he began the drive in to the Texas Trade Mart where the President was to speak on this second day of politicking.

Crowds jammed the curbs. The Secret Service men ran alongside the car and watched from another car behind. Dallas motorcycle police formed a phalanx. But the assassin struck too swiftly, too treacherously for them.

Mrs. Kennedy had just leaned over to her husband and said, "You can't say Dallas wasn't friendly to you," when three shots rang out.

Charles Brehm, 38, of Dallas was standing in the crowd at curbside about 15 feet away as the President's car approached.

"He was waving and the first shot hit him and then that awful look crossed his face," Brehm said.

Kennedy fell over sideways on his face toward the seat. Doctors said later that one shot apparently had torn through both the back of his head and his throat. Mrs. Kennedy screamed, "Oh no!"

Gov. Connally fell face forward to the floor of the car and his wife got down on her knees beside him.

Pandemonium seized the crowd. Secret Service men unlimbered automatic rifles and pistols but no more shots were fired.

City police went charging up a grassy knoll of an adjoining park toward an apparently innocent Negro coupie sitting there.

Mrs. Kennedy, her bright pink wool suit splattered with blood, stroked her husband's brow and, at the hospital, she clung to him and helped lift him to a stretcher.

Blood and fluids were administered intravenously. Physicians labored to keep respiration at a life-sustaining level.

Dr. Malcolm Perry, 34, said "There was a wound below his adam's apple. There was another wound in the back of his head."

Father Oscar Huber of the Holy Trinity Church was summoned to administer the last rites to the first Roman Catholic ever elected to the presidency of the United States.

Apparently, only the physicians were present when he died.

His wife was waiting in another room of the building. So was Johnson. A man with a history of heart trouble, doctors and White House aides were worried about the effect of the shock on Johnson.

Within a short time after Kennedy's death, a bronze casket was brought out of the hospital and placed in a white hearse. Mrs. Kennedy—on the first political tour with her husband since his election in 1960—was helped into the hearse beside him for the trip to Love Field.

It was to have flown on with the presidential party later Friday to Austin and a night at Johnson's "LBJ Ranch" with a possible deer hunting expedition Saturday. The White House party had been issued hunting licenses.

Johnson, too, drove to the field.

It was in the forward compartment of "Air Force 1" that Johnson was sworn in as the 36th president by Federal Judge Sarah T. Hughes, the first woman judge in the Dallas federal district. She had been appointed by Kennedy.

In a rear compartment was Kennedy's body.

At the scene of the ambush, Secret Service agents and police were searching every building. They soon came across the rifle in the school book depository building.

At about the same time police got a telephone call from Mrs. Julie Posel, cashier at the Texas theater in the Oak Cliff section. She said she had spotted a man who "looked like he was running from something enter the theater."

Dallas policeman J. D. Tippit and M. N. McDonald rushed to the theater and ran into a rear exit. According to police headquarters, Tippit fired a shot. MacDonald rushed the suspect—who turned out to be Oswald—and subdued him after a fight.

Tippit was shot dead. Oswald admitted owning a snub-nose 38-caliber pistol used to gun down Tippit. Oswald did not admit owning the rifle found in the building near the scene of the assassination.

Asked whether fingerprints on the rifle matched those on the pistol, police Det. Chief Will Fritz said, "I don't know."

Police said Oswald and his wife have two children. His wife, a Russian, does not speak English.

When Oswald went to Moscow in 1959, he told the United States Embassy that he was a devoted believer in Communism and had read books on it since he was 15 years old.

Duke-UNC Battle Is Postponed

The UNC-Duke football game has been re-scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 30 due to the death of President John F. Kennedy, it was announced yesterday.

Officials of the two Universities made their decision after a conference yesterday afternoon. UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock, in announcing the postponement, called today "a time for work and serious concern, and not for public entertainment."

Chancellor Aycock, after meeting with President William C. Friday of UNC, President Douglas M. McKnight of Duke and the athletic directors of the schools, Charles P. Erickson and E. M. Cameron, said the game would be played next Saturday at 2:00 in Duke Stadium.

The officials apparently decided on that date rather than Thanksgiving Day, Thursday, Nov. 28, out of primary consideration for the student bodies of the two schools.

"We chose Saturday instead of Thursday with the understanding that many students will come back from vacation a day early to see the game," said Aycock. "We will refund all money to those who want it back," he said.

"Whatever tickets we get back will be issued to students on a first-come, first-serve basis. But we don't believe there will be that many refunds to be of much consequence."

The Germans concert and Playmakers production scheduled for tonight have been cancelled, but all University classes will be conducted as usual.

Whether Playmakers will go ahead as usual on Sunday has not been decided. "If Sunday is declared a day of National Mourning, there will of course be no entertainment activities," said Aycock.

1 p.m.—President dead . . .

John F. Kennedy

By MICKEY BLACKWELL AND PETER HARKNESS

He was born in Brookline, a suburb of Boston, on May 29, 1917, the second of nine children of Joseph P. Kennedy Sr. and Rose (Fitzgerald) Kennedy.

Both his grandfathers were sons of Irish immigrants who had moved to Massachusetts after the potato famine in Ireland in 1947, and both had become prominent in politics.

The Kennedy children were reared in an atmosphere of family closeness and loyalty. Their father encouraged a spirit of competitiveness, and from their mother, who is devoted to the Catholic Church, they received a steadying influence and a sense of religious obligation.

To allow his children to carry out freely and fully their feelings of responsibility in public life, Joseph P. Kennedy set up trust funds giving each of them $1,000,000 when they reached maturity.

The future President attended the Canterbury School in New Milford, Conn., the Riverdale Country Day School in Brookline and the Choate School in Wallingford, Conn. He then studied for one summer in 1935 at the London School of Economics, entered Princeton in the fall, but dropped out.

In 1936 he entered Harvard University. He excelled in swimming and sailing but, in his sophomore year, he suffered a spinal injury during a football scrimmage. The injury later threatened his political career and his life.

He spent a one-year leave of absence from Harvard in 1938 which was spent serving in his father's office in the London Embassy. He became interested in England's problems on the eve of World War II, and in his senior year at Harvard, where he majored in political science, he wrote a thesis on England's unpreparedness for war. He later expanded the paper to a book, "Why England Slept."

After receiving his B.S. degree cum laude from Harvard in 1940, he took a business course at Stanford University in California and made a trip through South America.

In 1941 he enlisted in the Navy and one year later he was assigned to a Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron.

In 1943, PT-109, which he commanded, was torpedoed by the Japanese while on patrol off the Solomon Islands. He is credited with saving the lives of several of his crewmen, one of whom he towed through the water for three miles by a life belt that he held between his teeth.

Despite his injuries, he refused to be transferred but was finally rotated back to the United States and soon afterward entered a Navy Hospital in Massachusetts.

While he was recuperating in the summer of 1944, his brother, Joe, was killed by the Germans over the English Channel.

The tragedy marked the turning point in the life of the younger brother. In 1945 he worked as a newspaperman covering the United Nations Conference on International Organization in San Francisco for the Chicago "Herald-American." He also covered European news, including the Potsdam Conference, for International News Service.

In 1946 he became a candidate for the Democratic nomination to the House of Representatives from the Eleventh Congressional District of Massachusetts. He ran as independently as possible of political bosses, refusing to be the protege of anybody and appealing to the voters directly. He won the primary in June, 1946 and had little difficulty in winning the election to the Eightieth Congress, his first of three terms in the House of Representatives.

In 1952, he ran against Henry Cabot Lodge for the United States Senate. He fought a strenuous campaign and became the only Democrat to withstand the Republican landslide in Massachusetts, winning by more than 70,000 votes.

In 1954, the Senator suffered a recurrence of the spinal injury and entered the hospital for a major operation. His long period of recuperation kept him away from the Senate for most of 1955. During some six bed-ridden months he worked on "Profiles in Courage," short biographies of American legislators who had shown courage in withstanding pressures from their constituents in order to exercise their own judgment. The book was an immediate best-seller and the following year won the Pulitzer Prize in biography.

The Democratic National Convention in Chicago in August 1956 first brought him to prominence in national politics. Although he lost to Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee for the Vice-Presidential nomination, he showed such surprising strength in the balloting that when Presidential candidate Adlai E. Stevenson and Kefauver were defeated by the Eisenhower ticket in November 1956, Democrats began to look at him as their bright hope. That hope brightened with the record-breaking 869,000-vote majority by which Massachusetts returned him to the Senate in November, 1958.

On January 2, 1960, the Senator announced his candidacy for the Democratic Presidential nomination and during the spring of that year won the primaries in seven states. On July 13 at the Democratic National Convention in Los Angeles he was nominated on the first ballot with 806 votes. Senator Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas was chosen as his running mate.

In a hard-fought campaign, he said repeatedly that the voters' choice was between the "contented" and the "concerned." It is generally accepted that the four televised debates were a critical factor in his favor, partly because they made the Senator as well known to the public as the Vice-President.

On November 8, 1960, he defeated Richard M. Nixon by a vote of 34,227,096 to 34,107,646. He was inaugurated as the thirty-fifth President of the United States on January 20, 1961. In his inaugural address, he pledged the energy and sacrifice of a new generation and a new administration.

To date, his administration had difficulty in foreign relations with the Soviet Union over Laos, Germany and Cuba. Although an invasion of Cuba in 1961 was a failure, he struck back in October, 1962, when he forced the Russians to back down and pull their missiles from the island.

The problem of civil rights also plagued the administration last summer, but the President was generally expected to survive these problems and run as the stronger candidate in 1964.

Able to think quickly on his feet, the President was a master of the English language and evinced the same regard for intellectualism that he demonstrated in his appointment of advisers.

He knew much of the quality of leadership in American life long before he became President in 1960—the legends, delights, songs, deals and reach of power in all its American forms had been talk in his family since childhood.

From parents and grandparents he had learned of leadership and power in the Boston wards and Massachusetts districts, in City Hall and on Capitol Hill, in the upper reaches of American finance and American diplomacy.

To this he added his own experience and savor of power in academies of learning and manipulation of public communications—as well as in the leading and commanding of men under enemy fire.

Leaders Express Sympathy, Shock

From DTH Wire Reports

The world and its leaders expressed grief and horror yesterday at the news that John Fitzgerald Kennedy, President of the United States, was dead.

Richard Cardinal Cushing, Archbishop of Boston and close friend of Kennedy for many years, mourned the loss of "the First Citizen of the World." He rushed to Hyannis Port to be with members of the Kennedy family.

The President's elderly mother and father were in seclusion late yesterday in the family home on Cape Cod. A source close to the family said they were in contact with the hospital and were immediately advised of their son's death.

Messages poured in from every part of the nation and the world. Walter Ulbrich, head of East Germany, said "we have lost a great statesman."

Sen. Barry Goldwater, one of the probable Republican candidates for President next year, was in Muncie, Indiana to attend the funeral of his mother-in-law. He first learned of the shooting during a brief stopover in Chicago. The Senator issued a statement through his Washington office.

"It is both shocking and dreadful that a thing like this could happen in a free country," the senator's statement said.

"The President's death is a profound loss to the nation and the free world. He and I were personal friends. It is also a great loss to me.

"Mrs. Goldwater and I offer our heartfelt sympathies to Mrs. Kennedy and the President's family."

House Speaker John McCormack—who is now second in line for the presidency—mourned the death of the President as a "staggering loss."

Former President Harry S. Truman, who himself was an intended victim of assassins' bullets 13 years ago this month, was too stricken by the news to comment immediately. His wife, Bess, said the former President would issue a statement later.

"I share the sense of shock and dismay that all Americans feel in the death of our nation's President. Mrs. Eisenhower and I also join with all other citizens in expressing our personal grief and prayerful concern to Mrs. Kennedy and all other members of the family."

Such dazed responses were echoed throughout the tragic afternoon by senators and House members who had served with the slain Chief Executive before he entered the White House.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield immediately summoned all senators to the floor for a special period of prayer while the President was dying. He called the slaying "not only a great tragedy for the nation but it is, I think, a mark against the respectability and responsibility of some of our citizens."

Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen on learning of the shooting could only exclaim: "Oh God. This is the most distressing thing that could ever happen."

After the President died, Dirksen could still barely summon words.

He called the crime "incredible" and told newsmen: "I'm a little bewildered as I know the nation and the whole world will be."

Sen. Margaret Chase Smith, (R-Maine), another who had served with Kennedy in the House and Senate, burst into tears when she was told the news while eating lunch.

There was anger against the perpetrator of the killing as well as mourning and eulogy for the dead President.

Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.), leader of the Senate's Southern bloc, called it "this dastardly crime." He said:

"The assassin's bullet has stricken a brilliant and dedicated statesman at the very height of his powers."

Rep. Hale Boggs (D-La.) recalled that earlier this fall he had spoken in New Orleans trying to "calm the drums of hate against the President of the United States."

Bitterly, Boggs declared: "The radicals and the haters in politics and elsewhere have had their way. They are the ones who really pulled the trigger that killed a great American. But they shall not prevail."

House Republican Leader Charles A. Halleck, branded the assassination "an unspeakable crime against all the people of this country."

"The world should know," he eulogized, "that in this hour of national tragedy, Americans stand together as one-shocked and grieved at this unbelievable news."

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.), said every federal and state effort should be made to punish the guilty.

The Negro congressman also said that "all Americans who have any sanity, any character, any religious beliefs, irrespective of color, political creed or religion, should now rally around Lyndon Johnson to try to lift America back to the level of prestige that has now been destroyed."

Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), whose father was the last President to die while in office, said Kennedy would be remembered for "his willingness to battle for what he thought was right—such as civil rights — his faith in democracy and his desire to see it triumph."

Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D-Fla.), also turned his thoughts to the new President. He said: "I am sure that the Congress . . . and all Americans will rally to the support of Lyndon Johnson as he assumes the lonely and heavy responsibilities of the presidency. May God grant him the wisdom and the strength to carry this awesome duty with courage and dignity."

Rep. Bruce Alger (D-Tex.), whose district contains downtown Dallas where the assassination occurred, had no immediate comment but later said: "No words can express our deep sorrow in this tragic hour. God alone can sustain us in our loss. Our hearts and prayers go out to Mrs. Kennedy and her children and to other members of the family."

Rep. Joe Pool, (D-Tex), remarked: "There is agony in the hearts of all people of our land. The agony in the hearts of the people is stirred with revulsion. An animal lives among us in hideous madness."

And Senate Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey, Minn., who contested the presidential primaries with Kennedy in 1960, said: "America has lost a great President. The world has lost a great leader. I have lost a good friend. What an incredible tragedy."

Next week was to have been a big week for the First Family. Lots of fun and party preparations had been under way to celebrate John Jr.'s third birthday—actually on Monday, Nov. 25—on Tuesday with his playmates at the White House. Party plans also were ready for Carolina, who will be six on Wednesday.

Caroline was to be the star at a big family birthday gathering with all her cousins at Cape Cod. All of the Kennedys were to have been together for their traditional Thanksgiving gathering at Hyannis Port on Thursday.

– JFK's Life –

All this he had known before, and in that year he added to his knowledge the experience of direct acquisition of power as he dealt with, then mastered, all the power brokers and power forms that stir American internal politics.

To this had further been added his growing intellectual conviction that the greatest leadership and most sublime form of power is that of the Presidency of the United States.

No candidate in modern times has so urgently yearned for the power of the Presidency—or more eloquently or precisely declaimed what that power is to the people he sought to lead.

John F. Kennedy, the President of the United States, was assassinated yesterday on the streets of Dallas, Texas.

Leaving Anguish . . .

'Impossible To Believe'

Because the man was so alive, it is difficult to believe he is now dead. It is not only difficult, it is impossible.

The pictures on this page show just how impossible it was yesterday in the relatively small University town of Chapel Hill, N. C. which was affected by the man two years, one month and one week ago today.

This is how it was yesterday on a dull, grey overcast day. But on Thursday, Oct. 12, 1961, the sun was out, it was hot, it was different.

The headlines the day after proclaimed the event: "Kennedy Stresses Vitality In UNC Education; Pledges 'We Shall Be Neither Red Nor Dead'," "JFK Accepts Degree With Somber Speech." The cutlines under a series of pictures on the front page outlined "We Are All Destined . . . To Live Most Of Our Lives . . . In Uncertainty And Challenge . . . And In Peril."

The man had come to the University of North Carolina to accept an honorary Doctor of Laws degree on the University's 168th birthday. It was "University Day" and he had donned the black robe of a scholar to do it.

An estimated 32,000 people jammed Kenan Stadium in anticipation of a major foreign policy address. That, instead, they got a 14-minute speech reconfirming his dedication to both firmness and flexibility in the fight for Western freedom, did not dampen their enthusiasm.

They screamed when he referred to the North Carolina motto, Esse Quam Videri, and said America needs men "who look at things as they are rather than as they seem."

"Our task is to do our best," he said, "and not to be swayed from our course by the faint-hearted or the unknowing, or the threats of those who would make themselves our foes."

They shouted when he said "I am honored to be admitted to the fellowship of this honored and ancient University," and when he pointed to such leaders from North Carolina as Secretary of Commerce Luther Hodges, Frank Graham, former UNC president and U.S. Senator and now a United Nations mediator; and Gordon Gray, also a former president who has held high posts in recent administrations.

And they loved it as he cited these men as having carried out a tradition that the "graduate of this University is a man of his nation as well as a man of his time."

They interrupted his speech with a 30-second standing ovation at one point, and howled when he called Harvard, his alma mater, "a small land-grant college in Massachusetts."

They stood for the nearly ten minutes it took him to get away from the speaker's platform and into his car.

The large number of Secret Service men who came to Chapel Hill to protect the President were joined by more than 150 State Highway Patrolmen, FBI agents and hundreds of city and country law enforcement officials from all over the state. But they didn't mind that.

Select groups from the University's ROTC program, numbering over 100 cadets were stationed in strategic locations as another added precaution. But that didn't stop them either.

Especially the boldest and youngest of them, who, after he had left, came down out of Kenan's concrete seats and took turns sitting in his chair while others stripped clean the bouquet of flowers set in front of the rostrum.

Also on a quest for souvenirs were two little girls who stood nervously beside a busy wire-service reporter on that October day, and watched him peck madly away at his typewriter. When they were sure he wasn't looking, each made off with one of the sharpened pencils that had been provided for the working press.

A caravan of cars and buses bearing newsmen, professors and other officials had preceded his limousine's arrival and dramatic entrance through the gates of the picturesque arena. And the 32,000 had all stood and gazed on the man, proud of the moment and proud they could be part of it.

It took less than an hour and a half, and after it was over, the Old South Building bell and the Morehead Tower bell rang out against each other. Against each other, but together in appreciation of the man and the day.

Yesterday, the bells rang again. But, yesterday, it was different.

It was supposed to be fun. There were supposed to be parades, bonfires, rallies, floats, fireworks and music in anticipation of the UNC-Duke football game. But they were canceled for him.

Instead, there was shock, sorrow, dismay. And there was fright too.

The bells rang again, but it was a death knell.

It wasn't difficult to believe. It was impossible.

In a DTH story on the event of October 12, present Editor Gary Blanchard wrote: "They loved him. Thirty-two thousand of them loved him. Children, students, housewives, working men with the morning off loved him."

Yesterday, they loved him more. But yesterday it was different.

Yesterday, John Fitzgerald Kennedy was gone.

Kennedy Burial Set For Monday, Nation Mourns

LEE HARVEY OSWALD, 24, a pro-Castro Marxist and former U. S. Marine, has been formally charged with the murder of President John F. Kennedy. Oswald allegedly shot Kennedy as he drove in a motorcade in Dallas, Tex. Friday afternoon. Dallas police say they have the evidence, believed to be a film of the man doing the shooting, to convict Oswald.

Dallas Police Say Oswald Case Is Already Conclusive

DALLAS (UPI)—Dallas police said flatly Saturday that Lee Harvey Oswald, a pro - Castro Marxist and former U. S. Marine, assassinated President Kennedy and they have the evidence to prove it. They said he had no accomplices.

"This case is cinch," said homicide Chief Capt. Will Fritz, one of the most respected police officers in Texas.

"The man killed President Kennedy. We are convinced without any doubt he did the killing," Fritz said.

Fritz said he could not disclose the evidence on which he based his statement. Oswald, 24, so far has stubbornly denied any connection with the assassination.

Oswald refused Saturday to take a lie detector test after paraffin tests showed gunpowder traces on both his bands, indicating he recently had fired a rifle—the type of weapon used to kill the President Friday.

The case was expected to go to a grand jury Wednesday, Nov. 27th or Monday, Dec. 2nd.

"There were no accomplices," Fritz said, however.

Dallas County Dist. Atty. Henry Wade said the assassination trial of the 24-year-old Marine Corps reject probably would be held in January.

Wade, with a record of 24 convictions in 24 capital cases, said he would try the Oswald case himself.

Should Oswald not be convicted and sentenced to death by electrocution, he then would be tried for the slaying of a Dallas policeman who sought to arrest him after the assassination, Wade said.

"There is no such thing as a cinch. I do believe we have a good case," Wade said.

Police had the Italian-made sniperscope rifle used in the slayings. They knew from Oswald's Russian wife that he owned such a gun. She saw it the night before the assassination. He bought it in New Orleans, she said.

As Oswald called for a New York Lawyer who has been accused of Communist party membership, Wade said he would not disclose the evidence because:

"We have got to get a jury who doesn't know what evidence we have."

Although he agreed with Capt. Fritz that there was no evidence connecting anyone else to Oswald, Wade said, "Our mind is open."

Lee A. Oswald, accused slayer of President Kennedy, once threatened to "employ all means" to right a wrong he said he had been done him in military service.

Oswald made the threat in a letter to Texas Gov. John B. Connally Jr., who was wounded when the President was killed. At the time he wrote the letter Oswald thought Connally still was Secretary of the Navy.

It referred to the fact that Oswald received a dishonorable discharge from the Marine Corps.

"I shall employ all means to right this gross mistake or injustice to a bona fide U. S. citizen and ex-serviceman," the letter said.

"The U. S. government has no charges or complaints against me. I ask you to look into this cas eand take the necessary steps to repair the damage done to me and my family."

Gov. Sanford To Pay Homage At President's Rites Monday

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

RALEIGH (UPI)—North Carolina Gov. Terry Sanford left his grieving state Saturday to pay homage from himself and over four million residents of the state before the bier of the late President Kennedy.

Before he left, Sanford urged all businesses to close during the hour of the funeral Monday to allow all North Carolinians to participate in the national mourning. His request was expected to be complied with, nearly unanimously.

"The valiant soldier of freedom is dead," Sanford said. "All mankind is less."

Sanford was joined in his plea for an hour of quiet and meditation by the N. C. Merchants Association, whose president John H. Church, asked the state's 90,000 retail firms to close for one hour beginning at noon Monday.

The cancellation of work from some of the state's industrial concerns began flowing in even before the request by Sanford, and North Carolinians cancelled or postponed everything from plays to racial demonstrations, dances to court sessions, concerts to Christmas parades.

Sports events scheduled for Saturday in the state were postponed, and the Davidson-Wolford and Appalachian-East Tennessee football games were cancelled, never to be played. Postponed were games between Duke and North Carolina and Ft. Bragg and Ft. Eustus, Va.

Gov. Donald Russell will carry the deep sympathy of all South Carolina to the late President's funeral Monday.

The Governor and state Sen. Edgar A. Brown of Barnwell were scheduled to leave for the services Sunday to represent the state in mourning the dead President.

Russell ordered that all South Carolina State offices remain closed Monday and flags draped at half-staff. He extended an order made Friday to close the offices Saturday.

The state's two major institutions of higher learning have announced suspension of classes Monday to pay tribute to President Kennedy.

Noted Writer Aldous Huxley Dead At 69

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—Novelist Aldous Auxley, famed for his satirical vision of a "brave new world" and a member of the eminent British family of letters and sciences, died Friday of cancer. He was 69.

Huxley died at his home and private funeral services were conducted Saturday in Los Angeles.

Huxley was the son of Leonard Huxley and grandson of renowned biologist Thomas Huxley, credited with popularizing the evolutionary theories of Charles Darwin. He was the brother of Julian Huxley, noted biologist and writer and grand-nephew of poet-essayist Matthew Arnold.

Author of more than 20 books, Huxley was noted primarily as a philosophical novelist. He used characters largely to represent his far-ranging ideas in his fiction works, which were sprinkled with subtle wit and incisive satire.

Game Rescheduled

UNC and Duke officials reconsidered late yesterday and now have decided to hold the football game between the two universities on Thanksgiving, Nov. 28, at 2:00 p.m.

The game, originally scheduled for yesterday at Duke Stadium, was first postponed until next Saturday due to the tragic death of President John Kennedy. But yesterday, at the request of student leaders of the two schools, officials met and agreed to hold the game on Thursday.

It was announced that the change was made in order to make it more convenient for students to attend. The feeling was students would rather stay over an extra day, see the game, then go home, rather than go home, come back for the game on the 30th, and then perhaps go home again.

The 50th renewal of the ancient battle is a key one for the teams, in that the winner will tie North Carolina State for the ACC Championship. The Wolfpack clinched a tie for the title Friday night with a 42-0 victory over Wake Forest. If UNC and Duke, both 5-1, tie, State will get the crown outright with a 6-1 mark.

The UNC ticket office has announced that any desired refunds will be honored, and for students to inquire about extra tickets made available by refunds at the office from Monday morning to Wednesday noon.

A freshman game between Duke and Maryland has also been scheduled for Thanksgiving Day at Duke Stadium. The frosh teams are expected to play at 9:45 a.m. for the benefit of the Cerebral Palsy fund. It is an annual contest, which, in the past, has been played by the frosh teams of UNC and Duke.

OTHER CHANGES

Campus-wide activities, which came to an immediate halt Friday afternoon, were almost non-existent yesterday as students slowly went about their business.

As a tribute to the late President Kennedy, commander-in-chief of the armed forces, both the campus Naval and Air Force units will be in uniform through Wednesday afternoon.

The Di-Phi Society Friday night unanimously adopted a resolution expressing the Society's deepest sympathy to the John F. Kennedy family and declaring its united support and encouragement to President Lyndon B. Johnson.

More than 200 students in the Ehringhaus area Saturday night signed a letter extending their sympathy to Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy. The letter said in part, "being students we were aware of Mr. Kennedy's struggle for universal and domestic peace and integrity; he will remain a challenging example to those who seek to better their world."

Campus Service In Memorial Hall

11, 12 A.M. Classes Cancelled Monday

Chapel Hill will join communities throughout the nation and the world Monday in observing a "national day of mourning" for President John F. Kennedy.

A special inter-faith memorial service honoring the late president will be conducted Monday morning at 11:15 a.m. in Memorial Hall by the Campus Chaplain's Assn.

The brief service is expected to include prayers, hymns and scripture readings by chaplains of campus religious groups.

Classes will be dismissed from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m., Chancellor William B. Aycock announced yesterday.

In one of his first official acts as President, Lyndon B. Johnson proclaimed Monday as a national day of mourning for his "great and good" predecessor and urged the American people to assemble in churches for prayer.

Elsewhere yesterday, the humble and the mighty joined a grieving widow and family Saturday in mourning the death of John Fitzgerald Kennedy, who presumably will be given a hero's burial Monday in Arlington National Cemetery.

It was understood that arrangements were under way for an Arlington burial following a pontificial requiem mass at noon. Only one other president, William Howard Taft, is buried in Arlington, shrine of the nation's heroes.

As leaders of the world converged on the capital to pay homage, hundreds of people ranging from the family to the late President's most bitter political foes filed slowly past his bier in the black draped East Room of the White House.

First came Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, widowed by a sniper's bullet at 34, and members of the immediate family. Then President Johnson and his wife, accompanied by former President Dwight D. Eisenhower and afterwards high government officials.

Among them were two of the late president's most intense civil rights opponents, Govs. Ross Barnett of Mississippi and George C. Wallace of Alabama.

Wallace said the death of the man whose policies he denounced "transcends all politics."

Limousine after limousine moved slowly up the White House driveway bringing such other dignitaries as Gov. and Mrs. Nelson Rockefeller of New York, Gov. Edmund G. Brown of California and former President Harry Truman.

Truman, who upon his arrival in the capital denounced the "good for nothing" Kennedy assassin, talked with Mrs. Kennedy for 15 minutes in the White House living quarters.

Despite a White House request that Americans express their condolences with gifts to charity, baskets of flowers kept arriving at the executive mansion until a spare room had to be set aside for them.

In issuing his proclamation of mourning, President Johnson invited "the people of the world who share our grief to join us in this day of mourning and rededication."

He earnestly urged the American people to assemble in the nation's churches, "there to bow down in submission to the will of Almighty God, and to pay their homage of love and reverence to the memory of a great and good man."

All federal offices will be closed. Even before issuance of the proclamation business establishments across the nation signalled their intent to be darkened during the day.

The casket with the late president's body, was closed as it lay in the somber east room of the White House.

And, according to White House officials, was to remain so throughout all services.

At 10:30 a.m., with only the family and close friends present a Mass was said in the East Room by the Rev. John J. Cavanaugh, former president of the University of Notre Dame and a long-time friend of the Kennedys.

The Mass was attended by Mrs. Kennedy and her children, Caroline and John, who were told Friday night that an assassin's bullets had snuffed out the life of their father.

Today the body will be taken to the rotunda of the Capitol where it will lie in state for some 21 hours for public viewing. Thousands were expected to file past. But some chose not to wait to pay respects.

In Palm Beach, Fla., a small blond boy, followed by two little girls plucked two hibiscus blossoms from bushes surrounding the resort home of the slain President's father, Joseph P. Kennedy, and placed them on the front steps of the house.

In Moscow, Nikita Khrushchev expressed the "indignation of the Soviet people against the culprits of this base crime" and dispatched his deputy, Anastas Mikoyan, for Monday's Pontificial High Requiem Mass that will be the official state funeral.

At those solemn ceremonies, France will be represented by President Charles de Gaulle, Britain by Prince Philip and Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas Home, and West Germany by Chancellor Ludwig Erhard.

At 1 p.m. Sunday, to the muffled cadence of a corps of drummers, the body in its heavy mahogany casket will be borne from the White House to the Capitol on a caisson drawn by seven horses.

Lyndon B. Johnson: A Complicated Man

By PETER HARKNESS

In the hot and stuffy forward compartment of an Air Force plane, Lyndon Baines Johnson took the oath of office as the 36th President of the United States.

It was 3:38 p.m. EST, Friday, November 22, 1963.

He was born 55 years ago on August 27, 1908, near Johnson City, Texas. Sam Ealy Johnson, a Texas legislator, and Rebekah Baines Johnson, were his parents.

He went to public school in Johnson City and was graduated in the spring of 1924, when he went to work on a road-building gang at $1 per day. He was a restless young man and worked his way to California where he worked in the Imperial Valley.

He later returned to Texas and decided to enter college. In 1927 he enrolled in Southwest Texas State Teahers College in San Marcos, Texas where he worked as a janitor, a door-to-door salesman and other odd jobs to pay for his eduation.

However, in 1928, he had to leave college when his money ran out. He taught for a year at a school in Tulia, Texas, and used his first pay check to buy athletic equipment for underprivileged Latin American children.

He returned to college in 1929, graduated in 1930 and took another teaching job in Houston, Texas.

He married Claudia Lady Bird Taylor in 1934 after returning home and attended night school at Georgetown, Texas law school.

In 1937 he entered politics and ran unopposed for Congress in the tenth district. In 1941 he sought the seat in the United States Senate vacated by Sen. Morris Sheppard and lost to Gov. W. Lee "Pappy" O'Daniel by 1,311 votes.

Within hours after casting his vote to declare war on Japan in 1941, the young Congressman was in uniform. He was the first member of Congress to enter active duty and received the Silver Star for gallantry in action on a flight over New Guinea.

In 1948 he made a second attempt for the Senate and defeated Gov. Coke Stevenson in an unusually close election. Out of one million votes cast, Johnson won by 87.

As early as 1951 he began his rise to Senate leadership. He was unanimously elected party whip and was praised for his ability as a man who could get the job done.

In 1953 he was named the minority leader after the Democrats lost control of the Senate by one seat. One year later, he was re-elected to the Senate.

In 1955, after the Democrats had regained the leadership in the Senate, Lyndon Johnson, 46, was named majority leader, the youngest to ever serve in that job.

On July 2, 1955, he suffered a heart attack and was hospitalized in Washington and later recuperated on his Texas ranch. He returned to the Senate on December 12.

In 1957, he was influential in the passage of the first civil rights bill in 75 years. One year later he spoke before the United Nations supporting a resolution proposed by the United States calling for peaceful exploration of outer space.

In 1960 he was defeated by John Fitzgerald Kennedy for the Democratic Presidential nomination but was picked as the Vice-Presidential candidate.

Johnson was influential in the campaign in winning support for the ticket, especially in the South. In 1961 he took the oath as Vice-President of the United States following the Democratic victory.

He assumes that office with far greater experience than Kennedy, Harry S. Truman, Dwight D. Eisenhower or even Franklin D. Roosevelt.

He has nearly three decades of experience in Washington behind him in both the legislative and executive branches of government. He was influential in many domestic and foreign policy decisions under President Kennedy.

His health appears to be good despite the 1955 heart attack and New York heart specialists claim Johnson will be a "vigorously healthy Chief Executive."

William S. White, the columnist, said Johnson was "a pragmatic man and not a theorist; an actionist and not a philosophical thinker."

White continued, "This man, Lyndon Baines Johnson of Texas, is perhaps the most complicated man in public life known to this correspondent. He known to this correspondent. distinctly clear-eyed. He is tireless beyond ready belief; nearly all his waking life is spent as a furiously functioning one-man political organism. He is understanding of men as individuals and his skill in dealing with them must be seen in action to be credited."

Despite assets, weaknesses or political beliefs, Lyndon Baines Johnson is now the President of the United States.

The Passing Of The President

For a fleeting instant in the eye of time, the world has become a neighborhood of nations, united almost unanimously in their attempts to console the bereaved family, each aware that the loss the family nation has suffered is shared by them all in a myriad of ways many of them as yet unforeseen.

Words , clothing noble, passionate statements, are let fly from everywhere, within and without the family nation, in well-intentioned efforts to assuage a grief so fundamental that words simply have not the capacity to reach and soothe it, for no word or groups of words has sufficient quality to match the caliber of the grief.

But it will not do to remain inert, to do or say nothing. Action is required to ease the strain of the tense muscles of emotion occasioned by the assisination. So, in desperation, resort is made to words in quantity, a poor substitute obviously, but the best each of us has to offer.

Who was this man, John F. Kennedy, whom the world met in earnest only a few short years ago?

He was you and us as we would like to be, or to have been, way down deep inside the fastest recesses of our soul.

Born to privilege, but not content to rest upon it; accustomed to achievement, but continually striving; elected to lead, but shot down as he did.

This was John F. Kennedy.

Only now, his footsteys gone, do we see how large his footprints loom. Only now do we realize the extent of our attachment to him, of how much a part of all our lives he was.

Nearly two days have passed since Then, and still the poignant ache of his tragic passing persists unabated.

To every American worthy of the name, and to countless thousands around the world whose imaginations he caught and fired, his passing is a death in the family.

What does one say when a tragedy occurs? Not just a tragedy, but an event which is wholly outside the realm of our experience, and even our imaginations. You stare glankly around your room at all the little momentoes designed to conjure up warm memories, but you don't recognize them. The mind fights an anguished battle to reject the facts. Something of value is gone. Something young and vibrant and strong. Something which contained the capacity for humor, for pathos. A life which we were able to personalize, which infused our spirit with a new sense of confidence.

And now the legitimate and orderly transfer of power has occurred. We have a new President, and the strength of our system and our laws is once again proved. The law is strong b ecause the people accept it, and the people accept it because of an unshakable belief in our system.

However, the tragedy of Kennedy's death may just be beginning. The crime was apparently committed by a mad man whose politics run to the extreme left. This is of course a contradiction of everyone's first instinct, but only serves to show that fanaticism is devoid of reason on either side.

But this assassin's politics may serve as the catalyst for further tragedy. All the kangaroo courts in the land may open as we enter another period of panicked political purges that encompassed us 10 years ago. "Assisins!" may well become the rallying cry of the far right as al the Robert Welches and Joe McCarthys sound the clarion call for the systematic elimination of those people with divergent political philosophies.

In the speech which the late President never got to deliver he characterized these people as those "perceiving gloom on every side and seeking influence without responsibility."

"Other voices are heard in the land," he said, "voices preaching doctrines wholly unrelated to reality, wholly unsuited to the '60s, doctrines which apparently assume that words will suffice without weapons, that vituperation is as good as victory and that peace is a sign of weakness.

"At a time when we are steadily reducing the number of federal employees serving every thousand citizens, they fear those supposed hordes of civil servants far more than the actual hordes of opposing armies.

"We cannot expect that everyone, to use the phrase of a decade ago, will 'talk sense to the American people.' But we can hope that fewer people will listen to nonsense. And the notion that this nation is headed for defeat through deficit, or that strength is but a matter of slogans, is nothing but just plain nonsense."

John F. Kennedy spoke with optimism and confidence. An optimism in our future and confidence in our system to realize that bright future.

It must not happen that this man's death be used for a cause which he so butterly detested in life.

Freedom

The New York Times

J. Edgar Hoover has told a youth group in New York that he would bar Communist spokesmen from college campuses because their ideas can "win the allegiance of American youth."

We think that the F.B.I. director underestimates the intelligence of American students and seriously narrows the concept of academic freedom. The Communists have been notoriously unsuccessful in their campus recruitment. One reason may be that when students are permitted to learn about Communism, its secretive glamour is stripped away.

American college students have invited and heard many repugnant persons and ideas in recent months. Racism, radical rightism and Communism have been preached—and debated openly—at major universities. "If you expect a nation to be ignorant and free," Thomas Jefferson once said, "you expect what never was and never will be." That's what academic freedom is all about.

Winston Residents React

Keep Out!

Editors, The Daily Tar Heel,

Have things become so desperate that every dimwit who can hit a typewriter must be given space in The Daily Tar Heel? We refer to the article written by one Bob Cade of Parker Hall in Wednesday's edition: as far as we can ascertain there is no such individual residing in either Parker Hall or the University. Since there are a few students who are so naive as to accept the DTH as a properly edited newspaper, we feel that we must defend the good name of Winston Hall.

Disgusting indeed. We refer to the "perceptive" individual who finds it disgusting that he and a friend from Winston Hall (a doubtful statement) observed two live females entering the men's room in the eastmost section of the first floor of Winston during the reception following the Miami game. Perhaps Mr. Cade should have gathered the facts before he begun shouting to the world about this situation.

The men of Winston have long recognized the necessity of providing bathroom facilities for girls when we are having a reception in our social room. Perhaps Mr. Cade would be willing to further enlighten us by providing us with another solution to this problem. Mr. Cade himself has committed the error because the bathroom was clearly marked "Ladies Only." Come now Mr. Cade, maybe your wondering eyes were out of focus because not eight short steps away was another bathroom without a sign on it. And for your information there are also a grand total of fifteen (count 'em) other bathrooms in our hall. Maybe Parker has only one bathroom so we can well understand your stupidity.

Mr. Cade remarks, "My friend and I did not go into the men's room while the girls were in there, but we did feel that our privacy was being invaded." We wish to remind Mr. Cade that he is obviously using the word "privacy" very loosely as there was no invitation for him to use our bathroom, especially one marked ladies only. Doesn't Mr. Cade feel that such a sign excludes him? We think so. And so do the other 200 residents of Winston Hall.

Mr. Cade, we respectfully request that you concern yourself with the affairs in Parker. If your "wondering eyes" cannot perceive the meaning of such a refined statement we will translate it: Keep your damned nose out of our hall, our business, and our bathroom. Thank you.

Larry Somners
G. C. Petree Jr.
Residents of Winston Hall

Ed. Note — The "article" from Mr. Cade was submitted as a letter-to-the-editor, which is a public forum. The DTH does not have the time to track down the legitimacy of every letter and its writer. Letters-to-the-editors do not necessarily reflect the views of the DTH, as should be obvious by now.

Our Privilege

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I think a few misconceptions as to the exact status of women visiting in men's residence halls, namely Winston Hall, should be cleared up—in particular, as related to the women who were seen by Mr. Bob Cade going into a restroom in Winston after last Saturday's ball game.

Winston Hall, along with many others, has earned the privilege of not only allowing women inside the hall, but also of having a reception for residents of Winston and their dates after ball games. At the time in question, there was a reception in progress. It lasted about two hours, and during this time I think it rather polite to provide a restroom for women. In fact one particular restroom had a sign on the door announcing that it was for women ONLY. There were three other restrooms available for men on the first floor alone, and surely it was not too much to ask that men use one of these three and leave the other one free for women. I don't believe that Mr. Cade was forced to use the one and only restroom designated for women. Moreover, the women would probably have been as startled as Mr. Cade said he was if they had seen a man go into their restroom.

As to the man seen walking down the hall with his clothes off, the residents of Winston have been told that during the hours when women are allowed in the social room, the men should behave themselves accordingly. This case must have been one of forgetfulness, for few men, I think, want to deliberately make an exhibition of themselves in front of women.

In the future, Mr. Cade, I think it advisable to use a restroom for men rather than one designated for women and to investigate situations more fully before you criticize and possibly undermine progress that has been made in a positive direction—namely that of allowing men the privilege of having their dates come inside the residence halls.

Now THIS

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Today the power of South Building was once again displayed. The office of the Dean of Men passed a final judgment on the "quality" and type of float to be permitted in the Beat Dook Parade. Admittedly the float had qualities that to some might be gross, but to the majority just pure humor. The proposed float was vetoed on the grounds that it "might put pressure on the University in light of last year's parade." To be sure last year things did get a little out of hand, but why try to go to another extreme?

The University is screaming about the State Legislation controlling the academic life of the University by regulating its speakers. Will someone please point out the difference this "Speaker Ban Bill" and the "Float Ban Bill" that has been imposed upon us by the "Gods of South Building!"

As it now stands the students at Carolina are steadily losing the Lilliputian freedom that we have had. First it was the Apartment Rule, the Student-Faculty Review Board, and now THIS! When will it stop? We should be able to see a few floats, if listening to "communist" speakers will not corrupt us! ! !

The Daily Tar Heel, through the years, has contributed to this tradition with editorials decrying the existence of the fraternity system at UNC, and with the election of Gary Blanchard and Dave Ethridge as editors it was hoped by many that the DTH would adopt a constructive attitude.

But, unfortunately, that hope has faded.

In an editorial Thursday, the co-editors called for a campus-wide referendum on the fraternity system, claiming the student body should vote on three choices: (1) Leave the system as it is, (2) Do away with any fraternity which has discriminatory clauses or "gentlemen's agreements," or (3) Open the system to anyone who wishes to join.

The latter proposal is the one which they favor. Their contention is that it is wrong for the Jews and Negroes of North Carolina to pay taxes to support an institution which recognizes private social discriminatory organizations, therefore the fraternities and sororities which choose to discriminate should either be forced to take anybody or be done away with.

They ask the Student Legislature to authorize a referendum to be presented to the student body, and "The results would dictate whether the fraternity system is to become a truly effective community force, as it is elsewhere, or whether it is to remain the artificial, ingrown order which currently prevails at Carolina."

Would the fraternity system at UNC be a "truly effective community force" if houses were required to take anybody who wanted to join? It seems to me that one has very little to do with the other.

Now, where else is the "total opportunity" fraternity system in operation? The editors cite Brown, Amherst and Dartmouth. At these schools every man who wishes to join a fraternity can do so, as the ones who do not receive a bid are assigned to a house.

The editorial claims that "Many people are not bothered by a fraternity or sorority rejection, but many are cruelly hurt by the rejection . . . (and) . . . in most cases they are the ones who most need the companionship and sense of belonging to a fraternity or sorority can offer."

Does it follow that a person would be happy in a living unit in which his presence is not desired? I think not.

From talking to various acquaintances of mine from the North, I learn that fraternity systems at Brown, Amherst and Dartmouth are not exactly a "vital and constructive force in the whole social pattern." Instead, they are little more than eating clubs in which companionship is merely a facade and community service is nil.

My fraternity has a chapter at Amherst, and several years ago the "total community" system forced them to pledge a Negro. The boy was outstanding in every respect, and served the chapter well during his four years. But this is not to say that it would work at UNC.

I cannot believe that a Negro would fit into any house on this campus and, in many houses, the presence of a Jewish boy would be extremely touchy.

UNC, for all its liberalism, is still a Southern university. It is not Dartmouth, Brown or Amherst. The student body is predominantly conservative, and if the referendum was held the first proposal, "Leave the system as it is," would be the overwhelming winner. Of course, there is no chance that the proposal would ever reach a vote, as it would have to be approved by Student Legislature, and there are very few members of that body who would even consider the measure.

A Negro member of a UNC fraternity is not likely for several years. One house invited three colored students back for every night of this fall's rush, but in the end took no action. It is doubtful that they will change their minds for some time.

If they choose to accept a Negro, it is their right, and the IFC would not consider criticizing them. But it is also the house's right to reject the boys, even if the rejection was only because they were of a different race.

There are many instances in which the rights of Negro citizens have been trampled upon. But one cannot correct these wrongs by trampling upon the rights of private citizens, in this case the members of fraternities and sororities.

When the time comes that a fraternity or sorority is forced to take somebody, that will be the time the fraternity system ceases being any kind of a community force.

A VIEW FROM THE HILL

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

Last weekend we received Enlightenment.

At that time, almost 100 students from the Carolinas and Virginia decended upon N.C.S.-U.N.C.R. (State College) for the long-awaited National Student Association regional conference of 1963. We had always heard of the N.S.A. Now, as a delegate, we were to witness first hand the valuable service it performs for the colleges that support it.

A schedule of seminars, speeches, and panel discussions highlighted the event, instilling in all of those present an acute sense of dedication and responsibility. But, like all good things, it was over much too soon, leaving only poignant memories for the delegates to ponder on. Here are just a few of the inspirational moments that we will remember:

—The keynote address by NSA National Affairs Vice President Joel Sharkey, in which state legislatures, United States Congressmen, teachers, alumni, veterans, and old ladies were chastised for their frequent encroachment upon academic freedom.

—A conversation with Mr. Sharkey, who assured us that the Soviet Union has more freedom than Mississippi.

—The statement: "It sure is interesting to see a conservative here. Of course, I don't agree with a thing you have to say but . . ."

—The circle of Negro and white boys and girls who stood, arms entwined around one another, singing that old folk ballad, "We'll walk cheek to cheek one day."

—The 1:00 a.m. social function at the Carolina Hotel featuring the antics of an inebriated professor from Atlantic Christion College and his protege, a 28-year-old professional student known to the delegates as "Glory Precious."

—The statement: "It sure is interesting to see a conservative here. Of course, I don't agree with a thing you have to say but . . ."

—The eloquent Malakai Greene of Charlotte College who drew spontaneous applause from the fans with his declaration that, "We are a fair body and we are a liberal body!"

The statement: "It sure is interesting to see a conservative here. Of course, I don't agree with a thing you have to say but . . ."

This volume of "The Complete Library of World Art," published by Hawthorn Books is a great boon for the Vermeer fan. It contains all the pictures that can definitely be attributed to Jan Vermeer. An excellent text presents the reader with an ingenious accompaniment to this collection of black and white and color plates. Having the artist's works in one volume as the series is wont to do, provides the reader with a maturing knowledge of each painting and the artist as a person.

Police Nab Two In Frat Thefts

High Point police have brought charges against two youths in connection with a year -long wave of clothing thefts from UNC fraternity houses.

Numa Charles Cranford of High Point and John McKibbins of Philadelphia, Pa., both 20, were arrested Thursday in connection with the wave of burglaries beginning in September 1962, reported Det. Howard Pendergraft.

Pendergraft estimated that about $1,000 worth of clothing had been taken in all. The latest incident occurred Oct. 9 when six pairs of pants were stolen from Tau Epsilon Phi.

Cranford was described as the ringleader of the thieves. Two other suspects are being sought.

Pendergraft said the thieves usually entered the unlocked fraternity houses early in the morning, while the occupants were still asleep. Some of the stolen goods were sold, others were given away, the detective said. Only about $250 worth has been recovered.

Little Change Is Seen By Panel

The policies of the federal government will probably be very much the same under President Lyndon B. Johnson as they were under John F. Kennedy, a panel of political scientists and a historian agreed Friday night.

But the effect of Kennedy's assassination on the nation and the world will not be known for some time yet, the panel agreed.

WUNC-FM which broadcast the special panel discussion Friday night will re-broadcast it again Monday night at 8 p.m.

Others on the panel were John Sanders, director of the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill; Donald R. Matthews, associate professor of political science and Steven Baxter, associate professor of history.

The panel expressed the expectation that the atmosphere of the new administration will be more political and less academic.

"The days of the Harvard professors are numbered," one panelist said.

Scott theorized that the legislative log jam in Congress may break up as the result of Johnson's rise to the Presidency. He suggested Johnson may have a "Presidential honeymoon" for the next few months, resulting in the passage of civil rights legislation and of the tax-cut bill.

Matthews said he thought there was a good chance Senator Barry Goldwater would be practically eliminated from the Presidential race in 1964.

Baxter agreed, saying he thinks Goldwater has already passed his popularity peak and is now on the decline.

The effect of the transition of power on the other nations of the world will depend on what President Johnson does in the next few months, the panel agreed.

Hillard Wants Cooperation

Dr. Robert Hilliard of UNC associate prof of RTVMP has recommended more cooperation between university theatre departments and educational television stations for the production of dramas on television.

In an article entitled "Dramatic Arts Productions on Television: Practices and Attitudes in the Southeast," which appeared in the current "Southern Speech Journal," Dr. Hilliard pointed out that 70 per cent of the theatre departments in southeastern universities and colleges would like to present dramatic productions on television. However, less than 30 per cent have attained their goals. These figures were based on a 10-state survey conducted by Dr. Hilliard in 80 southeastern universities and colleges.

Bob Bennett

Sophomore, 6-8, 205 from Mount Lebanon, Pa. Number one scorer and rebounder on last year's freshman team when he averaged 16.6 points a game.

Providing height UNC so sorely lacked last season, Bennett is expected to be of much help up front for Cunningham and Galantai, etc. A fine shooter with height needed to boost team rebounding, his lack of beef poses question of durability over long haul of season. Big things expected in scoring and rebounding departments.

Jimmy Swithmick

Sophomore 6-4, 190 from Morehead City, N. C. A pleasant surprise last year when he came on strong at end of campaign and contributed a 7.9 average and valuable rebounding.

Injured in early days of practice, Smithwick has come on and continued fine work of end of last season. Big, strong and hard-working, he impresses with good moves underneath and effective rebounding. Must improve defense and shooting is sometimes erratic, but has great potential. A real good jumper.

Johnny Yokley

Sophomore, 6-0, 165 Mount Airy, N. C. Second to Bennett on last year's frosh with scoring average of 11.3. Was Coach Ken Rosemond's outstanding guard prospect for that team.

A prep All-American while at Mounty Airy (the same school which graduated Tar Heel co-captain Mike Cooke), Yokley is quick, speedy and a very accurate shooter. Expected to spell starters in backcourt and give needed ball-handling and passing help. Very quick hands. Improvement on defense will come with experience.

Ray Hassell

Sophomore, 5-11, 165 from Beaufort, N. C. Yokley's runningmate at the guard position last year when he saw action in all frosh games and averaged 7.2 points a game.

Also an All-American high school ballplayer, Hassell is very fast and has improved defensive work tremendously since start of rookie season. A good ball handler, his shot (which strongly resembles former West Virginia star Rod Thorn's two-hand jumper) is off and on. Cousin Pud also on UNC varsity while cousin Butch is starter for Wake Forest.

'Thursday Best Date' Says Coach Of Game

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Jim Hickey called his football team together in Woollen Gym at one o'clock Saturday afternoon —the first meeting for the Tar Heels since the postponement of their game with Duke.

The all-important meeting between the two schools, scheduled for yesterday afternoon at Durham, suddenly became very insignificant with the tragic death of President Kennedy Friday afternoon. The game has been reset for Thanksgiving Day at 2:00 p.m.

In yesterday's meeting, Hickey went over this week's practice schedule with his team. The squad will run in sweat togs this morning (they do this, on their own, every Sunday morning) and will meet on the practice field Monday afternoon at four.

"We will hold a normal 'Wednesday practice' Monday," said Hickey. "This means we will work out from 4 to 6, mainly on running our plays and setting our defenses."

The coach, contacted at his home late yesterday, said that the Tuesday afternoon practice would resemble the drills which his team normally runs through on Thursdays. Hickey said that there would be no formal practice session Wednesday (the day before the game), though his squad may hold a light sweat-suit workout.

"Originally the game was rescheduled for Saturday, but I think the Thanksgiving date is best for all concerned," commented Hickey. "It will give our players some vacation. You know they haven't been home since September 1."

Hickey said he couldn't see either team gaining any special advantage by yesterday's postponement.

"There is of course a big psychological problem involved here," said the coach, "but it is the same for Duke as it is for us. In simplest terms, it is a question of getting the team up again."

The assassination of President Kennedy came as a shock to the players and coaches, just as it did to everyone everywhere. The feeling is that the tragedy itself created as many psychological problems as does the postponement.

There is a possibility that the delay may change Duke's backfield situation. Halfback Billy Futrell and fullback Mike Curtis have both been hobbled by injuries in the past few weeks and it had been doubtful as to whether either could have seen much action Saturday. Whether the delay will enable either of the two to get into the starting line-up remains to be seen. Hickey did not comment on the possibility.

If Futrell and Curtis are held to limited action, the starting Blue Devil backfield will be made up of Scotty Glacken at quarterback, Rich Kraft at fullback, and Jay Wilkinson and Biff Bracy at the halfbacks.

Racial Law Rapped By Local Officials

By JIM NEAL

Sharply contrasting views were the rule Thursday night as the second topic, "Law and Government," of a three-part series on "Desegregation in a Small Southern Town" was discussed on WUNC-FM's "Carolina Roundtable."

The panel did not agree on the value of further racial demonstrations in Chapel Hill, nor on the subject of the proposed public accommodations law.

Mayor pro tem Roland Giduz said he didn't really want to talk about the public accommodations ordinance since it is still under study by the town.

Giduz said the town has gone on record opposing racial segregation, but said he doubts the town has the power to pass a public accommodations law in the first place.

Law Professor Daniel H. Pollitt, who presented a legal brief favoring the law to the Board of Aldermen this summer, said he doesn't think it is necessary now because there are other methods to fight segregation. He suggested the University refuse to use segregated facilities for official functions.

Pollitt disagreed with Dr. Earle Wallace, moderator of the weekly show, that the public accommodations law would be virtually unenforceable, pointing out that 30 states now have public accommodations laws.

Pollitt said that the success of any law depends on the willingness of the people to obey it.

Robert Midgette, assistant judge of Chapel Hill Recorder's Court, said the cure (a public accommodations law) might kill the patient.

"Carolina Roundtable" will present the third in the series on "Desegregation in a Small Southern Town" next Thursday night on WUNC-FM. The discussion will be on the moral and ethical aspects of the desegregation crisis.

Sidle Stars In Auburn Win

AUBURN, Ala. (UPI) — Quarterback Jimmy Sidle scored three touchdowns and took the national rushing lead Saturday while pacing the 10th-ranked Auburn Tigers to a 21-15 victory over Florida State University.

The Tigers, who already have received feelers from the Sugar and Orange bowls, had Gator Bowl scouts watching them notch their eighth win in nine starts with only arch-rival Alabama left on the regular schedule.

Sidle banged across on runs of eight, two and seven yards in the first three periods.

Auburn scored the first two times it got the ball, marching 82 yards in 16 plays through and around the confused Seminole line. Sidle made the last eight yards.

Dean Smith

A 1953 graduate of Kansas University, Head Coach Dean Smith is beginning his third season at the helm of UNC's basketball Tar Heels. Two-year record: 23-15.

A 32-year old native of Emporia, Kan., Smith was on the 1952 Kansas club that became National Champions and the 1953 team that lost in the national finals. As an assistant coach at Kansas, he was on the bench when UNC defeated KU for the NCAA title in 1957.

At UNC, Smith has impressed most as a technical strategist. He helped develop the "point zone" defense that combines the virtues of man-to-man and zone into one operation. His first year he introduced the "shuffle" offense, a constant motion attack that can confuse and befuddle defensive alignments. He learned the basic fundamentals of the offense from its inventor, Oklahoma Coach Bruce Drake.

Dean and Ann Smith have two daughters and a son and they live in the same neighborhood (Ridgefield Road) in Chapel Hill as the Ken Rosemonds.

Ken Rosemond

A 1958 graduate of the University of North Carolina, Assistant Coach Kenneth Walker Rosemond is Dean Smith's right-hand man and also head freshman coach. In addition, he is chief recruiter and head scout.

A 33-year old native of Hillsboro, N. C., Rosemond was a member of UNC's 1957 National Championship team. He had delayed his college education to serve four years in the Navy.

Rosemond so impressed Frank McGuire with his leadership potential that year that McGuire appointed him freshman coach for the season 1957-58. Rosemond then became an assistant coach at the University of South Carolina for a year. But McGuire brought him back to Chapel Hill in 1959 and Rosemond became a full-time staff member as frosh coach and talent recruiter.

When Smith succeeded McGuire in 1959, Rosemond moved up as his assistant. For the past two seasons Don Walsh—former Tar Heel guard and now a second-year law student—has been assisting Rosemond with the freshmen and in scouting assignments.

Rosemond is married and has a young son.

Tennessee's 3 TD Passes Defeat 'Cats

LEXINGTON, Ky. (UPI)—Tennessee's single-wing power sent tailback Mallon Faircloth and fullback Stan Mitchell crashing through gaping holes in Kentucky's line Saturday, but the Volunteers scored all three of their touchdowns by passes in a 19-0 Southeastern Conference football victory.

Two of the Tennessee touchdowns came on passes by second string tailback Hal Wantland, for five yards to wingback Bob Petrella in the first period, and for 17 yards to wingback Billy Tomlinson in the final period.

In the third period, end Buddy Fisher leaped between two Kentucky defenders near the goalposts to come down with a 26-yard high-lob pass from Faircloth.

President Is Buried In Arlington

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

By MERRIMAN SMITH
United Press International

America buried John Fitzgerald Kennedy on Arlington National Cemetery's green slopes Monday, consigning his body to the land he loved and his soul to the God he worshipped.

After the last rites of a funeral Mass that broke the composure of his grieving widow, the martyred President was borne across the Potomac River to the national shrine of honored dead.

There, before the stricken family and before foreign presidents and princes, he found his final rest. An eternal light will burn at the tomb looking out on the Lincoln Memorial.

An estimated 800,000 hushed mourners lined the streets to pay their respects as the slain President was brought from the Capitol to the White House, from there to St. Matthews Cathedral, and at last to the still green cemetery.

Joining the family and all America in its grief were kings, presidents, ministers and princes from nearly every country of the world, Communist as well as free, from Charles de Gaulle of France to Anastas Mikoyan of Russia.

At the grave site, the farewell of "taps" mourning across the Virginia countryside and the crash of rifle volleys in final salute climaxed a day of sounds. The sounds, above all, convinced those who had refused to believe the young President was dead.

There had been the dirges . . . skirling of bagpipes . . . creaking caisson wheels on hushed streets. the muffled drums . . . the sad . . . the cadenced march of military men . . . the sobs of mourners.

She had seen her husband fall before the sniper's bullet Friday, thrice she visited his bier at the Capitol. She bore up her children in their grief and on foot Monday led the half-mile procession to the funeral Mass.

It was only at the cathedral that her grief overwhelmed her in public. Upon leaving the low pontifical Mass, she suddenly bent forward as though in pain, sobbing into her handkerchief.

Her composure may have been broken by her five - year - old daughter Caroline. The child began crying inconsolably as she followed her father's casket from the cathedral.

John Jr., whose third birthday fell on this day of grief, broke into cries within the cathedral and was quickly soothed by his mother. Others wept openly or within.

Under sunny, cloudless skies, but with a chill in the air, the young dead President then was taken across the river and under the trees of Arlington.

There, in sonorous tones, Richard Cardinal Cushing of Boston, who had married "Jack" Kennedy and his beautiful bride 10 years ago, commended his soul to God.

"Let his soul and all the souls of the faithful departed rest in peace," the archbishop prayed.

At the Mass the Cardinal also had offered the reassuring words and promises of the faithful.

"I am the resurrection and the life; he who believes in Me, even if he die, shall live."

Through the funeral hours, bells of churches of every faith were tolled.

Some of the most moving moments of the service came when the Most Rev. Philip Hannan, in the only remarks approaching a eulogy, read from the fallen President's inaugural address and from his favorite biblical passages.

From the third chapter of Ecclesiastes, Bishop Hannan read:

"There is an appointed time for everything under heaven . . . a time to be born and a time

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

WASHINGTON — Before the mourning eyes of the nation and much of the world, John Fitzgerald Kennedy was buried yesterday in Arlington National Cemetery.

The slain president's body began its long trek to Arlington Cemetery early Sunday afternoon when it was moved from the White House to the Capitol Rotunda, where some 250,000 people viewed the flag-draped casket.

When the Rotunda was closed at 9 a.m. yesterday, over 10,000 people, many of them stayed all night outside the Capitol, were turned away.

At 10 a.m. the body was moved quickly to the White House where Mrs. Kennedy and the late President's brothers, Robert and Edward, and a host of mourners joined in a solemn march to St. Matthew's Cathedral, where Archbishop Francis Cardinal Cushing of Boston, a life-long friend of President Kennedy, led those gathered in a Pontifical Mass.

"We pray that John Fitzgerald Kennedy may be spared all punishment and taken into paradise," Cardinal Cushing said.

Following the Pontifical Mass, a long procession of automobiles bearing the bereaved family and other mourners moved slowly toward Arlington Cemetery.

The coffin was covered by an American flag, and drawn on a black caisson pulled by six grey horses. Following the caisson was a riderless horse with its stirrups inverted symbolizing the death of a fallen leader. The horse, Sadar, is the one used personally by Mrs. Kennedy.

Joining in the drive to Arlington was the largest group of international leaders that has ever convened in Washington.

Among them were French President Charles DeGaulle, King Baudouin of Belgium, Emperor Haile Salassie of Ethiopia, and the prime Ministers of most of America's allies, including British Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home.

Surrounding these mourners were other mourners—over three hundred thousand of them, standing on drugstore roofs, on the tops of buildings, peering from office windows—trying to get a final look at the late President. Many of them had slept on the streets all night in the freezing Washington weather.

All of these—the young, the old, the big, the little; people of all races, creeds, and colors—all of them lined up for miles in common purpose and common prayer.

THE CAISSON bearing the body of President Kennedy moves into National Cemetery in Arlington, Virginia yesterday afternoon following a Low Pontifical Requiem Mass in Washington's St. Matthew's Cathedral.

Packed House Here Pays Tribute To Kennedy

Memorial Hall Services Attract Over 2,000 Here

They came alone, or in groups of two or three. Silently, reverently they filed into Memorial Hall. A freshman from Chicago, a junior from Massachusetts. White and Negro, Catholic and Protestant and Jew. Bold fraternity men with tears in their eyes, uniformed cadets and midshipmen, a girl who lovingly touched the cross around her neck.

With them came the President of the University, dozens of professors, and those of lesser posts from all over the campus. Between them, they jammed Memorial Hall to the rafters in a solemn tribute to a man whom most of them had come to know almost personally—John Fitzgerald Kennedy, Thirty-fifth President of the United States.

Thus as the world paused from its daily toil to mourn yesterday, the University of North Carolina paused also.

"... And may the nations see
That men should brothers be,
And form one family
The wide world o'er.

They answered the call of the President for every American to enter his chosen place of divine worship and offer prayers for the Kennedy family and the nation, and to pay humble tribute to "a great and good man."

... O God, our help in ages past,
Our hope for years to come,
Be Thou our guard while life shall last,
And our eternal home."

Forgetting their prejudices and their differences, they voiced their common sadness, their heartfelt sympathy, and their youthful confidence in the future.

"... God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the Earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea."

They heard themselves called upon to uphold his ideals of liberty, and justice, and strong faith. They asked God for the strength to do so.

"... From prejudice of race and color, making schism in the commonwealth; from all inequity that, causing a few to be rich and many poor, begets ill will and spoils fraternity; from loss of liberties bequeathed us by our sires and from careless acceptance of our heritage and neglect of its responsibilities, Good Lord, deliver us."

And then, as quickly as they had come, they went away. Each to his own thoughts, his own faith, his own understanding, united still, however, by a common prayer.

Oswald's Body Is Taken For Immediate Burial

DALLAS (UPI)—The body of Lee Harvey Oswald, guarded by determined police and trained dogs, was taken from a Fort Worth funeral home Monday for immediate burial.

Paul J. Goody, director at the Miller Funeral Home where Oswald was taken, said he hoped that "nobody would be that low" as to try to mutilate the body. But the guard was there.

"Even Oswald is entitled to a decent burial," he said.

Oswald was placed in a hearse for the trip to Rose Hill Cemetery and a simple graveside service at 1:30 p.m., just 25 minutes before President Kennedy was buried in Arlington National Cemetery.

Jack Ruby, Dallas night club operator who had shown more interest in pretty showgirls than politics, shot Oswald to death before a national television audience Sunday as police brought him out of city jail cell.

Ruby's attorney, Tom Howard, said he would plead temporary insanity for the one-time Chicago street brawler.

District Attorney Henry Wade said he would try to send Ruby to the electric chair.

"I will seek the death penalty for Ruby even if he pleads guilty, because shooting a handcuffed man deserves the death penalty," Wade said.

Ruby, 52, was hustled through the business district from the city jail to the county jail a mile away just before noon Monday.

He successfully made the trip that cost Oswald his life after he was rushed into a white unmarked car by two detectives.

It was the trip Oswald had started Sunday. Then, Ruby leaped out of a crowd of newsmen at 8 p.m.

Congress Begins Biggest Job Yet

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress began picking up its seemingly endless 1963 legislative burden Monday even as it joined in the nation's last tribute to President John F. Kennedy.

The full resumption of remaining critical business was not likely until after President Johnson has addressed Wednesday's joint session. Congressional experts hoped the new President might offer some guidance on his own sense of priorities on tax relief, civil rights and other pending major bills.

The turn-about from shock and sorrow to normal activity began Monday morning when the Senate Banking Committee rejected a bill that the late President opposed involving the Soviet wheat deal.

By a vote of 8-7 the committee recommended against passage of the measure, but sent it to the floor.

It would prohibit the government from underwriting loans for the expected $250 million grain purchase by Communist bloc nations.

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield indicated earlier he would press to have the Senate itself dispose of the grain bill before it takes its Thanksgiving holiday starting Wednesday night.

The broader problems of civil rights and taxes, barring some surprise declaration by President Johnson, were certain to be put over until the new year.

Most senior lawmakers felt Congress should pass the remaining appropriation bills as quickly as possible and quit until early January.

Washington: A Long Day In A Sad City

By GARY BLANCHARD

WASHINGTON — It was 2 o'clock Monday morning.

We had just returned from The Capitol, where a sea of people were shivering in an icy wind, waiting to pay their final respects to the late President.

In our hotel lobby the television camera was bringing the Capitol scene to us, despite the hour.

The mighty had had their turn earlier, Sunday afternoon, and would have their turn again when daylight came, and the body was removed from the Capitol, followed by the funeral at St. Matthews Cathedral, then internment in Arlington National Cemetery.

But now it was the people's turn . . . people of every size and shape and color, little people huddled sleeping against their fathers' shoulders . . . larger people, wrapped in blankets and other assorted coverings, crowding close to each other in search of warmth.

The people, yes. Predominantly young — the teens and twenties—but older too, some very old indeed, standing in the night ten and twelve abreast for block after block after block, their faces lit by the harsh glare of streetlights.

Some had been there for seven hours and more already, stopping, waiting, then moving forward a block, only to stop and wait again, as if eternity were the path they were traveling.

Others, more fortunate, had had their turn at filing up the Capitol's thirty-six steps, then through the Rotunda in fast-moving streams, past the catafalque bearing the flag-draped body of the young American President.

Others had come even closer to history. They had been there when the President's widow returned to the Rotunda for a few brief moments about 9 o'clock Sunday night, accompanied by the President's most trusted confidante, his brother Robert, the Attorney General.

Still others would never realize their ambition. They were the ones who either fainted in the cold and waiting and were borne away to a nearby hospital, or were so far back in the human stream that the doors of the Rotunda would be closed when their turn came. But they waited nevertheless.

Now, nearly 3 a.m., Washington resembled a hurricane in reverse. The city proper and its suburbs were quiet, but the eye of the emotional hurricane —the Capitol—bulged with torrents of cars and buses, moving slowly, their headlights silhouetting the masses who were walking and waiting.

Downtown, past the big white house at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, an intermittent stream of cars moved slowly along, their occupants noticing the closed iron gates, the policemen scattered around the grounds, the black velvet draped above the main entrance, the few lights at windows here and there.

Back in the Rotunda of the Capitol, the fragrance of innumerable bouquets of flowers hung in the air, the Honor Guard stood stiffly at Parade Rest, and the people passed, wiping away tears, hushing wide-eyed children, clicking cameras, shuffling reluctantly back out into the night, aware that this was the closest most of them would ever come to history.

Down the mall stretching before the Capitol, a red light atop the Washington Monument blinked at planes bringing dignitaries from all over the world to the center of homage, and down on a point of the city, looking out on it all, the brooding figure of Lincoln stared out into the darkness surrounded by words about binding up the nation's wounds. Across a watery tract nearby, the figure of Jefferson stood, swearing eternal hostility to every form of tyranny over the mind of man, and still the people came to watch and wait, and suddenly the tears you had thought were spent flooded forth anew, and the night was incredibly sad.

THESE UNC STUDENTS joined with hundreds of others yesterday to offer their prayers for the Kennedy family and the nation, and to pay tribute to John F. Kennedy. They were part of a huge audience of all faiths which gathered in respect to the late President.

Was This A Debt The Nation Owed?

Now that the muffled drums have ceased to beat, what are we left with?

First, there are the inescapable questions which cry for answers if we are to live with what has happened to us. Why was Jack Rubenstein in the Dallas Police Station? How did he get there and how was it that he was allowed to stay long enough to commit his murder? How is it possible that the Dallas police have closed the case on Oswald when so many questions surrounding the President's assassination remain unanswered? What is the startling proof against Oswald of which the Dallas District Attorney spoke?

Few people in the country doubt Oswald's guilt, but the full story must not remain obscured by his death. Too much is at stake for us as a nation to allow the questions to go unanswered.

But there are larger questions which should be of concern to us all at this time also. Why did Lee Harvey Oswald spend more than 18 hours in police custody before the Dallas Bar Association offered legal council? If our system of justice is what we say it is, should anyone, under any circumstances, be questioned by police for any length of time without the benefit of a lawyer?

If we are to be a just nation, must we not move with the most care in just this type of case?

And when we answer all these questions, what lessons are there to be learned from the whole tragedy? Shall we accept Camus' verdict that everything is absurd and let it go at that, or shall we learn? We ask, What was the magnitude of the shot in Dallas? Was it as loud as the shot at Concord, Mass.? Was it as loud as the shot at Sarajevo? And what did we learn from them?

Shall we again learn that all we learn from history is that we learn nothing from history, or must we now learn? If our nation is to prevail, are we not compelled to learn?

But what are the lessons?

Do we blame one unbalanced man for an isolated incident? Do we say that violence on the right is counteracted by violence on the left, and that only these two extremes are to blame for creating an atmosphere of hate so great that one unstable man is able to transfer the hate and thoughts of revenge into an act of revenge?

Could we let ourselves off easily and say that the whole society is to blame, but then except ourselves, saying, "But my words and deeds are blameless in the matter?" Maybe we can, but if we do, we must fully understand that we are speaking of acts of omission, not comission. And then how many of us can claim innocence?

Is the President's death the enormous price extracted from us for our silence in the past? Have we too long been silent? When we bemoan an act of violence, do we bemoan loudly and passionately enough to later assert in good consience that we did not just unwillingly but quietly accept the act?

And if we find an answer in these questions, if we agree that violence and hate have infested and are festering in the blood stream of America, then we must come to the inevitable question.

How does an individual change the national character? How can I, one person, change the course of American history?

Maybe you don't. But if all of us stop quietly accepting things we are unwilling to accept, if we raise holy hell when an act revolts us, if we stretch our vision of America and work for that vision, we just may be able to pull it off. But to do so our commitments must be total, not tacit any longer. Tacit commitments are no commitments at all: they are only conscience-salving grants of permission for the occurence of those acts which we so deplore.

Senator Mike Mansfield's Eulogy

"There was a sound of laughter; in a moment, it was no more. And so, she took a ring from her finger and placed it in his hands.

"There was a wit in a man neither young nor old; but a wit of an old man's wisdom and of a child's wisdom, and, then, in a moment it was no more. And, so she took a ring from her finger and placed it in his hands.

"There was a man marked with the scars of his love of country, a body active with the surge of a life far, far from spent and, in a moment, it was no more. And so, she took a ring from her finger and placed it in his hands.

"There was a father with a little boy, a little girl and a joy of each in the other. In a moment it was no more, and so she took a ring from her finger and placed it in his hands.

"There was a husband who asked much anod gave much, and, out of the giving and the asking, wove with a woman what could not be broken in life, and, in a moment it was no more. And so, she took a ring from her finger and placed it in his hands, and kissed him and closed the lid of a coffin.

"A piece of each of us died at that moment. Yet, in death he gave of himself to us. He gave us of a good heart from which the laughter came. He gave us of a profound wit, from which a great leadership emerged. He gave us of a kindness and a strength fused into a human courage to seek peace without fear.

"He gave us of his love that we, too, in turn, might give. He gave that he might give of ourselves, what he might give to one another until there would be no room, no room at all, for the bigotry, the hatred, prejudice and arrogance which converged in that moment of horror to strike him down.

"In leaving us—these gifts, John Fitzgerald Kennedy, President of the United States, leaves with us. Will we take them, Mr. President? Will we have, now, the sense and the responsibility and the courage to take them?"

Ecclesiates 3:1-9

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:

A time to be born and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted;

A time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up;

A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance;

A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and a time to refrain from embracing;

A time to get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away;

A time to rend, and a time to sew; a time to keep silence, and a time to speak;

A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war and a time of peace.

"With a good conscience our only sure reward, with history the final judge of our deeds, let us go forth to lead the land we love . . ."

John F. Kennedy—Inaugural Addres

1865—A President Dies
1963—A Similar Event

Ed. Note—The assassination of President John F. Kennedy was on Friday, November 22, 1963. On Friday, April 14, 1865, 98 years ago, President of the United States Abraham Lincoln was slain while watching a play in the Ford Theatre in Washington. The following is taken from the diary of John C. Kimball, a Unitarian minister in Beverly, Massachusetts, written at the time of Lincoln's death.

Saturday, April 15—Very pleasant morning. At half past eight Em and I walk up to the post office together. On our way hear the rumor that President was assassinated last night and Secretary Seward critically wounded. It seemed too incredible for belief, especially as so many startling stories are now floating in the air. Nevertheless hurrying to the reading room in the Picketts' building, there to our horror we found the horrible statement confirmed in all the morning papers. The assault on the President was made last night by an actor named Booth . . .

Later — The news now comes that President Lincoln died this morning a little after seven o'clock. He was entirely insensible from the time the bullet struck him 'til he breathed his last. John Wilkes Booth is the murderer and so far has escaped. The horrible event has aroused a feeling profounder than anything else which has occurred in the whole war. The bells are tolling; the flags at half mast, and the nation so recently wild with rejoicing is plunged into the bitterest grief. No one, not even the most thorough-going copperhead can be found to justify the deed. It is only two days since Mr. Lincoln made a speech full of kindness and the most generous consideration to the defeated South, and now this is the return he gets.

Sunday, April 16. Easter. Beautiful weather, but an awful pall over the whole land. Preached this morning on the Resurrection . . .. My prayer and the latter part of the sermon had reference to the terrible event whose weight is on all hearts. How much sadder would his death be if we had to think it was the end of his whole being! What a comfort to know that in other worlds he will see the fruition of what has been so nobly begun here in time. This afternoon I spoke extempore on James 1:15. Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death, the moral significance of the assassination. Many good people at the North had thought Slavery was a very innocent sort of sin. They had spent a few weeks on some plantation at the South, and had been struck with the gaiety of the slaves, the generosity of the slaveholder, and the bright and gaudy side of the peculiar institution, and had come back and laughed at those who were proclaiming its dark and more dreadful features. The nation had really nothing to fear from it. It was the dreadful abolitionists, the fanatics who insisted in applying the Golden Rule and the Sermon on the Mount and the parable of the Good Samaritan to people in our own times—these that were the dangerous element in our nation's life. And when Charles Sumner delivered his oration on the barbarism of slavery in Congress, it was thought to be an insult to the South.

For four years now we had been realizing the truth of our text. The institution did indeed have its bright and gaudy flowers, have its thousand aspects which in themselves were beautiful and harmless, but the words of the Bible are not that sin at its beginning or middle, but when it is finished bringeth forth death. Slavery was one of those plants which it takes years, sometimes ages, to ripen, but the result when it comes is not the less certain. The President's murder in the larger sense is not a sudden freak, not a thing we had no right to expect, not a crime of which Booth alone is guilty. It is the legitimate fruit of the plant which the whole land for eighty years has been nourishing, is but the culmination of long series of deeds, some of them acts which Massachusetts as well as South Carolina has helped to perform. And while we condemn and punish Booth and Payne and the whole band of conspirators by whose hands the deed was immediately done let us remember that they themselves are only the foul products of something which is far worse and not stop till the whole plant, root and branch, is torn up from our soil. And this whole dreadful matter has a moral lesson in regard to all sin, that in the individual as well as in the nation. Because at first it may not do any harm, because for awhile its results may seem to be only more pleasure, wealth, and power, let us not therefore be deceived and think that in our case we can violate the law of righteousness with impunity . ..

Monday, April 17. The murderers not yet arrested, though detectives are on their track and every effort is being made to find them. Secretary Seward is still in a critical condition. Mr. Johnson, Vice President, was immediately inaugurated President on the death of Lincoln. He is a Tennessee man, and there is some question about his drinking habits, as well as about the thoroughness of his statesmanship. He was nominated, as Vice-Presidents usually are, as a sort of sectional compromise, is not by any means the kind of man who we had in Abraham Lincoln. But he starts well and everybody is inclined to give him good wishes, some even to think that just because he is not so large-hearted as Lincoln he will prove all the better fitted to deal with the rebels. Time will tell.

Wednesday, April 19. The day appointed for the funeral services throughout the country over our beloved President. I spoke of . . . the millions of other hearts mingling their grief with ours, of the fitness that those who during the war had been called upon to mourn in separate groups over their loved ones should now at its close blend their bereavement together over a common loss; of the vividness with which the personality of the President had been brought before us all through his administration so that everyone seemed to have a direct acquaintance with him . . . of his honesty, good sense, genial humor, broad and comprehensive patriotism and naturally religious spirit, of his capacity for learning new lessons with every crisis in our affairs, so that there was no danger of his proving too lenient and soft-hearted towards the rebels, and finally of the fact that the best way to avenge his death was not merely by the punishment of the guilty wretches by whom it was brought about, though this ought to be done, but by securing more completely the triumph of those everlasting principles which even more than at himself their blow was aimed.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Our Greatest

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Other generations have had their great men, their Washingtons, or Roosevelts, or Churchills etc. and have taken pride in being contemporaries of these men and benefitting from their leadership.

Certainly the greatest and most capable man of our generation up to this time fell before an assassin's bullet on Friday. The nation and the world mourn his death, but people will never really know the true magnitude of their loss.

John F. Kennedy will long live within the hearts of many of us.

Why Classes?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The horrible, untimely death of John Fitzgerald Kennedy was definitely the most shocking event which has occurred in the lifetime of 180,000,000 fellow Americans. Observing the faces of the students at the University of North Carolina yesterday afternoon and this morning is definitely a grave indication of this fact. Most classes yesterday and today were called off, as the terrifying, initial shock permitted nothing but a garble of unconnected thoughts to pass through the minds of most students and professors. Watching television or listening to the reports on the radio did nothing to dispell the feeling of utter despair; in fact, it increased it. Lyndon Johnson, in one of his first official acts as the newly-sworn in President of the United States, proclaimed Monday, November 25, 1963, as an official day of mourning throughout the country, to be observed in prayer, in silent tribute, or in any manner we Americans so choose.

Why, then, except for two hours in the middle of the day, have classes at the University remained scheduled? Is this the way President Johnson intended his fellow Americans to observe a day of mourning for the 35th President of the United States?

A Devoted Son

Editors, The Tar Heel,

It seems utterly inconveivable that the same country which produced such a great statesman and patriot as President Kennedy could have produced also his assassin. While we, with all the world, weep bitterly and uncomprehendingly for our incalculable loss, we are forced regrettably to conclude, or to remind ourselves, that we live in dangerously troubled times, lawless times, and here, indeed, is the ultimate symptom of our national disease, We are forced, alas, to face the inevitable facts of national life, namely, that while there are supreme examples of sacrifice and martyrdom, there are also examples of disloyalty and treachery; that while there are those Americans who, like the late President, are willing to yield up their lives in favor of that which is best for their country, there are also those heartless, mindless, conscienceless wretches who would sacrifice the country in behalf of their selfish, senseless whims.

Already it has happened four four times in American history; it must never be allowed to happen again. Ironcially enough President Kennedy was bushwhacked during a period when open. unprotected appearances by Presidents in public is no longer absolutely necessary. Through the miracle of radio and television the President can now safely enter every home in America—most of them almost at will. It should not be hard to see now that the traditional business of handshaking, and personal contact with the citizenry should be dispensed with forever.

As for the spirit of this great champion of human rights and human dignity, it will never die So long as there be an America, there will be the spirit of this, one of its most devoted sons. His image, like that of Abraham Lincoln, and other all-time greats, will be etched forever in the hearts and upon the conscience of all freedom-loving men.

Maturity Needed

Editors, The Tar Heel,

This afternoon, November 22, former President Kennedy passed away. Over the Chapel Hill campus, due shock, respect, and mourning were generally apparent.

At Lenoir Hall, a few hours later, one dinner table was occupied by a University instructor and a woman, who spent their dinner hour discussing this significant event in a rather jovial manner. It was clear that, due to their political viewpoint, they saw no tragedy in this national loss. Callinng this "a great day," the two proceeded to remark that the assassin had "every right to shoot the President because he hated his guts." In answering a student's question, as to holding of Saturday classes, the instructor said that of course his eight o'clock class would be held and that he was "even considering passing out free beer."

Had this noisy twosome no consideration for the less jubilant people around them? Should not a University instructor have enough maturity to display his opinions more discreetly And, above all, should political views alter personal respect for a human being, especially for a President of the United States, the leader of a great country?

Deep Apologies

Editors, The Tar Heel,

We, the members of Pi Lambda Phi fraternity, wish to offer our deepest apologizies to the University and the citizens of Chapel Hill for the actions of some of our fellow members in the fraternity system last Friday. We feel that their reactions to President Kennedy's assassination, regardless of their political differences with the Kennedy administration, were as un-American as they were uncivil. The President's murder was perhaps the rankest descration of Democracy in America, and to greet it with jubilation is an absolute disavowal of the American way of life.

We would beg that those offended try not to judge the entire fraternity system by the actions of a few, and understand the majority of those in the fraternity system do neither approve nor condone such actions.

Pope Paul's Message To His People

United Press International

VATICAN CITY—Pope Paul VI made a statement to an audience of 30,000 persons assembled in St. Peter's Square to receive the regular Sunday papal blessing.

"Very dear children, we cannot in this moment of common prayer take our thought, a sad thought, away from the crime that in these days has aroused the deploration of the entire world," the pope said.

"Our thought, after that of suffrage for he who is missing from this life, is of comfort to those who remain in sorrow and regret.

"It detects how great a capacity for hate and evil there is still in the world and how great a threat to civil order and peace, and also how much need there is of the grace of God, his mercy and his pardon."

"Thus we pray as Jesus taught us: Lead us not into temptation ,and free us from evil."

Oswald crumpled with a sigh. He was rushed to Parkland Hospital, where President Kennedy had been taken two days before, and died without saying a word.

The case against Oswald was closed as far as Wade and Dallas police were concerned. They said they had more than enough evidence against him to send him to the electric chair for Kennedy's assassination.

Secret Service agents and the FBI, however, still were investigating.

Wade said his office would continue to investigate any possibility of a link between Ruby and Oswald "if there is any."

The prime piece of evidence against Oswald was believed to be a map found in his rented room which showed the route of Kennedy's motorcade. It was a "blueprint" for assassination—and showed the path of the bullets that killed Kennedy.

This evidence was revealed:

—His palm prints were on the metal butt of the murder rifle and on a box in the room of the building where he worked and from where the assassin fired.

—Paraffin tests revealed he had fired a gun.

—Witnesses saw Oswald in the building before and immediately before and after Kennedy was killed.

—Witnesses saw him shoot Tippitt.

—Photographs showed him with the rifle which killed Kennedy and the pistol which killed Tippitt.

—Oswald's Russian wife admitted he owned such a rifle. It was missing. He admitted he owned the pistol.

—He was an expert marksman.

—The rifle was ordered from Chicago under an assumed name but in his handwriting.

—Serial numbers of the rifle traced it back to Oswald.

—When tracked down by police in a movie, he tried to shoot another policeman but the gun jammed.

—A neighbor unaccustomedly drove Oswald to work the day Kennedy was killed and he carried an oblong package he said contained window shades. Police said it was the rifle.

—He wrote a threatening letter to Gov. John Connally, former secretary of the Navy, saying he would "employ all means" to get even for a wrong he believed done to him as a Marine misfit.

Men's Residence Ready By 1965?

By JEAN HICKMAN

Hope is in sight for men living in crowded rooms—for the fall of 1965.

That's when the new men's residence hall "hopefully" will be completed, according to University Business Manager J. A. Branch.

The eight-story structure is designed to house 925 men. Should bids be favorable, Branch said, a nine-story building may be constructed within the $2,544,000 loan approved last week by the Community Facilities Administration of the Housing and Home Finance Agency in Washington.

The 40-year loan will be repaid from student room rent, but room rents will not be raised to meet it, he said.

The new residence hall is to be located between Craige and Kenan Stadium. Graves and Toy, of Charlotte, the same architectural firm which designed Craige and Ehringhaus, designed it along the same general plan, Branch said. Some structural changes have been made to accommodate the added height and some "minor refinements for better living quarters."

Branch says that before construction can begin, the architect has to submit preliminary plans and specifications to the Dept. of Administration for review. The Department will make suggestions for additions or changes which will then be incorporated into the original plan.

When the plans are approved, advertisements will be received, within a 30-day period. The administration then has a 30-day period to consider the bids and award a contract.

According to Branch, this process should take about 90 days.

Plans for the new building began when architect Terry Waugh was asked to submit proposals for new dormitories. He suggested building either 12 conventional dormitories or 3 high-rise ones.

According to Branch, the latter plan was adopted to accommodate the land shortage and "preserve the natural beauty" of the campus.

Craige and Ehringhaus were built with the help of state funds, and plans were made to borrow many from the national government for the third.

Legislature Defeats Expulsion Penalty

By HUGH STEVENS

Student Legislature, in a roll call vote, defeated by 27-10 the proposal to extend the penalty of expulsion to the Men's and Women's Councils. The action came after lengthy debate in Thursday night's regular session.

The body heard testimony from Whitney Durand and Carolyn Pinion, chairman of the two councils, and Mike Lawler, student body president.

Durand and Miss Pinion asked for the penalty in order to have a punishment suitable for the "rare sort of instance" in which a person may be a detriment to the University and the Honor Code.

Lawler called for defeat of the issue, saying it conflicted with the "educational purpose of the honor system."

"I do not feel that students, faculty, or administration are justified, even in the most extreme cases in completely severing the ties between a student and this University.

Dick Ellis also spoke against the penalty, saying that he felt "no student group has the clairvoyance and the wisdom to decide that a person is absolutely irredeemable."

Phil Baddour, chairman of the Judicial Committee, earlier reported the issue out favorably to the legislature. Woody Harrison told the body about a number of informal polls which had been taken on campus, saying the results were generally unfavorable to expulsion.

The body was polled following Harrison's remarks, and the issue was defeated.

In other action, the legislature unanimously endorsed a resolution commending the Carolina football team and urging Student Government and University officials to seek the broadcast of the Duke game by Broadvision.

A preliminary clause stated the request for television was brought on because "a large portion of the UNC student body will not be able to see the game against Duke."

Billfolds Taken From Three Halls

The theft of a number of billfolds from three University residence units Sunday night became the latest instances in a series of thefts which have plagued the community since last September.

Anthony Hall, Ruffin Hall, and Ehringhaus Hall reported the loss of wallets and an undetermined amount of money apparently taken from the rooms as the occupants slept. Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont believes that the same person is responsible in each instance.

The residents of room 322 in Ehringhaus woke at about 12:30 a.m. to find a colored man standing at the entrance to the room. Pretending to be delivering boxes of fried chicken, the man apoligized for entering the wrong room and made a quick exit. Thirty eight dollars was reported missing from two wallets the next morning.

"If people leave their doors open when they leave the room, they deserve to have something stolen," Beaumont said. "Everyone was warned about this when he came here But when people break into your room while you're asleep, it's a different story. This has got to be stopped."

The Police have a "pretty good description of the burglar, said Beaumont. Investigation of the incidents is not yet complete.

- President Buried -

to die . . . a time to plant and a time to root up . . . a time to weep and a time to laugh . . ."

Throughout the day there were vivid pictures that would remain in memory.

President Lyndon B. Johnson, thrust into the White House in one swift moment, standing almost concealed among the graveside mourners.

Air Force bagpipers, moving in grave step, to the slow strains of "When the Mist Covered the Mountain."

Mrs. Mamie Eisenhower weeping for Jacqueline Kennedy with eyes wet and red.

And always throughout the capital, along all routes of procession, were the silent, sympathetic people.

They were there hours before Mrs. Kennedy and other members of the official party emerged from the White House to join her husband's body at the Capitol where it had lain in state throughout the night.

An estimated 140,000 people had passed by the bier before the casket had to be taken away.

They lined the route as the horse-drawn caisson carrying the flag draped casket moved slowly back to the White House.

It was there that Mrs. Kennedy, leaving her limousine, began the pilgrimage on foot to the cathedral. By her side were the President's brothers, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and Sen. Edward Kennedy.

Following her were the invited 1,200 for the Mass. Among those on foot were such men as De Gaulle, President Johnson, Prince Philip of Britain, King Badouin of Belgium, 82-year-old President Eamon de Valera of Ireland and Mikoyan.

Within the church, there were no flowers on the altar, before which rested the casket.

The pontifical requiem Mass, a moving service for the dead, lasted more than an hour.

At the end, Cardinal Cushing extended the invitation to communion. Mrs. Kennedy and more than a dozen other members of the Kennedy family knelt at the communion rail.

From the church the casket was taken to Arlington on the caisson which had borne it through the city streets these last two sorrowing days.

So long was the procession of limousines in the funeral cortege that the graveside services were under way before the last was able to arrive.

There, in the shadow of the onetime mansion of Robert E. Lee, came the 21-gun salute, the three volleys of musketry by the firing party, and the sad sound of "taps."

As Mrs. Kennedy stepped from her limousine, there was a sounding of "ruffles and flourishes" follow by the National Anthem.

At that point, the bagpipe unit sounded its dirge and the casket was removed from the caisson and borne to the grave.

As Mrs. Kennedy walked toward the grave she held to the hand of Robert Kennedy. They took their positions before the casket.

Behind them ranged the other mourners.

Early in the services fifty jet fighter planes swept over in a salute to the defeated commander-in-chief. They were followed by "Air Force One," the jet transport that carried the President to Dallas and brought his body back.

After a silent ceremonial by Irish guards flown from Ireland, came the final ceremonies—the blessing of the grave and the prayers.

Time has no meaning to Mercedes-Benz.

The year-to-year obsolescence of most automobiles inevitably leads to a heavy annual depreciation. This high cost of staying in "style" is something you just don't encounter with Mercedes-Benz.

Drive about in one and you find people may ask what model it is, but never what year. Superficial style changes seldom occur inside or out. Modifications are made only when they are consistent with the traditional character and reputation of Mercedes-Benz.

For example, the new 4-speed automatic transmission, designed and built by Daimler-Benz, is the most advanced, widely acclaimed engineering feat ever conceived.

This is just one more reason why Mercedes-Benz has remained the symbol of motorcar prestige for over 75 years in over 150 countries.

There are 11 models, from sleek sports roadsters to the stately 300 Sedan, from $3844 to $13,000, for you to choose from.

European delivery of a Mercedes-Benz will double the fun of your overseas trip and pay a substantial part of your expenses.

Dolphins' Front Line May Be Finest Ever

By PERRY McCARTHY

For the past six years, Coach Pat Earey and his swimmers have established an impressive record—winning or sharing the conference crown four times. This year Coach Earey anticipates the finest group of front line men ever.

Included among these are senior co-captain and two time All-American Thompson Mann in the backstroke and individual medley; Harrison Merrill, winner of three first places in last year's conference meet and also an All-American; the other senior co-captain Mike Bissell, and newcomer John Sheldon in the distance freestyle races.

Other standouts are sprinters Davis Roberts, Chip Smith, Thad Adams, and Scott Taylor; and sophomores Rick Forum and Fred Lipp in the breaststroke and butterfly. With this nucleus, the '63-64 tankers should provide stiff dual-meet competition. However, a lack of depth will handicap the team in championship meets where six places are awarded.

Coach Earey will find out quickly just what this year's Dolphins can do. After a home meet with VMI (Dec. 3) both varsity and freshman teams travel to Princeton and Navy—two top-notch Eastern powers.

Last year UNC dropped both meets by slight margins—losing to Princeton only by a touch and to Navy by a relay disqualification. Chances to return with two victories appear as good, if not better, again this year.

Coach Earey summed up the opposition by saying, "Princeton has the same kind of a team we do, outstanding front line and little depth. They may lack the freestyle strength we have. Navy's strong team remains virtually intact.

This plus last year's fine freshmen team (best in the Academy's history), will give them additional strength. We hope we may be in a little better shape this early in the season."

To date, several spots have shown brightly in practice. Coached by Connie Steele, divers Earnie Oare and Dave Moody rate with the conference's best. The two fine All-Americans Mann and Merrill are now doing times near their best of last season; both appear poised for a splendid season and national recognition.

Three sophomores (John Sheldon, Rick Forum and Fred Lipp) have been very impressive. Former UNC breast stroke record holder, Tom Cannon, now a law student is grooming Robert Burns, Joe Lea, Richard Boardman and Forum in this event. Chip Smith has improved tremendously in the sprints.

Supplying additional strength will be Ron Murray, Fleming Straughan, Joe Mummaw, Mike Barnes, Irwin Brilliant, Bob Engler, Sam Hill, and Bert Marshall.

"We should have a strong dual meet record if everybody stays well," concluded Coach Earey. He could easily have added, though he did not, that UNC's record book is apt to be rewritten time and again by this year's Dolphins. We'll find out soon.

All-Campus Football

By AL KAPLAN

Here are the three All-Campus Football Teams, picked by the officials and staff of the Department of Intramurals.

Dorm division: Quarterback: Ted Hoehn, (Emerson); halfbacks: Felda Hightower, (Alexander), Tom Hendley, (Aycock); Fullback: Jim Hardison, (Alexander); Ends: Bobby Cox, (Emerson), Bob Cornwell, (Alexander); Guards: Ozie Faisson, (Craige B), Maurice Sills, Navy; Center: Tom Wright.

Grad division: Quarterback: Charlie Jonas, (Law School); Halfbacks: Joe McLamb, (Med School), Billy Hubbard, (Med School); Fullback: John Currie, (Med School); Ends: Bill Jarman, (Med School), Bob Bilbro, (Med School); Guards: Marshall Simpson, (Law School), Sam Sullivan, (Physics); Centers: Jim Johnson, (Law School).

Two meet records were the highlights of the All-Campus Swimming Meet, held last Thursday.

Pete Worthen of DKE, who had set a record in the mural track meet (discus) earlier this year, shaved one second off the old record of 23.3 seconds in winning the 50-yard Freestyle.

The other record came when George Rider of Alexander won the 50-yard backstroke on his time of 29.1 seconds—1.6 seconds better than the old record.

Everett dorm, with a total of 58.0 team points, won team honors. Second was Phi Kap Sig on 51.5 points, followed by Beta, 44.5, Alexander, 40, and DKE, 37.

Wilkinson Is First Team All-American

Jay Wilkinson, Duke halfback from Norman, Okla., was chosen Monday to the first team of United Press International's All-America. Bob Lacey, North Carolina's outstanding end, was not mentioned on any of the first three teams.

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Midwest, with three players, dominated the 1963 college All-America football team announced Monday by the American Football Coaches Association.

The Far West, the Southwest and the Midlands each placed two players on the mythical 11 while there was one representative each from the East and South. Only the Rockies, of the seven football geographical sections of the nation, were shutout.

Center Dick Butkus of Illinois, tackle Carl Eller of Minnesota and end Jim Kelly of Notre Dame were the Midwest stars named to the team.

From the Far West came end Vern Burke of Oregon State and guard Dick Redman of Washington; from the Southwest, tackle Scott Appleton of Texas and fullback Tommy Crutcher of Texas Christian, while the players from the Midlands were guard Bob Brown of Nebraska and halfback Gale Sayers of Kansas.

The all-star team was rounded out by quarterback Roger Staubach of Navy, the East's lone representative, and halfback Jay Wilkinson of Duke, the only South player named to the team.

UNC Cagers Picked 24th In Early Vote

North Carolina yesterday received seven votes in balloting for United Press International's pre-season basketball top twenty. Three of the Tar Heels' opponents in the coming season were named among the top twenty. They are NYU (3), Duke (4) and Kentucky (12).

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Loyola Ramblers, kings of the court by virtue of a single last-gasp basket, scored another victory over Cincinnati Monday when they were named college basketball's team "most likely to succeed" by the United Press International Board of Coaches.

It was Loyola No. 1 and Cincinnati No. 2 Monday in the pre-season ratings issued by the board for the 1963-64 court season which opens on Saturday, Nov. 30.

With points allotted on a basis of 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 for votes from first through 10th places, Loyola received 325 points. A perfect score would be 350. Cincinnati had 285 and NYU in third place 205.

Completing the top five were Duke with 181 points and Wichita with 146.

The coach won't let me use my REMINGTON® LEKTRONIC II during the football season

It's impossible to look or feel ferocious after a REMINGTON LEKTRONIC II shave. 348 cutting edges of high-carbon steel (sharper and tougher than stainless steel) whisk whiskers off.

Cutters are honed on an angle, so they slice whiskers off instead of "ploughing" them up. This makes your face feel and look friendly.

Then there are the REMINGTON Roller Combs. Right on top of the shaving head. Adjust to any skin or beard. Roll skin down. Pop whiskers up into cutters for a close, comfortable shave.

There's the cordless feature. Sealed-in, rechargeable energy cells let you shave anywhere without a plug. Forget to recharge? Plug it in and shave on the spot. With a cord, without a cord, with a REMINGTON LEKTRONIC II you're never without a close, comfortable shave. Get a REMINGTON LEKTRONIC II ...right after football season ends.

DECK THE HALLS

The time has come to think of Christmas shopping, for the Yuletide will be upon us quicker than you can say Jack Robinson. (Have you ever wondered, incidentally, about the origin of this interesting phrase "Quicker than you can say Jack Robinson"? Well sir, the original saying was French—"Plus vite que de dire Jacques Robespierre." Jack Robinson is, as everyone knows, an Anglicization of Jacques Robespierre who was, as everyone knows, the famous figure from the French Revolution who, as everyone knows, got murdered in his bath by Danton, Murat, Caligula, and Al Capone.

(The reason people started saying "Quicker than you can say Jacques Robespierre"—or Jack Robinson, as he is called in English-speaking countries like England, the U.S., and Cleveland—is quite an interesting little story. It seems that Robespierre's wife, Georges Sand, got word of the plot to murder her husband in his bath. All she had to do to save his life was call his name and warn him. But, alas, quicker than she could say Jacques Robespierre, she received a telegram from her old friend Frederic Chopin who was down in Majorca setting lyrics all she had to do was call his name to his immortal "Warsaw Concerto." Chopin said he needed Georges Sand's help desperately because he could not find a rhyme for "Warsaw." Naturally, Georges could not refuse such an urgent request.

(Well sir, off to Majorca went Georges, but before she left, she told her little daughter Walter that some bad men were coming to murder Daddy in his bath. She instructed Walter to shout Robespierre's name the moment the bad men arrived. But Walter, alas, had been sea-bathing that morning on the Riviera, and she had come home with a big bag of salt water taffy, and when the bad men arrived to murder Robespierre, Walter, alas, was chewing a wad of taffy and could not get her mouth unstuck in time to shout a warning. Robespierre, alas, was murdered quicker than you could say Jacques Robespierre—or Jack Robinson, as he is called in English-speaking countries.

(There is, I am pleased to report, one small note of cheer in this grisly tale. When Georges Sand got to Majorca, she did succeed in helping Chopin find a rhyme for "Warsaw" as everyone knows who has heard those haunting lyrics:

In the fair town of Warsaw,
Which Napoleon's horse saw,
Singing cockles and mussels, alive alive o!)

But I digress.

We were speaking of Christmas gifts. What we all try to find at Christmas is, of course, unusual and distinctive gifts for our friends. May I suggest then a carton of Marlboro Cigarettes?

What? You are astonished? You had not thought of Marlboros as unusual? You had regarded them as familiar, reliable smokes whose excellence varied not one jot nor tittle from year to year?

True. All true. But all the same, Marlboros are unusual because every time you try one, it's like the first time. The flavor never palls, the filter never gets hackneyed, the soft pack is ever a new delight, and so is the Flip Top box. Each Marlboro is a fresh and pristine pleasure, and if you want all your friends to clap their hands and cry, "Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus!" you will see that their stockings are filled with Marlboros on Christmas morn.

Johnson Moves Into President's Office; Brings Own Rocker

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Lyndon B. Johnson, devoted to "continuity without confusion," moved Tuesday into the presidential office of the White House and immediately began carrying out the key policies of his slain predecessor.

Working from his own desk, the new President quickly arranged summit meetings early next year with Britain and France, conferred for an hour with Russia's Anastas Mikoyan, and signalled his determination to carry out the domestic programs of John F. Kennedy.

He is scheduled to spell out in some detail his endorsement of Kennedy civil rights and tax cut legislation in an address to a joint session of Congress at 12:30 p.m. today.

The speech, to be carried by radio and television, is expected to run about 20 minutes.

The late President's famed rocking chair was gone—but only to be replaced by another rocker more suited to the new Chief Executive.

President Johnson briefly tried out a black leather upholstered chair he had brought in. But he soon sent out for a rocker of his own. For one thing, it has a cushioned headrest on its high back; Kennedy's did not.

The slain President's antique desk was replaced with a more modern one. There was a new red rug on the floor. The repainted office walls were bare of decorations as yet.

Johnson asked all members of the White House to remain on the job for the time being. He appeared to be relying heavily on McGeorge Bundy, presidential assistant for national security affairs, who was at his side frequently. Bundy was one of Kennedy's most valued advisers.

While these changes were underway in the business section of the White House, Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy packed her belongings in the living quarters and storage vans moved in and out. She was assured by Mrs. Johnson that the quarters were hers as long as she needed them.

One of the President's first of a series of day-long conferences was with special assistant Lawrence F. O'Brien, in charge of congressional affairs. It was to O'Brien that Johnson conveyed his determination to pursue the objectives of the Kennedy legislative program.

Key Democratic members of Congress were said to have agreed that there would be no slackening of the drive for approval of the civil rights and tax cut bills, cornerstones of the Kennedy domestic program. In explaining his decision to address a joint session, Johnson said following President Kennedy's funeral that "continuity without confusion has got to be our password."

In rapid order during the day, the new President conferred with world leaders or their representatives who had come to the capital for the Kennedy funeral.

He and British Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home agreed to meet formally early next year. The President and French leader Charles de Gaulle had agreed Monday night to confer in Washington early in 1964.

Mikoyan, Soviet first deputy premier, said he and the President had a pleasant conversation. He said they did not specifically discuss a Johnson-Khrushchev meeting, but agreed that U.S.-Soviet policy on such matters "remain as they were." Finally, Mikoyan said in reply to questions that he could not talk for Soviet Premier Khrushchev on the issue of a summit conference.

Other presidential callers included West German Chancellor Ludwig Erhard; Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia; Irish President Eamon de Valera; Philippine President Diosdada Macapagal; Turkish Prime Minister Ismet Inonu, and heads of the funeral delegations from Latin American countries.

Latin Commitment To Be Continued

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Johnson pledged the United States Tuesday to continuation of the Alliance for Progress aid to Latin America as a "living memorial" to John F. Kennedy.

Johnson spoke to Latin American diplomats in the same White House room where the late President announced creation of the program almost three years ago.

Johnson's audience in the East Room of the Executive Mansion was made up of special delegations from Latin American countries to Kennedy's funeral Monday.

He originally had planned to see them elsewhere but Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy suggested that Johnson invite them to the East Room because it was from there that Kennedy launched the Alliance for Progerss program in 1961.

Mrs. Kennedy herself was in the East room to hear Johnson reaffirm her husband's policies toward Latin America.

"In a very special sense this is a family gathering," Johnson told the visitors. "Nothing in President Kennedy's public career meant more to him than the ties of his country with yours."

Johnson recalled that Kennedy's Alliance for Progress speech was "the first full-scale foreign policy address of his administration."

"Today, with all of you in the same room, I reaffirm that alliance and pledge all the energies of my government to those common goals," Johnson said.

The East Room meeting was closed to newsmen but Johnson repeated his remarks to reporters in the "fish room" outside his office and the event was carried on radio and television.

Johnson conceded that "we all know there have been problems" in carrying out the alliance, a ten-year program of American aid keyed to economic and social reforms in Latin countries.

But he echoed Kennedy's insistence that accomplishments since 1961 and the promise of success to come vindicated the late President's faith in the program.

In one of his last major speeches, Kennedy told the Inter-American Press Association in Miami Beach, Fla., Monday night — four days before he was assassinated in Dallas — that he believed more strongly in the alliance than ever before.

"Inspired by his memory, and in the same spirit, we will carry or the job," Johnson asserted.

Johnson's meeting with the Latin Americans and his public report on it were designed to put formally on the record the fact that as did Kennedy, Johnson plans to make the Alliance for Progress program a major part of U. S. foreign policy.

Mrs. Kennedy was escorted into the East Room by former Colombian President Lleras Camargo. Mrs. Johnson also was present to hear the pronouncement on the Alliance for Progress by her husband.

Maggot Wins UMOC Contest

"Maggott," sponsored by Tau Epsilon Phi, has won the Ugly Man on Campus Contest conducted by Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity.

"Maggott's" winning total was 9,891 votes at one cent per vote. All proceeds from the annual contest go to charity, with this year's cause being Project Hope.

Runners-up in the balloting were "Gross," sponsored by Craige Residence Hall, and "Spud," entered by Delta Upsilon.

The winner will be presented with a trophy during halftime ceremonies at a UNC basketball game in the near future. In addition, he will be given a date with a beautiful Carolina coed at the expense of APO.

APO officials yesterday called the contest a success, and extended their appreciation to contestants, sponsors and those who voted in the contest.

PEACE UNION LIBRARY

The Student Peace Union has announced the opening of a 75-volume library on the first floor of the YMCA building.

The library contains books, periodicals, and pamphlets on peace and civil rights. Students may check out books or use the library as a study room.

Library hours will be 2 to 3:30 p.m. daily and after 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Coffee will be available at night.

DUKE TICKETS

Ticket Manager Vernon Crook reports that about 300 tickets to the Duke-UNC football game will be available to the public today. These include both the student coupons ($2.25) and the regular tickets ($4.50). A student may purchase both a coupon and a student guest ticket ($4.50).

Also, there are still plenty of both student and regular tickets left for the UNC-South Carolina basketball game, to be played here on Monday, Dec. 2, at 8 p.m.

Stocks Score Biggest Gain In History

NEW YORK (UPI) — The New York Stock Exchange scored its sharpest advance in history Tuesday, indicating strong Wall Street confidence in the new Johnson administration.

About $14.6 billion was added to the market value in the first day of trading since the stock market suspended in mid-session last Friday on news that President Kennedy had been shot by an assassin.

Dow-Jones industrial average skyrocketed 32.03 to 743.52 — a record gain in a single session. Until Tuesday, the sharpest gain recorded in this average was the 28.40 of Oct. 30, 1929, the day after the stock market crashed. The Dow-Jones industrials plummeted 21.16 points last Friday.

Trading swelled to 9,320,000 shares, the largest since the 10,706,970 traded May 31, 1962, during the hectic week when the market broke and then made a speedy recovery.

Dow-Jones rails advanced 4.39 to 170.80, utilities 1.52 to 136.49 and 65 stocks 8.58 to 260.64. Standard & Poor's 500 stock index jumped 2.77 to 72.38.

SSL Interviews

Delegates to the 1964 State Student Legislature will be selected in interviews immediately following the Thanksgiving holidays.

Delegates and alternates will be chosen from results of an interview and short quiz. Interviews will be held in GM next Tuesday through Thursday from 3 to 5 p.m.

The SSL meets annually in Raleigh for three days to present and debate resolutions on current state and national issues. This year's meeting will be held Feb. 27 through 29.

Members of the delegation will draft two resolutions or bills to be presented at the February session.

BAKE SALE

Junior Class girls will hold a bake sale in Y-Court on Monday and Tuesday, December 2 and 3. The sale will offer baked goods prepared by coeds, and will run from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. both days.

Harrison Merrill, Junior Class president, announced yesterday that all proceeds from the sale will go to the class treasury. All junior girls have been asked to donate items for the sale, including cookies, pastries, cakes and pies. Such items will be brought from home by the girls following the Thanksgiving holidays.

It's All Or Nothing For Heels Tomorrow

DALLAS: Nightclub owner Jack Ruby (R) is taken from city jail cell block to homicide bureau for questioning by two Dallas detectives. Ruby jumped from a crowd of newsmen in the police station basement and fatally shot Lee Harvey Oswald, the accused assassin of President John F. Kennedy.

Bowl Bid, ACC Title At Stake Against Devils

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina's football team, which has met one test after another this fall, faces its most important examination of the season tomorrow afternoon in Durham, and the final grade will be either an "A" or an "F."

The Duke Blue Devils are expected to be anything but gracious hosts and could easily put a damper on the Tar Heels' most successful year on the gridiron since 1949. This is the 49th meeting (Duke leads series, 25-20-3) between the two arch rivals—a spirited series in which anything goes.

Kick-off time is 2 p.m. for the Thanksgiving Day struggle, originally scheduled for last Saturday, but postponed due to the death of President Kennedy.

A share of the ACC championship awaits the winner, and if the Tar Heels are able to hold off the underdog hosts, they may pluck an even juicier plum—an invitation to a major post-season bowl game.

Coach Jim Hickey's Heels have been rated a very slight favorite to win their eighth game of the season against two losses, but pre-game speculation often means less than nothing in this series.

Duke was a slim choice in 1959, when UNC rolled, 50-0. In 1960, the Blue Devils were a solid pick only to fall, 7-6. One year later Duke was a small favorite, but had to kick an eleventh hour field goal to win it, 6-3. And last fall it was another last-gasp field goal which pulled it out for the heavily favored Davils, 16-14.

Both teams enter the Turkey Day skirmish with identical 5-1 conference marks. The winner tomorrow will be the ACC co-champion along with the N. C. State Wolfpack, which finished 6-1 in the ACC with a 42-0 rout of Wake Forest Friday night.

Coach Bill Murray's Blue Devils, who have owned the ACC for the past three seasons, boast one of the nation's most potent offensive attacks. They have averaged 24 points per game in compiling a 5-3-1 record.

All-America halfback Jay Wilkinson (6-1, 196) is the most explosive Blue Devil. The fleet Oklahoman has rushed for 568 yards in 105 carries this fall, and has found the end zone on 11 occasions, placing him among the country's top scorers.

His rushing total places him only 15 yards behind UNC's Ken Willard as the two battle down to the wire for the ACC ground gaining title.

Scotty Glacken (5-10, 175) pilots the Duke attack and the Devils' second biggest weapon has been the pass from the brilliant soph to his lonely end, Stan Crisson (6-2, 200). Glacken has connected on 85 of 173 passes for 1,048 yards and 11 touchdowns. On the other end, Crisson has snagged 42 for 517 yards and seven TD's. Both Glacken's TD passes and Crisson's TD catches are conference records.

In addition, Crisson's 90 career grabs place him in a good position to challenge the Heels' Bob Lacey for the all-time ACC record in this department. Lacey, UNC's own All-America, has 92

Police, FBI Plan Probes Of Assassination Details

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Three major investigations were developing yesterday into the assassination of President Kennedy and the murder of his accused slayer, Lee Harvey Oswald.

The inquiries by the FBI, the state of Texas and, possibly, the Senate Judiciary Committee were expected to reveal all the details surrounding the death of the President to choke off at once any of the inevitable rumors of a "plot."

As one senator remarked, "Some people debated for a century whether John Wilkes Booth killed Lincoln. Now is the time to get the whole story of the Kennedy assassination."

He ordered all federal agencies to cooperate with the FBI and the Justice Department in a "prompt and thorough investigation of all the circumstances" surrounding the two killings.

"The people of the nation may be sure that all of the facts will be made public," the President said in a statement.

The FBI is positive that Oswald fired the two fatal bullets which killed Kennedy in Dallas last Friday, but it hopes to build an irrefutable case against the ex-Marine.

The Justice Department said it would lend whatever aid Texas officials needed in the state's investigation. Texas Atty. Gen. Waggoner Carr announced after Kennedy's funeral that a "court of inquiry" would be called to consider the slayings.

The court, similar to a fact-finding board but with the power to subpoena witnesses, would serve to replace the trial of Oswald that cannot now be held. It makes findings, but they do not have the force of law and are not privileged; that is, they may be used only at the risk of libel.

Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee were reported to feel that the Texas investigation would not be enough. "Too many people are disturbed about the strange circumstances of the whole tragic affair," said one Republican member.

Committee members indicated that they would offer legislation to make the assassination of a president a federal crime, punishable by death.

Although the FBI refused to discuss its investigation even in general terms, it was obvious that it was seeking to learn every detail, including the assassin's motivation, his contacts and his associations.

Ruby Indicted; In Good Spirits

DALLAS (UPI) — A county grand jury Tuesday indicted flashy Jack Ruby for murder with malice in the vengeful slaying of President Kennedy's accused assassin.

Dist. Atty. Henry Wade said he would ask the death penalty and requested that Ruby be held without bond.

Tom Howard, Ruby's attorney, said he will apply for a writ of habeas corpus next week and will ask that his client be freed in bond.

"I think he should be," he said.

Trial has been set for Dec. 9, but Howard said he will probably ask for a postponement until mid-January.

The striptease nightclub operator seemed unconcerned by it all. He downed a hearty breakfast and "seemed in awfully good spirits," said chief jailer E. L. Holman.

Jake "The Master" Ehrlich said today he is willing to consider defending Ruby.

Thanksgiving And The Coin Of Tragedy

After the horrendous events of the past few days, Thanksgiving seems at first the most inappropriate occasion that could possibly come along. A little reflection, however, suffices to show that this is not so.

Thanksgiving is a time to count blessings, to be thankful for what is rather than sad for what has been or might have been. And now that we have buried our dead, now that we are as aware as we can be of what we have lost, it is fitting that we turn the coin of tragedy and examine its brighter side.

First and foremost, we and posterity have a new, more immediate, source of inspiration to draw upon, than we had before last Friday afternoon. Brutal assassination has underlined the nobility and dedication with which John F. Kennedy served, as another term of office and then quiet retirement could never have done. We wish it were otherwise; we would gladly forego the inspiration for the return of our late President but it cannot be, so we must make the best of what is.

Secondly, his family—especially his wonderful wife—have set an example for bearing up under deep grief that is unparalleled. In death as in life, the Kennedys have led the nation, and it can be hoped that we shall not be lacking for guidance when it comes our turn to shoulder the heavy burdens of personal anguish that must come to all of us.

Beyond that, however, we have a nation in which there has developed an acute awareness of injustice, and an increasing strong inclination not to tolerate injustice, no matter what or whom its object. Too, we have an ever-sharpening perception of our national inadequacies, and more of us than ever before are working to remedy these smudges upon our destiny and promise.

Further than that, we have strength of spirit and commerce, arms and intellect, in a time that demands the prominant presence of each in partnership with the other if a just peace is to be secured and the world is to realize the potentialities which still lie largely dormant.

Most of all we have life, and—if the nuclear Test Ban Treaty proves to be that eagerly-sought first step—we have time. And time is the key to all the promises and dreams that fire men's hopes and aspirations around the globe.

With time we can nurture the inspiration provided by our late President and enhance the strength derived from our national endowments; directing both toward the just rectification of our national and international inadequacies.

All these things we must do if we are not to waste our surplus of time and effort. So let us use this Thanksgiving, surrounded by friends, relatives and plenty, to prepare for the effort, that all of our lives shall count for something, that we leave the world a better place than when we came.

The Precise Science Of Prognostication

SAY YOU GOT these two teams, see? And the best thing this one team does is pass, see? And the best thing this other team does is pass defend, see? Well, this one team leads the league in pass defense, and it passes even better than this other team whose best thing is passing, see? And this first team leads the league in passing and total offense as well as pass defense. And this other team is last in pass defense, see?

Well, okay, look at some other teams, okay?

This one team beat Georgia, 28-7.
And Georgia beat Miami, 31-14.
And Miami beat Purdue, 3-0.
And Purdue beat Notre Dame, 7-6.
And Notre Dame beat Southern Cal., 17-14.
And Southern Cal. beat Ohio State, 32-3.
And Ohio State beat Texas A&M 17-0.
And Texas A&M beat Rice, 13-6.
And Rice beat LSU, 21-12.
And LSU beat TCU, 28-14.
And TCU beat Kansas, 10-6.
And Kansas beat Syracuse, 10-0.
And Syracuse beat Penn State, 9-0.
And Penn State beat Maryland, 17-15.
And Maryland beat Air Force, 21-14.
And Air Force beat Nebraska, 17-13.
And Nebraska beat Minnesota, 14-7.
And Minnesota beat Michigan, 6-0.
And Michigan beat Illinois, 14-8.
And Illinois beat Northwestern, 10-9.
And Northwestern beat Indiana, 34-21.
And Indiana beat Oregon State, 20-15.
And Oregon State beat Stanford, 10-7.
And Stanford beat San Jose State, 29-13.
And San Jose State beat Washington State, 13-8.
And Washington State beat Texas Tech, 17-6.
And Texas Tech beat SMU, 13-6.
And SMU beat Navy, 32-28.

So, by mathematical compilation, the University of North Carolina—to beat Duke by 254 points.

Fifth Avenue vs. Fifth Columnists

By JEFF GREENFIELD
Editor, The Daily Cardinal

Every year J. Edgar Hoover troops grandly up to Capitol Hill to pick the pockets of the American taxpayer; and every year the FBI's deity details the machinations of the internal Communist campus conspiracy, spreading its tentacles throughout the Halls of Academe from Harvard to Berkeley.

This is, of course, absolute nonsense. The Communists don't stand a chance of winning over college students. And the reason for this failure is obvious—they dress badly.

It is a universal truth that college youth's interest in an issue varies inversely with the degree of intelligence required to understand that issue. Thus, an argument over the best way to open a beer can will arouse infinitely more interest than will say, a dispute over the implications of the agricultural tariff levels of the European Common Market.

A movement must, therefore, cultivate its superficial appeal — otherwise it is doomed. The college audience demands of proselytizers not a better world, but a cooler world; not a chance for self-fulfillment, but a chance to be sophisticated; not a land of milk and honey, but a land of properly mixed martinis.

The Communists are completely lacking in any such appeal. When was the last time you saw a Red spinning around town in an Avanti or an XR-E? Or smoking Gauloises? Or dressing right—especially dressing right.

When Gus Hall addressed a packed Union Theater audience, he was doomed to defeat with baggy pants, mis-matched shoes, and a wide tie. This was no threat; this was obviously a Loser, totally divorced from his environment. Whatever revolutionary mystique there was about the American Communists collapsed as soon as its leader made his appearance.

Daniel Rubin, the Party's youth leader (who ought to know better), had the sheer effrontery to wear what looked like a triple-breasted horror with huge lapels, laughably pleated trousers, and a weave that can only be described as bamboo. No self-respecting college youth would think of attaching himself to a Party sporting such garb.

These failures may be contrasted with, for example, Malcolm X, a Black Muslim leader who spoke here wearing an immaculate ivy-league suit and streamlined tie. It is obvious that this movement is in far greater danger of winning youthful converts; not because it is right, but because it is In.

No, Mr. Hoover, the Red danger is virtually nil, at least on our campuses. When Gus Hall, or Ben Davis, or Herbert Aptheker, is seen whipping down Langdon Street in his T-Bird, attired in a Botany 500 and a Hathaway, then we'll know the putsch is on. Till then, cool it.

Questions Following The Tragedy

A Choice

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The asasssination of President Kennedy has placed the burden of profound choice upon America. The choice is one which each individual must make himself and which in total will result in either a great step forward toward a world of enlightened existence or a disastrous step backward toward the annihilation of mankind. The choice which each man must make is between parts of himself. He must choose between those elements of unfathomable, unknowable, violence and reaction which he has inherited as a biological mechanism from the millenia of pre-history; or those elements of rationality and realization of man's responsibility to man which lead, albeit slowly and tenuously, to an understanding and accommodation of multi and diverse aspirations of men.

The American may choose instantaneous reaction to all Communists, meeting force with force; or he may choose to engage upon the painful and demanding process of recognizing the existence of violence within all societies and the search for ways to prevent its eruption into a world holocaust. The American must choose between the radical and the moderate; between the rash and the rational; between the call to action and the call to thought. The world waits in fear for its life for that decision. Tuum est.

Second Killing

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The tragic death of President Kennedy is and will remain a thing of sorrow and shame to the American people. It was, however, an occurance against which it was almost impossible to defend. An open-top car motoring through a downtown area created a situation which the most able and conscientious efforts of our secret service men could not prevent. But perhaps more instrumental in causing the assassination was our prideful belief that it would never happen. One does take precautions against an unexpected event.

But the same cannot be said of the murder of Lee Harvey Oswald. There was every reason to expect an attempt upon his life and therefore a totally inexcusable tragedy. Yet, a tragedy—for though one may counter that "he got what he deserved" it is nevertheless a tragedy when emotion, not law, prevails in America. Oswald was innocent, because he had not yet been proven guilty in a court of law. A man constitutionally guaranteed to a trial by jury was shot down before the eyes of the whole world. Our belief in justice to all citizens through lawful proceedings is mocked not by the first killing, but by the latter.

The DTH Team

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Coach Tarheel Reader has prepared a scouting report on the Daily Tar Heel which may help us to understand this season's record:

In all fairness I'll have to say that this is the most explosive team we'll meet this year. DTH has a lot of offensive but seems weak on defense. Captains and quarterbacks Blanchard and Ethridge (poohtoon system) may be nominated to Liberal's All-American team; however, a few observers have remarked that they don't always play by the rules.

The DTH offensive set-up is one made popular by the Tag Football League. The center lines up far to the left of the line and the ends are split allowing much diversity in plays. One never knows which hole they will run through. However, DTH has used one main play all season. It's called GAG and everyone on the team has run it on many occasions.

One play which might go is a sweep around right end which is usually run by Stanchback Clyde Wilson, but on this play Wilson gets absolutely no blocking and usually trips over blocking-back McInnis. McInnis is a new player who shows great promise on the team.

Defensively DTH is weak. They rely on continually controlling the ball so they won't have to play and defense. In fact, its their ball and if they aren't winning, they usually pack up the ball and go home.

But if DTH continues its present style of play, it could well go down in history. It could be DTH's best season since Choo Choo Crowther.

Right Now

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I was certainly happy to see your editorial of November 21 entitled, "Needed: Another WUNC-WCHL Hook-Up." Your comments were most certainly pertinent, and at this time, WUNC Radio is considering the proposal you made. We are certainly willing to help in any way that we can to make Chapel Hill a better place in which to study, work and live.

I was sorry, however, to see that you made the comment that the program mentioned, Carolina Roundtable, had not stirred up "much interest." Indeed, it has stirred up much interest, not only in Chapel Hill, but in surrounding areas as well. I would like to point out that WUNC Radio operates with 50,000 watts of power; consequently, our coverage is very wide—some 100 miles. Because we are, in a sense, a "regional station" we send out our daily program schedules to the Chapel Hill WEEKLY and The Durham Morning HERALD. In addition, The Raleigh NEWS AND OBSERVER, as well as the Triangle Pointer, carry highlights of our more important programs. So, as one can see, our publicity reaches many people. There is, however, a serious gap in our publicity coverage. This is the Daily Tar Heel. As a consequence, we feel (and, indeed I'm sure the students feel the same way) that there is a definite lack of communication between the station and the students.

This year, we have tried to partially alleviate this situation by setting up our program schedule in such a way as to appeal to a wider range of listeners. This, of course, includes the students. Our schedule includes folk music and jazz; popular music and classical. It also includes full news coverage and drama. This year we have broadcast live the Weil Lecture; every other week, we carry the Hill Hall Concerts live. We have also broadcast the Paul Green University Day Speech, and the Ralph Moody discussion with the local chapter of The American Association of University Professors. We are, in short, what is termed a "Full Service Station."

It may be true that many students do not own, or have access to, an FM radio. But I feel that there are many who do. FM is becoming what its discoverers envisioned it would become: a quality broadcast service with a wide audience appeal; many have already taken advantage of its fine service—including many students.

We, at WUNC Radio, think that the co-operation between the student-operated newspaper and the student-operated radio station could be better. We think, moreover, that it will improve. Perhaps the time to start is now.

A New Low?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Well, you have reached an all time low in newspaper reporting. Your sports page today (Friday, Nov. 22) was probably the worst in the Tar Heel's struggle for survival. How can the editors even pretend to be properly informing the student body of the representative sports news? I voted for you last year on your platform of 1) greater sports coverage, 2) more stories on minor sports, and 3) the attempt to create a six-page newspaper. In these three categories you have failed miserably. Who really gives a damn about the sacreligious pun on the 23rd Psalm that you included in the guise of a letter to Wake Forest. And couldn't we sacrifice your original little UNC Basketball Gallery one day, using that space for something a bit more relevant—like the Duke game? North Carolina comes up with one of the finest football teams in years, has a chance to go to a major bowl, and takes on its biggest rival the next day—and, not a word about the game. I don't know about the Tar Heel editors or the advertising staff, but I feel I am speaking for the majority of the student body when I get down on my knees and beg you to get rid of that piece of trash that is disguised as a sports page.

"I Still Can't Believe It"

Movie Review

The Lord Of The Flies

By JOHN MEDLIN

A film requiring a preadolescent, all-male cast whose adventures on a tropical island allegorically reveal the nature of original sin certainly seems dubious movie fare. Even more surprising is the fact that it was made at all, but a young British director named Peter Brooks has managed to create an often electrifying screen version of William Golding's strange Lord of the Flies.

Now in its third week at the Durham Rialto theater, the film —of the same name—is an almost literal transcription of the book. As such it will inevitably be compared to the original, and is bound to come off second best. Yet this fact does not prevent it from being a singularly interesting achievement in itself.

Abandoning a formal script, director Brooks has almost managed to overcome the difficulty of working with a totally inexperienced cast of young boys. Instead he has made skillful use of photography, cutting, and action, giving the film a wierd, ritualized atmosphere in which the sheer mood evoked is often able to circumvent the necessity for "acting."

The plot is allegorical, yet starkly simple: a group of schoolboys being evacuated during an atomic war crash on a lonely tropical island and find themselves utterly without adult supervision. In the course of their edventures while trying to organize themselves, find food, arrange a signal for rescue, and build shelters, the boys rapidly degenerate into a state of savagery and turn on each other.

From this synopis, one can see that the action is largely episodic, and Brooks apparently is able to film a successful sequence merely by giving his young actors a general idea of the scene and letting them have a free rein. Yet some dialogue is necessary, and scenes which rely entirely on what is being said fail utterly because none of the boys have any acting ability whatever. James Aubrey as Ralph and Tom Chapin as Jack do have a vitality and energy in their speech which makes their delivery acceptable if not particularly convincing. Hugh Edwards, as Piggy, the eternal Fat Boy, is properly sluggish, but whenever he speaks it seems as though he is reading his lines with overpowering boredom. His attempt to entertain the younger boys with the "true story" is of his home town's name is sheer delight, however.

It is this and several other scenes which make "Lord of the Flies" outstanding. The viewer is horrified at the ravenous manner in which the boys devour the nauseous pig carcass, and the final scene, from Ralph's animal-like flight across the beach to the end of the film, is stark brilliance.

A triumph of photography is achieved in the scene of Simon's death. The systerical confusion of flailing limbs and flashing torches is suddenly cut, to be followed by a ghostly scene in which Simon's small body bobs gently in the sparkling water as it is drawn out to sea by the tides. The power of the lyrical prose passage in the book is effectively translated into the visual medium.

Yet it is with Simon and his development as a character and a symbol that the movie inexplicably fails. In the novel, Simon is a strange, mystical child subject to faintings speels. During one of his seizures he imagines himself in a dialogue with the grisly pig's-head totem left in the jungle by the other boys, and it is in this scene that Golding reveals the central theme of his book. The film Simon, however, seems more stupid than mystic, and in the scene with the pig's-head, he only stares vacantly and silently until the picture fades. Thus the most important section of the book is reduced to inanity in the film.

Defects and all, however, the film must be counted as a highly interesting experiment and essentially a successful one. If Brooks has erred in not rounding up even one or two child actors, he has certainly succeeded in collecting a disturbingly authentic-looking group. His ingenuity in avoiding "acting" situations has not only accomplished its immediate purpose, but has imparted to the film a curious, pageant-like quality that heightens its mythic atmosphere. Those who have not read the book will want to after seeing the film; those who already have should come away pleased with the degree of Brooks' success in bringing the brooding novel to life on the screen.

Foreign Student Finds UNC Not Good Place To Locate

By ANN GREENE

Hatice Uskup, a foreign student from Turkey, thinks that UNC is "not the best place for foreign students to land."

She explained by pointing to the differences in educational systems and social life, as well as the language barrier.

"And UNC is so big!" she exclaimed.

Hatice (pronounced Ha-tea' j, or just "T. J.") quickly added that she loves America and UNC, but that she spent her first summer in the U. S. "getting acquainted" before entering college.

"It is much easier for me since I have been in the U. S. for two years now," she explained. "But when I first went to school here, I did all my assignments twice: once for vocabulary and once for content."

Most agree that foreign students make good students, T. J. says this is probably a result of the impact of tradition and educational differences.

"Turkish tradition has made a lot of difference to me. Some Turkish women are well educated, but most not at all . . . and in Turkish universities, it's academic knowledge and that's it."

Hatice sympathizes with foreign students who did not have a chance to learn English well before entering UNC.

"I can't even understand some foreign students myself," she said, "and some of them seem so sad. I just want to grab them and say, 'Come on, what's the matter with you?' "

T. J. thinks that Americans really require too much of a university — "not only education, but social life, friendships and outside activities—even a place to live; it's just too much."

She really likes the Turkish educational system better — and it's a long way from the U.S.A.

"In Turkey, you just go to class when you want to," T. J. said. "Nobody cares as long as you pass the final. No quizzes or assignments . . . You can have a full-time job and go to school."

But T. J. doesn't think that this system would work in America where students are "not as used to getting it on their own.

"The American girls study more than the boys," she added.

Despite all this, Hatice finds that most UNC students are helpful and friendly.

"You know," she smiled, "I didn't expect so much understanding."

The remainder of the Duke backfield remains a question mark. Both regular left halfback Billy Futrell (5-11, 200) and No. 1 fullback Mike Curtis (6-2, 209) have been nursing injuries for the past three weeks.

It appears now that Futrell will be ready for tomorrow's all-important battle, but Curtis' status is still doubtful. Biff Bracy (6-1, 196) has been Futrell's able replacement and he is ready to step in again today. Rich Kraft (5-11, 205) is expected to start in place of Curtis.

Futrell and Curtis are the second and third leading rushers on the team, but both Bracy and Kraft are over the 100-yard mark and, in fact, are ahead of Futrell and Curtis in yards-per-carry.

The Duke line is not considered as strong this year as in the past, but still can not be taken lightly. There are only two seniors on the forward wall, thus inexperience has been a handicap. However, much of this disappeared as the Devils moved through their first nine games.

OOne of the two seniors is Crisson, who is an excellent operator on the hard-to-stop buttonhook patterns from his lonely end spot. The other is tackle Chuck Walker (6-2, 235), who plays "outside" as Duke shifts its unbalanced-line.

The other tackle, who plays "inside" is junior Danny Lonon (6-2, 220). The guards are Fred Cromartie (6-0, 202) and Bobby Johnson (6-2, 200), both juniors. Still another junior, Bob Davis (6-3, 211) anchors the line at center.

With its unbalanced set-up, Duke is particularly fond of the power sweep to the strong side, with Wilkinson the prime ball carrier. In theory, the Duke offense is this: if the opponent puts two men wide to cover Crisson, then RUN; if just one man is put on Crisson, then PASS to Crisson.

The Carolina offense evolves around similar thought, the Tar Heels use Lacey and Willard as the Blue Devils use Crisson and Wilkinson.

With Willard, always a threat up the middle, quarterback Junior Edge, with a smart bit of faking, has had great success with the bootleg pass-run option. And with Lacey usually taking two men downfield with him, there usually is a receiver in the clear.

Edge has thrown 138 times this fall, completing 75 of them for 933 yards. Gary Black, second team quarterback, has hit on 38 of 67 passes for 412 yards. In addition to Lacey (40 catches for 449 yards), the prime targets have been tight ends Joe Robinson (17 for 238) and John Hammett (12 for 146) and running backs Willard (15 for 108) and Ron Tuthill (11 for 80).

When Carolina chooses to throw the long bomb, the biggest threat has been speedy wingback Ronnie Jackson (6 for 145). But most of the time, Edge and Black have stayed away from the long one, preferring to take the surer short completion.

Willard's line busting ability has made the passing attack go according to Hickey. The beefy junior has picked up 583 yards in 153 hauls and is the leading UNC scorer with 5 TD's and one two-point conversion. The Heels' bread-and-butter short-yardage play has been Willard off either left or right tackle.

Fullback Eddie Kesler provides an able No. 2 running punch in the first unit backfield. The rugged junior has gained 267 yards in 59 carries and rates as an excellent blocker and defensive corner back.

The Tar Heel interior line is composed of tackles Cole Kortner and Vic Esposito, guards Jerry Cabe and Richy Zarro and center Chris Hanburger. The latter shifts to linebacker on defense where he rates as a key man in stopping the opponents' drive.

The second team forward wall consists of tackles Gene Sigmon and John Hill, guards Clint Eudy and Jay Malobicky and center Ed Stringer. End Frank Gallagher is a defensive specialist, usually playing with the second team, and Jim Alderman plays both ways at first until guard, rotating with Zarro.

The Tar Heels are rated an edge over Duke in the defensive department, ranking second in the ACC in total and rushing defense and among the nation's top ten in pass defense. Whether UNC can stop the explosiveness of Wilkinson, Glacken and Crisson is a moot question. It should be answered tomorrow.

Gone Co-Ed Gets Campus

A summer school student was given two-week campusment for a violation of the Campus Code in a Women's Council Trial Sunday.

The student was specifically charged with traveling two hours after closing hours and being 1 hour and 53 minutes late in returning to her residence. The lateness was incurred through an error in her sign out slip.

The defendant pleaded guilty to all charges.

The case was held over from summer school. However, since the student is now attending an out-of-state school the penalty has been referred to her school.

UNC Tickets

Tickets for the UNC - Indiana game in the Charlotte Coliseum on Saturday, Dec. 7 can be picked up at student rates (half price) at the Woollen Gym ticket office.

All students are urged to get their tickets as soon as possible, for the Coliseum is expecting a sellout for its double-header of that night. Davidson and St. Joseph's (Pa.) are the attractions in the other game, and the tickets are reported to be going fast.

New Directory Ready

What is Browner by three, Blacker by one, Greener by two, and Whiter by one, than last year.

The new directory is bound in a light grey cover and contains 176 action-packed pages, 28 more than last year's directory. A new blue section of University numbers is sandwiched between the white pages of individual listings and the yellow commercial pages.

The new University telephone system, recently installed by the Chapel Hill Telephone Company, is called a PABX (Private Automatic Branch Exchange) system. Another name for the system is Centrex.

Centrex gives the University a full time telephone operator, just as Memorial Hospital has; a redesigned directory with all UNC numbers listed separately; 5-digit campus-to-campus dialing (only between numbers prefixed 933); and a separate identity for direct distance dialing and long distance calls, enabling transfer of such operator-handled calls from one campus number to another.

Station antd switching equipment for the Centrex system has been in the process of installation by the Chapel Hill Telephone Co. and representatives of Automatic Electric Co. during the past several months.

The University's own switchboard operator will go on duty at midnight next Sunday at the Telephone Exchange on Rosemary Street. There are switchboard positions for four University operators, and the University's board will be manned by at least one operator 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, from next Sunday on.

Instructions for using the Centrex system are given on page 3 of the blue sections. It is not a difficult system to use.

In the rest of the directory, changes have been made. The "Numbers Frequently Called" page of blank blues has been moved from the white section to the back of the yellow pages. The perspective diagram of the University campus has been moved from the front of the white section to the front of the blue section. Typographical rearrangement of the directory's title page makes emergency numbers easier to spot quickly, and other small typographical improvements have been made throughout the directory.

The white section of individual listings has 14 fewer pages this year than last, caused by the removal of formerly "white page" numbers to the blue UNC section — fraternities, sororities, dormitories, and academic and administrative department listings, for example.

Dark Day For UNC Harriers In NCAA Championships

By IGNATIUS DARNELLUS

EAST LANSING, Mich.—It was a dark day at East Lansing for North Carolina's cross-country team Tuesday. Coach Joe Hilton's harriers, who swept unbeaten to both the ACC and State Championships this fall, finished last in a field of 21 teams entered in the 25th Annual NCAA Cross-Country Championships (University Division).

Vic Zwolak of Villanova bettered a field of 169 entrants to walk off with individual honors, besting John Camien of Kansas State Teachers College of Emporia by ten yards. Zwolak's time over the four-mile Michigan State University course was 1935. Camien's time was 19:38.

San Jose State, which placed two of its runners in the top five, captured the team championship for the second straight year. The defending champs had 53 points to Oregon's 60. Notre Dame (128), Kansas (130) and Michigan State (175) rounded out the top five.

The Tar Heels' team score was 528, but this may be altered somewhat. Art Maillet finished in the 21st position, but was not recorded. This matter is pending review, with a judgment expected sometime today.

The five recorded UNC finishers were: Mike Folk, 97th with 21:32; Jerry Smith, 134th with 22:12.3; Bob Fawcett, 146th with 22:25.6; Dave Radford, 163rd with 23:44; and Bob Bennett, 163rd with 23:59.

Jimmy Meade, who has shared individual honors with Maillet all season, was unable to run in the meet, a factor which undoubtedly effected the UNC score. Meade has been hampered by a leg injury since the ACC meet.

Procedure School Planned By Di-Phi

The Di Phi Senate will conduct a two-day workshop in parliamentary procedure, Monday and Tuesday, 8:30 a.m.-3 p.m., for interested students.

The Senate will have an experienced presiding officer on hand at all times during the two days of informal discussion and practice of parliamentary techniques, according to Jim Harris.

Special guests will be present to offer advice about proper forms, decorum, and effective use of motions.

Dr. Donald Springen, UNC debate team coach, will take part in the workshop. Dr. Springen, a member of the English Department here will teach a course in parliamentary debating next fall.

"Parliamentary procedure is something that baffles most of us," commented Hubert Hawkins, president of the Di-Phi Senate, "but every voter and every citizen ought to know something about it."

The workshop will be held morning and afternoons at the Di Senate chamber, third floor New West.

Christmas Parade Starts Holiday Season At UNC

The Merchants Association's Christmas Parade will open the Christmas shopping season in Chapel Hill and Carrboro this afternoon. The parade will start at 5:30 at the corner of Greensboro and Main Streets in Carrboro, and will proceed down Main Street and Franklin Street in Chapel Hill, ending at the Morehead Planetarium.

The parade will be without some units which had originally planned to participate. A Defense Department communique last week ordered all armed forces units not to participate in any public displays or parades "not in the immediate interests of the defense of the nation" during the official 30-day period of mourning for the late President John F. Kennedy.

As a result, University Air Force and Naval ROTC units will not take part in the parade as they have in the past. The two ROTC units would have contributed their color guard, drill team, and drum and bugle corps.

But three other bands and various floats and other units will take part.

The theme of the parade will be Christmas in nursery rhymes. The nursery rhyme atmosphere will be created by Frank Cain's Attractions, a group of about 40 giant caricature heads of nursery rhyme characters, with costumes to match, which will be brought to Chapel Hill by Mr. Cain and filled by members of the Chapel Hill Y-Teens. Mr. Cain's character-heads and costumes have been used in many nationally famous parades such as the Mummers Parade in Philadelphia, Mardi Gras in New Orleans, and Macy's Christmas Parade in New York.

Other units to take part in the parade include the Lincoln High School Band, bands from Southern and Northern High Schools in Durham, Anita Wilkinson's Strutters from Durham, the Dunn Clowns from Dunn, a Brownie unit from the First Baptist Church, a horse and buggy by Chapel Hill dressmaker Nancy Riley, Elves entered by the Junior Service League, the Chapel Hill Recreation Department Baton Corps, two Chapel Hill Fire Department engines (one very old, one very new), two Civil Air Patrol vehicles, and floats sponsored by Beta Sigma Phi Sorority, Long Meadow Dairy, and Croft Business College of Durham.

The Merchants Association will sponsor the Santa Claus float, and Miss Orange County, Ann Clayton of Hillsboro, will ride in a convertible.

Arndt Takes Poetry Prize

The Bollingen Prize for the best translation of poetry into English has been awarded to Dr. Walter Arndt, associate professor of Russian at the University.

Previously awarded to such noted poets as Ezra Pound, Conrad Aiken, Marianne Moore and W. H. Auden, the 1963 award of $2,500 will be divided between Dr. Arndt and Richard P. Wilbur of Wesleyan University.

DR. WALTER ARNDT

Dr. Arndt was honored for his translation of Pushkin's "Eugene Onegin," a narrative in poetry, published this year by E. P. Dutton & Co., Inc., New York. Mr. Wilbur received the award for his translations from French of Moliere's "Tartuffe" and "Le Misanthrope," published this year and in 1955, respectively, by Harcourt, Brace & World.

NEGRO PROTEST DISCUSSED

Dr. Thomas F. Pettigrew of Harvard University will speak on "The Psychological Meaning of Negro American Protest" at a meeting of the North Carolina Psychological Association here on Dec. 7.

Other participants in the meeting will be John Wheeler, president of Mechanics and Farmers Bank, Durham, and Gen. Capus Waynick, the Governor's Special Representative for Civil Rights Affairs.

Dr. Roy Sommerfield, associate professor of education at UNC and program chairman for the N. C. Psychological Association, will moderate the program.

Exodus To Gator Indicated By Sales

By TOMMY BAYSDEN and LADDY BAUCOM

If gale warnings are out between North Carolina and Florida on Dec. 27 and 28, it probbably won't be a hurricane that causes them.

Chances are that the gusts will come from a gigantic tailwind, created by thousands of North Carolinians and UNC students en route to the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville.

Preparations for the expected mass exodus have been underway since Thanksgiving Day, when the Tar Heels defeated Duke, 16-14, and accepted their first bowl bid since 1950.

Tickets for the game went on sale Monday morning, and a substantial line had formed at the ticket office before the window opened. By 10:30 hundreds had already been sold, many students buying several at a time.

"I wouldn't miss this one for a million dollars," said one Carolina student. "It would be a great trip even without the game."

"My whole fraternity is planning to go," said Rex Sauls, a senior from Garner. "We might even charter a bus or something. Everybody's really up in the air about this one."

Joe Mummaw, senior from Lancaster, Pa. said, "I'm driving 2,000 miles to see Carolina win again."

Many students will undoubtedly make the trip in automobiles and several trains are expected to be chartered in various parts of the state. "Gator Bowl Specials," to leave from Rocky Mount and Wilmington, have already been chartered. Reservations are filling up rapidly.

Carolina has never won a bowl game and the possibilities offered at Jacksonville leave the whole state buzzing. Telephones ring constantly in the football office, as coaches and secretaries scurry to and fro in an effort to answer all the questions.

"The team itself will derive much spirit, morale, and drive from this type of student enthusiasm," said Asst. Coach Emmett Cheek. "Student support affects the way the boys play. We've had real good support all year long."

GATOR BOWL TICKETS

Tickets to the Gator Bowl, to be played between UNC and a yet-to-be-named opponent in Jacksonville, Fla., on Saturday, Dec. 28, are now on sale at the Woollen Gym ticket office.

These tickets sell for $6 each. They are available to students, employees, alumni and the general public.

About 12,000 tickets have been made available. All orders must be by Dec. 14, but those interested should purchase tickets immediately as a sell-out is foreseeable.

Mail orders should be addressed: UNC Athletic Association, Box 930. No telephone orders will be accepted.

UNC Student Is Stabbed

A University student has been committed for psychiatric examination in connection with the allegedly pre-meditated stabbing of a fellow student Nov. 25.

The victim, Joseph D. Renfro, told Chapel Hill Police that he kept an appointment to meet the other student beneath the University Bell Tower about 6:30 p.m. Almost immediately, the other boy, whose name is being withheld pending the examination, asked him what he knew about astronomy, told him to look up at the Milky Way and then stabbed him with a pocket knife.

Police Chief William Blake reported that the student involved voluntarily came to the Chapel Hill Police station later the same night and admitted his acts.

Renfro, a 23 year old student from Mountain Home, said that he became acquainted with his assailant at supper in Lenior Dining Hall Sunday night. They began a discussion which they agreed to meet and continue the following night.

Renfro said that the student drew a knife, he saw what was happening in time to move so that the stab did not hit him directly.

He jumped a hedge surrounding the Bell Tower and ran from his attacker. He was treated for his wound at Memorial Hospital and was released the next day.

The police chief said that the assailant told police he had no special explanation for his attack, but that he had purchased the knife because he "had the desire to kill somebody."

WEINSTEIN LECTURES

The Rosa B. Weinstein Memorial Lectures will be delivered this year by Rabbi B. Borowitz, professor of education at the New York School of Hebrew Union College — Jewish Institute of Religion.

"Faith and Reason" is the theme of the talks which will be delivered Sunday and Monday, Dec. 15 and 16, at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall Auditorium.

Review Decision To Be Debated

By HUGH STEVENS And JOHN GREENBACKER

A series of debates concerning the abolition of the Student-Faculty Review Board by the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline will begin tonight in University living quarters.

Members of the UNC debating team will visit residence halls, fraternities, and sororities to hold discussions on the action, in order that the student body might be better informed on the controversial situation.

The debates were arranged through the cooperation of the debate team with faculty, administration, and student government officials. Members of the team will use material given them by faculty and student government, forming negative and affirmative teams to present the discussions.

Haywood Clayton, president of the debate team, said that this will mark the first occasion that the team, which is under the direct jurisdiction of student government, has been used in a campus activity of this sort.

"The function of the debate team," he said, "will be to present the facts. We shall discuss the issues as fairly as possible."

Mike Lawler, student body president, initiated the idea for the debate series because "students have indicated their concern in this situation and we felt that they should be better informed as to the facts surrounding the decision."

Lawler cited the numerous letters to the DTH, the passage of a resolution by student legislature, and the introduction of bills which would have abolished the student judiciary system as examples of student reaction to the committee's decision.

"These debates," Lawler said, "are a means to convey factual information to the student body so that they might share the concern of student leaders."

"I am extremely concerned about this unilaterial action on the part of the Faculty ommmittee and I believe that student government is committed to take necessary steps to reaffirm the principles which define the Faculty-Administration-Student relationship," he said.

Bob Spearman, student body vice-president, said "I hope the debates will be an effective medium to present the issues that are at stake to the student body and to stimulate further discussion of the faculty's abolition of the Student-Faculty Review Board. I would urge all those who can to attend the debate when it is presented in their place of residence."

UNC Symphony Plays Tonight

The University Symphony Orchestra will present its annual fall concert tonight at 8 o'clock in Hill Music Hall. Now in its 18th season under conductor Earl Slocum, the 80-piece orchestra is made up of students, faculty, and townspeople.

Featured work of the program will be Gustav Holst's orchestral suite "The Planets." Each of the planets' mythological connections is musically illustrated in separate movements, concluding with "Neptune, the Mystic" whose music calls for an off-stage women's choir which sings with the orchestra. A 33-voice choir, under the direction of Wayne Zarr, will be heard in tonight's performance.

As a tribute to the late Walter Golde of New York and Chapel Hill, the orchestra will perform Golde's setting of "Psalm XXIII" with Joel Carter as baritone soloist.

Wagner's Prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" and Massenet's Overture to "Phedre" will complete the program.

The University Symphony is being sponsored by the Tuesday Evening Series of the UNC Department of Music. Admission to all Series concerts is free.

$$$$

Louis M. Bourne, Editor of The Carolina Quarterly, announced yesterday the business staff is offering a 15 per cent commission on all subscriptions sold to anyone who is interested in selling the Quarterly for the coming year.

"We need the job done quickly," Bourne said. "The Winter issue is coming out Monday and we have to have a larger cash base to work with. Since the Student Legislature has granted us financial support in order to pay the 15% commission we hope a lot of salesmen will show up. It's a good way to make a fast buck. It only takes about two hours a night and you can cover a lot of dorms if you don't stop to palaver with friends."

All applicants are requested to come by the Quarterly office between 2:00 and 4:30 p.m. and speak with Anne Greene, Business Manager, or call her at 968-9304.

Billy Scores 25 In Season Opener

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The scare was for real here last night, for UNC had to run shaky in the last five minutes of an opening 92-87 ACC victory over South Carolina.

A packed Woollen Gym house watched and then had to yell as the scrappy Gamecocks turned what was becoming a rout into a breathless finish before finally succumbing to a Tar Heel team which was not itself for much of the final period.

About 5,000 appeared for the 1963-64 opener, and they got their thrill's worth, due largely to UNC's errors late in the second half. Close to nine minutes remained when two slick plays and subsequent baskets by Mike Cooke gave Carolina an 81-62 lead—its largest of the evening.

But here South Carolina began to cash in on hustling second efforts it had been displaying all night. The Gamecocks, with Coach Chuck Noe signalling from the bench and directing their deliberate play, outscored UNC, 18-3, in the next six minutes to pull within four points and send a lot of gay hearts jumping.

Big center John Gorsage hit a free throw, Ronnie Collins added two of his own and Jimmy Collins converted a fast break for a five-point string. Billy Cunningham momentarily halted the rally with a foul shot, but USC came back with seven straight on a jump by Ronnie Collins and five straight points by the other of the Collins.

It was 82-74 and When UNC's Ray Respess hit a jumper, the margin was ten. But Gorsage, Ronnie Collins, then Jimmy Collins, again on a steal and fast break pared the lead to four at 84-80, and there were three minutes plus left.

Tar Heel Coach Dean Smith called time and decided to look the situation over. Cunningham, whose first effort this year produced 25 points, was called on to control the ball once more. He did, bringing the ball down, then going inside to take feeds and then pass off to the free man.

| UNC | FG | FT | Reb | TP |
| Cunningham | 15-11 | 9-3 | 17 | 25 |
| Cooke | 13-8 | 4-4 | 2 | 20 |
| Respess | 20-9 | 4-4 | 11 | 22 |
| Galantai | 0-0 | 0-0 | 2 | 0 |
| Shaffer | 5-4 | 1-1 | 3 | 9 |
| McSweeney | 1-1 | 1-1 | 0 | 3 |
| Bennett | 6-4 | 4-3 | 8 | 11 |
| R. Hassell | 0-0 | 0-0 | 0 | 0 |
| Totasl | 60-37 | 25-18 | 43 | 92 |

| USC | FG | FT | Reb | TP |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| R. Collins | 24-7 | 4-3 | 5 | 17 |
| Schroeder | 4-2 | 3-2 | 2 | 6 |
| Fox | 5-2 | 2-1 | 3 | 5 |
| Lucansky | 5-1 | 1-1 | 4 | 3 |
| Yarborough | 13-8 | 5-3 | 10 | 19 |
| J. Collins | 22-13 | 4-3 | 2 | 29 |
| Gorsage | 6-3 | 4-2 | 1 | 8 |
| Totals | 79-36 | 23-15 | 27 | 87 |

Score at half: UNC 49, USC 41.

This resulted in Cooke's long jumper (86-80), and when Jimmy Collins charged sub guard Bill Brown, the latter's two free shots finally broke the Chickens' backs (88-80).

USC's Bill Yarborough rebunded a goal, but Cunningham netted a patented twisting jumper with 1:45 remaining. Ray Respess, on a feed from Billy Galantai, scored the Heels' final basket (92-82), and South Carolina's last five points were just panic measures.

Cunningham, the exciting one, didn't waste much of the new season in showing why UNC is supposed to be a contender for the conference title. But he's going to need the help he got last night (from Cooke and Resness) through the whole season if the Tar Heels are going to make a threatening gesture.

The kid, with 10 early points, got the Tar Heels off to a quick seven-point lead after five minutes were gone, but ball-handling errors and unjustified shots prevented them from holding it.

From 16-9, South Carolina scored eight straight on jumpers by John Shroeder, Bill Yarborough and Ronnie Collins (2) around two free throws by Yarborough. Collins' second hit gave the Gamecocks the lead at 17-16.

Cunningham's short jumper brought UNC back and when Shaffer took a fast break from Cooke, it was 20-17. But big Jim Fox scored on a layup and Collins canned a free shot for the tie.

The teams went like that till about three minutes were left in the period. Leading 36-35, Carolina got four straight baskets from Bennett, Shaffer, Respress and Cooke, all on short jumps off nice feeds, to go into a 44-35 lead.

Jimmy Collins and Yarborough cut it to five, but Respress' layup matched Collins' jumper, and Bennett sank a free throw and then a long jumper from the rebound of his missed second free throw to give UNC its 48-41 halftime margin.

Lewis Hits 51 For Record In Frosh Win

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Hot-shooting Bobby Lewis set an all-time school record of 51 points Monday night as he led the Tar Babies to a 111-65 rout of the Elon Jayvees.

The Washington, D. C. pistol received a thunderous ovation from the partisan Woollen Gym crowd when he left the game with 1:05 left in the contest which was no contest.

The UNC frosh got off to a slow start and trailed the visitors from Burlington, 11-7, with 16 minutes left in the first period. But the Tar Babies caught fire then. They tied the score at 11-11 with 15:23 left.

Moments later Tom Gauntlett drove in for a lay-up and connected on a free throw to complete the three point play. This put Ken Roseman's men in front 14-11 and from then on it was all UNC.

Billy Freuler and Lewis hit back-to-back shots to stretch the advantage to 18-11. With 4:20 left, Lewis, who hit on 17 of 29 from the floor and 17 of 21 from the line, dunked a tap-in as the T-Babies doubled the Elon count, 43-21.

The sparkling frosh worked the ball well all night, but it was their red-hot attack on the nets which most pleased the opening-game spectators.

Freuler, a product of Tarboro, was the No. 2 man in the point column with 21 points. Gauntlett finished the night with 17, and Ian Morrison, who like Lewis was a high school All-America, came in with 10. The latter's ability as a playmaker brightens UNC's backcourt future.

The 51-point production by Lewis broke the UNC mark of 47, set by Lennie Rosenbluth in a 1957 varsity skirmish with Furman.

Lewis was also the Tar Babies big man under the boards, grabbing 22 rebounds. The 6-3 jackrabbit was called three times on goal-tending.

The Tar Babies, who led the Doug Moe-coached Eloners at the half, 54-28, surpassed the century mark when "little brother" Donnie Moe hit on a field goal with two minutes left.

Mayor, Smith To Address Cosmo Club

Chapel Hill Mayor Sandy McClamroch and County Commissioner Carl Smith will tell of experiences on their recent "people-to-people" trip to Russia and other Iron Curtain countries in a public meeting tonight.

The program at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall will be sponsored by the Cosmopolitan Club. Smith and McClamroch participated in the 20-day trip sponsored by the N.C. Association of County Commissioners.

Both took part in the "People-to-People Goodwill Tour" by 38 North Carolina public officials to several cities in Europe. The tour was led by Alex McMahon of Chapel Hill. Those who went paid their own way—about $1,500 for the whole trip.

BIG KEN WILLARD, Carolina's All-Conference fullback, is brought down by unidentified Dook linebacker after picking up five yards and a first down in the annual clash Thursday. Willard picked up 68 yards rushing to lead both squads in the aerial battle. Cole Kortner (79) and Jerry Cabe (68) lead the blocking.

Congratulations!

Well, that ol' Blue Devil is really blue now, and the word for it is, "Suffer!"

And when you get to Jacksonville, you know there'll be a passel of Carolina supporters there to cheer you on, urging you to come through and "Give 'em hell, Heels!"

Of course, we don't know yet to whom you're supposed to give all this hell, but we are confident you can do the job. Maybe all the good Carolina Gentlemen and Ladies who go down to the sunny shores to watch won't raise too much enthusiastic sand, and everybody will have a good time.

Twist that 'Gator's tail, Heels!

Another Stone, Another Speaker Ban

It looks as though Virginia, a state described as "a mountain of conceit" by loyal North Carolinians for years, is not too proud to drag along on its sister's coattails.

We have noted with interest and concern a recent news article appearing in leading Virginia dailies which indicates that State Sen. William F. Stone of Martinsville is planning to introduce a "speaker ban law" similar to our own when the Virginia legislature convenes in January.

This, we would contend, is bad for the same reasons that our own law is a slam at academic freedom and the freedom to hear. Even so, we would understand how Sen. Stone might do such a thing, for our law has received a great amount of publicity and has succeeded in providing state leaders with a major headache for months now. Who wouldn't like a share in such a bright spotlight as that created by this law? Certainly not Virginia, a state which tries to have everything, even belatedly.

Were it not for one small fact, then, we might be inclined to offer our condolences to loyal citizens of the Old Dominion, give a few lessons in "How to Write Anti-Gag Editorials" to the editor of the Cavalier, UVa's student paper, and sit back to hope against hope that the law would fail to pass. The fact that prevents this is that William F. Stone, state senator of Virginia, is none other than the brother of Clarence Stone, former president of the North Carolina State Senate and one of the men chiefly responsible for the passage of our own Speaker Ban law.

So as not to jump to conclusions unadvisedly, we asked Sen. Stone (North Carolina) if he would care to discuss the probable reasons for the proposed Virginia law. He didn't.

Thus, we can only assume that perhaps Sen. Stone (Virginia) somehow heard of the idea of the Speaker Ban, and seeing how much of a furor it had caused among Tar Heels, decided that Big Brother had nothing on him. It would hardly be unreasonable to guess that perhaps, just perhaps, he might have asked Big Brother how one goes about passing such a controversial and sensational piece of legislation.

Consider it for a moment. If this is indeed the case, then the Senators Stone have powers that are seemingly unlimited. If Sen. Stone (North Carolina) did pass the idea along, and if the bill should pass in Virginia, then the Stone family will have succeeded in offending men of good conscience and integrity in two of the leading states of the South, not to mention injuring two of the country's great universities.

It seems to us that all that power is being wasted. Anyone who has the potential to destroy so much and offend so many should be put where their abilities are more likely to be appreciated.

Like Moscow.

'Who Were You Calling, Sir?'

Chapel Hill got new telephone books and the University got new numbers while we were away for Thanksgiving, and the first call we made confused us till we realized it. Elsewhere in today's Daily Tar Heel is a story explaining how the new system is supposed to work.

We think the new Centrex is a good thing. All University numbers are now on the same exchange, making it easier to reach any number at any time. All University calls go through a central switchboard, served by a University operator at all times.

The problem with the new system is that we'll all have to forget the numbers we'd carefully memorized over the years and learn the new ones. But since all campus numbers are on a 933 exchange, any campus number called from another campus number may be dialed with only five digits. Off campus numbers are dialed in the usual way.

Now when you want to call the paper and complain about the mistakes in the exam schedule, you dial 3-1011 from a campus phone, and 933-1011 from an off-campus phone.

Have fun.

More Comment On The Tragedy

Prospect?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Dear school administrators, people of North Carolina and other Americans to whom this article may apply:

I would like to refresh your memory on a few well known facts that have recently occurred. People all over the world have been grieved this past weekend by the death of our President. He was given respect by all the countries of the Free World and many Iron Curtain Countries. England showed its sorrow by ringing the Westminster Chimes, which was the first time they have ever been rung for anyone outside of the Royal Family.

In France, they flew the French Flag at half-mast for the first time in history for anyone other than a Frenchman. In Berlin, eighty thousand Berliners had a candle light procession through the streets to demonstrate their respects. Marshall Tito of Yugoslavia has proclaimed the President's burial day as an official day of mourning.

Moscow has invited a Catholic Priest from the United States to preach the Catholic services on this past Monday. Ireland has been grieved by the President's death more than any other country, excluding the U.S., and it has proclaimed all this week to be a week of mourning.

In South Vietnam, the Buddhist churches held special services to show their respect for the good that he has exhibited to them. You must remember that at this time the Buddhists are not in favor of the Catholics and our President was a Catholic. This must show that they held President Kennedy in very high esteem. All these mournful events go to show the deep respect our former President had around the world.

In the United States, the homeland of President Kennedy, the people also showed their respects by obvious means. I am not sure of the impact the death of the President had on the people of this state because I drove to my home in West Virginia as soon as I heard of his death. I know that the people of my state were crushed and their respect was shown by closing all business establishments and schools on Saturday and Monday. All of the Christmas decorations in the store windows were turned off and there was very little traffic on the roads. The Governor of the State followed the new President's request by closing all of the schools on Monday. This request was adhered to by practically all of the population. All of the school students in the state that I talked to said that they would be happy to make up the extra day of school at the end of the year. They wished to follow the new President's first proclamation, by having Monday as a day of mourning.

Last Thursday, I proudly posted a U.N.C. sticker on the back window of my car because I was proud to be a student of this university. I have always heard of the great reputation the people of North Carolina and U.N.C. had as being gentlemen. I have also been aware of the reputation my own state of West Virginia has for being a state of "hicks" and backward people. I wanted to come to this school because of its reputation and I thought I would better myself as a man. After returning, I learned that we would have school Monday and that all of the stores would be open, both against the new President's request, I can't help but feel ashamed of this state and its money hungry people.

If this is part of the North Carolina role of being gentlemen, I am sorry to say that I feel I will be much better off as a West Virginia "hick." I think it is indeed sorrowful, sinful and disgraceful that the people of this state can not show more respect for their past President's death and their new President's request. I would gladly stay here for one extra day in June if we would have followed the President's request. Even if we didn't get to make the day up, I think that learning to follow the orders or requests of the President of the United States is higher education in itself, than would be possible to get out of one day of school. It looks as if North Carolina has an unwritten Speaker Ban Law against the President besides the written one against Communists. This "hick" is ashamed, as I hope that you gentlemen are.

Long Shadow

Ours

Editors, The Tar Heel,

What was the real meaning of what happened last Friday? This is a question that will echo for days to come. Answers will come, some profound, some foolish. Aside from those who were close friends and family of the President, I believe that those upon whom this event will have the profoundest effects can be seen by looking around you at this moment, those sitting beside you in the classroom and those sitting beside you in the local restaurants. It is for them that a profound abyss opened this past weekend. It was this man who opened a new world for us, the young of our day. It was a world that had room for reasoned thought and had little room for transparent, and hypocritical phrases. It was a world that had offered us a challenge, not the easy going reserve of the previous eight years. It was a world that had suddenly taken on meaning for a generation that had been reared in a chaotic and stumbling world; in a world that was materially easy and neither offered nor asked any great sacrifice, and because of this was soft, ill defined and not worthy of the dignity that is man. A world that was especially repugnant to the emotions of the young, who were not satisfied to sit back and relax, but who wished for a vision. It was this man who had offered this vision, the vision of a man who could say "ask not what your country can do for you. Ask what you can do for your country." This was the world that we have been living in. Those of us who criticized the man usually did so not because we thought he was wrong, but because he did not push quite as hard as our young blood would like. But still, we were with him, for he offered us the hope that perhaps the world could be changed if only one would combine a searching intellect with a deep courage. This was our President. Not the older generations Pres., but our's.

But suddenly that world had been changed, the vision has been shattered and the abyss opened. This I think is the meaning of this week's tragic events. This is the reason for the stunned, drained look on the faces on our campus.

The greatest treason that could be perpetrated on the memory of this man and what he offered us would be to hurl hate and invectives, and then to withdraw from the harsh reality of this chaotic and irrational world. The highest tribute that can be paid to this man is to stand with pride and courage and face the world headon, not with hate but with compassion, not with irrational phases but with reason, and not meekly, but with courage. For these are the things that this man meant to our generation.

Great And Good

Editors, the Tar Heel,

Monday night, November 25, 1963. Time has stood still for me since the tragic death of President Kennedy on Friday. I have done little for four days except sit in Graham Memorial and watch the aftermath over TV. Everybody on the campus has been in a state of shock, and I don't believe anyone has made any pretense of studying.

I think a great and good man has been taken from us. I can't understand why people hated him. I never heard him say anything that I could disagree with. Every statement he ever made, as far as I could judge, was sound, and constructive. His goal was to lift people out of themselves and to raise their sight above and beyond their small, petty preoccupation with self.

I believe it was on a Greek tomb stone that the following words were inscribed: "Here lies the remains of a smart man, but he lacked fore-sight." Most of us muddle through life, then wonder what hit us when we meet with disaster. People need some greater purpose in life than to eat and sleep and go to the movies (or watch TV) was said at the beginning of World War I. John F. Kennedy was determined to find the moral equivalent of war. Let us hope he succeeded better than he knew, for if there should be a third world war, the prospect of another chance for mankind look very slim.

I sat by the radio for three days when President Roosevelt died, and wished I could see the caisson and the horses take his body down Pennsylvania Avenue. Well, today I did see both funeral processions when they re-ran President Roosevelt's funeral. Each funeral was sad, but I believe more people wept at Roosevelt's passing than at Kennedy's.

More On Ban

Editors, the Tar Heel,

I have decided to write this letter because I feel that 95 per cent of the letters written to you concerning the speaker's ban have missed their mark. The speaker's ban is more than an insult to our intelligence; it is the result of an admitted feeling of the state legislators that the people of North Carolina are just gullible children. Although this point can be made, this is not the point in question. The problem is one of straight idealism.

The speaker's ban is first a constitutional question. Freedom of speech was guaranteed by this country's founders because they wanted the people to have the right to hear all sides of a question. Why was this done? Because in a democracy the people are the sole judge of right and wrong.

The first step taken by elitists is to limit freedom of speech so that the elitist's own views would appear more correct. Examples of this can be found in any history of a totalitarian take over. Cuba, perhaps, is the best modern example.

Something else must also be considered. Where will this censoring stop once this precedent has been established? It is possible that soon other people who oppose the present government would also be censored in an ever-widening circle of "unpermittables." Also not far-fetched is the possibility that people might be censored on the basis of racial and religious prejudice. And, perhaps, some day we may arrive at the extreme that all brown-eyed people with freckles on their noses and who wear white socks could not speak before the public.

We must now ask ourselves whether or not censorship is leading to a better democracy, or is it making us become more like the very enemy we oppose. How much better are we than they if we misuse freedom in the very same manner as they. In truth, how worthy can an ideal be in a democracy if we are afraid to show the real judgers of truth, the people, all sides of the story because of a fear that our own side may collapse? How can we improve our imperfect selves and society if we close our minds to opposing arguments?

Another Night At Lenoir

By JOHN GOINS

Everyone who has eaten in Lenior Hall has probably noticed the hard-working, loyal busboys who faithfully keep the tables cleared so you will have a neat, clean table on which to eat your nice, wholesome food. It is from these devoted employees that this editorial comes.

You probably remember Griselda, the pig who ran for a student government office last Spring. The busboys in Lenior Hall swear that sometimes they believe Griselda has come back to haunt the campus and has made Lenior Hall her headquarters! (Sorry, Griselda).

But the busboys believe they could even put up with her pig-like eating habits if people would only co-operate a little in some of the minutest details. Listed below are some of the people who have failed to heed these little details and who are now on the Lenior Hall busboy's people-we-would-like-to-see-eat-spinach-every-meal list.

1. Lazy Charlie, the guy who, in the presence of six (count 'em) signs which practically scream: PLEASE PUT TRAYS ON RACK, bravely persists in putting his tray in chairs or on nearby tables.

2. Philosopher Sam, the guy who comes in with his cronies about 6:30 every night and sits around until 8 p.m. solving the world's problems, meanwhile getting in the way of the busboys who are trying to clean up and get back to their rooms.

3. Nervous Sue, the girl (usually) who takes out her frustration on napkins and spreads the tatters all over the table.

4. Funny-man Joe, the practical joker who thinks it's funny to leave a glass of water turned upside down on the top of his table. One of these days he's going to die laughing.

There are others on the busboy's list, but these are the main offenders. The busboys aren't asking you to leave tips, just to use a little common sense and help them out a little.

Even pigs don't bite the hand that slops them.

Lasting Memorial

From The Chapel Hill Weekly

Site work has begun for a University residence hall in the Craige-Ehringhaus complex.

The new residence hall will house about 800 men and, depending on construction bids, might go to nine or ten stories.

Construction is expected to begin within three or four months and the residence hall is expected to be ready for occupancy in the fall of 1965.

The new residence hall has not yet been named.

An especially fitting name, we think, and one which would do the University proud would be the John F. Kennedy Residence Hall.

There is no precedent for naming University of North Carolina buildings for United States Presidents, but neither is there any rule or statute prohibiting it.

This seems to be an appropriate time for setting the precedent.

President Kennedy had ties with Chapel Hill, having been awarded an honorary degree by the University and having delivered the University Day address here in 1961.

Beyond that, President Kennedy was deeply interested in higher education and often acknowledged its vital importance to the future of the Nation.

If there were no other reasons, the University would be fully justified in naming the new residence hall for President Kennedy simply bacause he and the University stood for the same things and their ultimate goals were identical: to make this a better and more enlightened world.

The University paid high tribute to President Kennedy when he was alive and mourned deeply at his death. Now it has an opportunity to offer him a more permanent memorial. We hope the University will see fit to do so.

New Phone System Is Installed Here

By KAREN SHERRILL

The University has a new Centrex telephone system.

The private automatic branch exchange system that went into effect at 12:01 p.m. Sunday offers these campus advantages.

—Intra-campus dialing system using only five digits.

—Full-time University operator.

The University operator will now be able to transfer direct dial and long distance calls from one campus number to another. In addition to the full-time operator four switchboard positions have been provided for heavy call-load periods.

University faculty, Administration and business offices all have new numbers of the 933 and 966 series. These numbers may be reached by dialing the last five digits only.

All seven digits must be dialed for any other numbers. All campus living units have retained their old numbers.

The long distance operator can be reached from 933 and 966 numbers by dialing 90.

Full instructions for using the new campus system can be found on page 3 of the blue section.

The blue - page section also includes dormitories, fraternities, sororities, information, academic schools and faculty numbers.

The directory has been revised for easier use and the public is asked to note the change in police, fire department and other emergency numbers.

PEANUTS

How to Knock Your Girl's Eye Out for Christmas—

Might Give Her A Used Car—

A snappy little jalopy would be a right impressive gift, especially if you have time to give it a coat of pink paint and a tune-up—but think, chum—for the same money you could give her a hundred of the best new novels at the Intimate, and each one gift-wrapped prettier than the last. Now that's what we call impressive!

Might Give Her a Midget Submarine

Our Comparative Shoppers tell us that in Texas you can get a snazzy little one-woman sub for under twenty thousand bucks. Impressive, huh? Well chum, the same money would buy her a truckload of the most expensive art books at the Intimate, all wrapped up Christmaslike, with enough left over for a book-mark or two. What woman wouldn't prefer the world's loveliest books to a submarine?

Or a Solid Mink You-Know-What

Folks tell us that Mink Melts the Female Heart, and that it is Worth its Weight in Gold. Maybe so, but for the price of just a little bitty chunk of mink, you can buy her a shelf-full of books like THIS IS MY BELOVED and FOR YOU WITH LOVE. If she's nice, she'll let you read 'em to her and all that. Try reading a mink to a woman!

Or, Maybe, a Cute Baby Giraffe

We haven't any idea what a baby giraffe costs, but it should make an unforgettable gift! Still and all, we are sure that the same investment would buy enough books to pile higher than a giraffe's eye—and books won't shed hair all over the carpet!

But Shucks! She'll Like Books Better!

There just plain isn't any gift as good as a book for the sort of dame you would fall for. A biddy with brains as well as the usual facade likes to know that you notice both, and a good book gets the message across. In the Intimate, you'll find books to please almost any facet of the feminine fancy—love poems, cook books, scholarly books, sly humor, books that say "this is shared by you and me, and nobody else in the world."

Matter of fact, books are the most impressive Christmas gifts money can buy. Come join the Merry Christmas Shopping!

Blue Dolphins Open With VMI Tonight

By PERRY McCARTY

Tonight at 8 p.m. Coach Pat Earey's swimmers play host to VMI in Bowman Gray Pool. A surprisingly strong team last year, VMI should be well represented again this season. However the Tar Heels remain in the favorite's role by virtue of their outstanding front line and several noteworthy pre-season performances.

In the freestyle sprints (50 and 100 yards), Coach Earey will call on Davis Roberts, Chip Smith, Thad Adams, and Scott Taylor.

All-America Harrison Merrill, Mike Bissell and John Sheldon will get the nod in the longer freestyle races (200 and 500 yards) while Thompson Mann, UNC's other All-America "M" boy, will compete in both backstroke events — 100 and 200 yards. Fred Lipp and Rick Forum will likewise see yeoman service in the butterfly and breaststroke races.

UNC's medley relay team of Mann, Lipp, Forum, and Merrill has an excellent chance to better the existing school record, certainly later in the year, if not at this early date.

The freestyle relay team of Roberts, Smith, Adams, and Sheldon should be hard to beat. Diver Dave Moody spent the summer here with Coach Connie Steele and is a welcome addition to what may become the strongest tanker team in recent years.

FROSH OUTLOOK

Of the nearly 40 candidates that reported, some 15-20 are regarded as genuine varsity prospects. Chief among these is Pete Worthen, freestyle sprinter and Eastern Interscholastic record holder at 50 yards. Worthen has already bettered the existing varsity 50 yard record of 22.4 seconds.

Versatile Jack Hayden can swim any stroke and is at his best in the individual medley. Breast strokers Fred Tygart, Bob Bottomly; butterfliers Tom Adams, John Trull, Rod Worley; backstrokers Hayden, Ray Staley, and Cleve Wright; distance freestylers Allen McDonald, Russ Sleeper, Jim Bernuth; and sprinters Jay Scattergood and Strud Norfleet provide a substantial core. Freshman diver Bob Ayedelette has exceptional ability.

Lacey Picked By NY Jets; NFL Stalled

At presstime, the word was that the NFL was still in the initial round with the Chicago Bears yet to make their first choice. That was at 6:30 p.m.

An earlier wire service report said Dave Parks, a pass catching end from Texas Tech, was the number one choice. He was picked by the San Francisco 49ers. The last place 49ers had been expected to choose quarterback George Mira of Miami but decided instead to try to strengthen their receiving.

The Philadelphia Eagles, picking second, wasted no time in choosing Bob Brown, the 246-pound Nebraska guard who was rated one of the top interior linemen in the nation.

The following then were chosen: Washington (halfback Charles Taylor, Arizona State), Dallas (tackle Scott Appleton, Texas), Detroit (quarterback Pete Beathard, Southern Cal), Minnesota (tackle Carl Eller, Minnesota), St. Louis (tackle Ken Kortas, Louisville), Pittsburgh (halfback Paul Martha, Pitt), Cleveland (halfback Paul Warfield, Ohio State), New York (halfback Joe Don Looney, ex-Oklahoma), Green Bay (guard Carl Voss, Nebraska).

Saturday, the American Football League held its draft. From the ACC, these were chosen: Bob Lacey, UNC (by New York), Joe Scarpati, NCS (by Boston), Jay Wilkinson, Duke (by Kansas City), Pat Crain, Clemson (by Houston, a future), Don Montgomery, NCS (by Buffalo), Dick Shiner, Maryland (by New York).

Only 19th???

NEW YORK (UPI) — The University of Texas Longhorns, owners of the only perfect record among major college teams, Monday were named the 1963 national football champions by the United Press International Board of Coaches.

In one of the rare runaway races in the history of the ratings, Coach Darrell Royal's club was ranked first by 31 of the 35 coaches on the UPI rating board. It is Texas' first national championship in the 14-year history of the ratings.

North Carolina finished in the final poll with a rating of 19th in the country. N.C. State was among the other teams out of the top twenty receiving votes.

| Team | Points |
|---|---|
| 1. Texas (31) 10-0 | 346 |
| 2. Navy (4) 8-1 | 296 |
| 3. Pittsburgh 8-1 | 223 |

Second 10: 11, Mississippi State (27); 12, Syracuse (25); 13, Arizona State (22); 14, Memphis State (16); 15, Washington (13); 16, (tie), Penn State, Southern California and Missouri (9); 19, North Carolina (8); 20, Baylor (7).

Moo, Moo— Warm Cows Graze North

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — N. C. State today accepted a bid to play in the fifth annual Liberty Bowl football game at Philadelphia Stadium Dec. 28.

The announcement was made by Ambrose F. (Bud) Dudley, president of the Liberty Bowl Charities, Inc. Team Selection Committee, who said an announcement on an opponent for State would be made as soon as possible.

The game, originally scheduled for Dec. 21, was postponed one week Sunday.

N. C. State has an over-all season record of 8-2, outscoring their opponents 176 points to 91. The Wolfpack is also 6-1 in the ACC, giving them the co-conference title with North Carolina which has been selected for the Gator Bowl.

The announcement said that State would bring a 130-piece band to the game, proceeds of which benefit 61 hospital members of the Delaware Valley Hospital Council.

State will be making its first Bowl appearance since 1946 and the second in the school's history.

The last time State went to a bowl Coach Beattie Feathers took the Wolfpack to the Gator Bowl where Oklahoma romped to a 34-13 win in the days before the establishment of the ACC.

Coach Earle Edwards said he was "delighted" about the bid to play in the Liberty Bowl.

Yum, Yum-Turkey Was Good

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Thanksgiving Day, 1963. It was a bad day for turkeys and devils, but a good, very good day for Tar Heels.

Duke thought it had a 14-13 upset all locked up, but North Carolina got a foot in the door and barged right on through for a 16-14 win, a share of its first ACC title and a trip to the Gator Bowl on December 28.

The foot belonged to sophomore Max Chapman. He used it to place the football neatly through the uprights with 21 seconds left on the scoreboard clock. The fact that the deciding kick came from 42 yards out fits right in with the pattern of the whole game. Dramatic. Fantastic. Explosive. Just plain wild.

The Tar Heels, who had zoomed to a 13-0 lead early in the third quarter, saw their lead wiped out as Scotty Glacken, Billy Futrell and Jay Wilkinson lit the fuse to the Duke dynamite.

Glacken, who was Mr. Slippery to UNC tacklers all afternoon, put the Devils onto the scoreboard late in the third period with a 70-yard bomb to Futrell, who flew down the left sidelines, beat two defenders at the UNC 30 to make the catch, and scampered untouched into the end zone.

Wilkinson's big play of the day came with 4:58 left when he took a pitchout from Glacken at the Carolina 24 and did a fancy bit of stepping all the way to paydirt. Steve Holloway booted his second PAT of the cloudy afternoon and the Duke fans went into premature ecstacy. Their heroes were up, 14-13, and the bowl-bound visitors from Chapel Hill had been sidetracked.

But it wasn't so. Even after the Blue Devils picked off a Junior Edge pass at the UNC 44 and returned it to the UNC 34, it still wasn't so. About 2:30 was left when this happened, but Duke was unable to control the ball. With 1:30 left the Devils found themselves with a fourth-and-21 situation at the UNC 45. They had to punt, thus giving the Jim Hickeys one final chance.

Things started going UNC's way from here on. First, Rod Stewart's punt traveled only 17 yards before it went out of bounds. This gave the Heels possession on their own 28. And Edge, who had been throwing as never before all afternoon but had seen many of his passes dropped, took command immediately.

The cool-headed senior looked like Johnny Unitas as he picked out Bob Lacey at the sidelines twice for gains of 17 and 14 yards, and ran two sweeps of his right end for nine and 11-yard advances. This second run placed the ball on the Duke 21. UNC has a first down. The clock shows 1:00.

Edge runs a bootleg to the right, can't find a receiver, decides to run, and at the last moment hits Tom Brooks at the 15. But the man with the striped-shirt rules Edge had gone past the line of scrimmage. This costs the Heels five yards—back to the 26, where it's third down —38 seconds left.

This time Edge drops straight back, fires to John Hammett, who almost makes the grab despite two defenders right on the goal line. The ball falls to the ground. It's fourth down. 27 seconds remain. Hickey makes his decision.

Enter Chapman and Sandy Kinney. Enter tension. The throng of 47,500 watches in hushed awe. The flag hangs limp at half-mast at the other end of the stadium. It's almost dark now. A crowd of about 100 waits in anticipation behind the goal post.

Chris Hanburger makes the snap to Kinney who places the ball down at the 32. Chapman's right foot comes forward. The ball is in the air. It doesn't look long enough. Then it looks long enough, but maybe a bit wide to the right. Then—the official's hands fly above his head. IT'S GOOD.

The trip to Jacksonville three days after Christmas should also be good. Good for the team, the school, the state, the conference. And as important as Chapman's foot was in putting the Heels into the Gator Bowl, there were other factors too.

Ken Willard was his usual bullish self as the Tar Heels gave Duke some of its own medicine. The big halfback led the UNC ground attack with 65 yards, beating out Wilkinson for the ACC rushing title.

Willard contributed two of the biggest plays of the day. He scored UNC's first TD late in the second period on a 14-yard power-sweep around left end. He set up the Heels' second tally when he took a screen pass from Edge at midfield and galloped like a wild horse down to the Duke 13. Five plays later Eddie Kesler rammed off right tackle from one-yard out for the touchdown.

Chapman, forced into point-after duty because of a leg injury to Dave Braine, missed the conversion after Kesler's TD. He could have been the goat. He corrected that in no uncertain terms.

Labor Chieftain Blasts Business For 'Callous Hiring Indifference'

Labor Loss Is Cited As Top Problem

By GARY BLANCHARD

A top U.S. labor leader charged yesterday that big business and industry have shown a "callous indifference" and a "let-em-eat-cake condescension" toward mass unemployment, deprivation and suffering. He warned that this "could very possibly one day result in big business and industry being called to account."

"After all," said James B. Carey, 52, president of the International Union of Electrical workers and an AFL-CIO vice-president, "whose fault is it that the vaunted free enterprise system doesn't work for millions of jobless Americans?"

Speaking to the UNC Newman Club, a Catholic discussion group, Carey said "serious and drastic economic measures must be taken" to solve the nation's unemployment problem, which has caused "the paradox of proverty admist plenty."

"Prominent among these measures should be a large public works program and the establishment of a 35-hour week throughout industry," he said.

Carey, maintaining that two-fifths of the American people "live in proverty-stricken conditions," said 'the right to a job is a property right" although this is not recognized as a constitutional fact or as a legal precedent.

'If an American in 1963 doesn't have the right to work, the right to a job, then what rights does he have?" Carey asked. "What rights does he have if he cannot provide a decent home for his family . . . if he cannot give his children necessary medical care and educational opportunities?"

In a brief interview, Carey said Monday's Supreme Court ruling giving state courts the right to enforce state laws regulating "agency shop" labor union agreements, "will have limited effects in limited areas and has mixed blessings.

"Rather than mincing steps, as the Court did in this decision," he added, "I would prefer that Congress enact legislation to repeal the Taft-Hartly Act, especially Section 14-B which gives the states the right to enact right-to-work legislation."

Carey also said that "Americans must rid themselves of irrational fears of economic planning, implanted by years of National Association of Manufacturers and Chamber of Commerce propaganda.

"Essentially what we have now is a planless society and a planless economy, and planlessness has brought us to our state of four postwar recessions, six million seemingly permanently unemployed, and 77 million impoverished and deprived.

"We must learn that economic planning thoroughly compatible with democracy and freedom, and that actually the greatest danger to freedom is mass unemployment, millions of men and women suffering enforced idleness and economic hardship.

"Government must play its role," he said, "with all other human institutions, in taking mankind's part in seeking the eradication of proverty and economic misery, in elevating the living standards and thus the dignity of all God's children."

Tracing the development of organized labor, Carey cited three papal encyclicals with playing a major role in bringing about recognition of "the rights and obligations of workers in the modern world.

"First was Pope Leo XIII's Rerum Novarum in 1891," he said, "and 40 years later Pope Pius XI's Quadregesimo Anno. Finally, two years ago, Pope John XXIII gave us the epochal Mater and Magistra."

Gator Bowl Train

If enough interest is shown, the Seaboard Railroad will add special cars to its train, which will leave Raleigh at 9:15 p.m. Thursday night, Dec. 26, and arrive in Jacksonville Friday morning.

The round-trip cost will be $26.50 per person. Both block and individual seats will be sold, all on day coaches.

All interested persons are asked to call the student government secretary between 2 and 5 this afternoon. The number is 933-1257. Tell the secretary how many people are expected to be in your party.

Mike Lawler, Student Body president, will meet this afternoon with all dormitory, fraternity and sorority presidents. They will be notified sometime today of time and place for this meeting, the purpose of which is to coordinate groups interested in making the trip.

The 9:15 Thursday evening departure is only tentative. It is possible that the train could leave at 6:15 Friday morning (Dec. 27) or 9:50 that night, if the mojority prefers this schedule.

Violence-Torn Venezuela Calls For Cuban Blockade

CARACAS (UPI) — President Romulo Betancourt called Tuesday for an air naval blockade of Communist Cuba to prevent it from exporting arms and revolution.

Betancourt's call for hemispheric action against Fidel Castro came as new scattered violence flared anew in Venezuela and President-elect Raul Leoni awaited official confirmation of his election to the presidency.

It also coincided with a Washington decision by the Organization of American States to investigate Venezuelan charges of aggression lodged against Cuba.

The OAS council voted 16-0 to appoint a five-nation investigating committee to study the charges.

Betancourt's call for action against Cuba was his second in a week. The first came after Venezuelan confirmation of suspicions that a three-ton shipment of arms and munitions found buried on a lonely Venezuelan beach last month orginated in Cuba.

Speaking to foreign newsmen here to cover the elections, Betancourt also called on all hemisphere nations to break diplomatic relations with Cuba. Only five — Brazil, Bolivia, Chile, Mexico and Uraguay — still retain such contacts with the Castor regime.

Earlier, in a resumption of the Cuban-backed terrorist war against Betancourt, one man was killed and another wounded when a bomb-rigged car exploded in the Catia market area.

NEAR-WINNER

Leonard Victor Huggins Jr., part-time instructor in the Department of Art has been given an "Honorable Mention" award for his oil painting, "Painting Number 23" in the Fifth Annual Springs Art Contest and Show in Columbia, N. C.

The exhibition is limited to artists from the Carolinas and is sponsored annually in November by The Springs Cotton Mills.

The six prize-winning entries and the 25 Honorable Mention winners will compose a traveling exhibit to be shown in the Springs Building in New York City for two weeks. The exhibition will then tour the Carolinas for six months.

UP To Meet Next Tuesday

The University Party will hold a regular business meeting next Tuesday at p.m. in Gerrard Hall. The highlight of the meeting will be the election of a new party chairman to succeed Mike Chanin.

Other items on the agenda will be the same as those on the last scheduled party meeting which was postponed, with the exception that Dean Long will not speak.

The UP Executive Committee will meet today at 4 p.m. in the Grail Room to conduct legislative interviews for vacant seats in TM II and IV.

Tom Gilmore To Address YDC Meet

Tom Gilmore, president-elect of the Young Democratic Clubs of North Carolina, will be the featured speaker at the second fall meeting of the Carolina YDC Thursday at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Gilmore will outline the YDC's obligations and responsibilities in next year's general elections.

The speaker was selected as one of the three top Young Democrats in the nation in 1958 and was assistant manager of Gov. Terry Sanford's Youth Voters Campaign in 1960.

He served as State YDC organizer for two years and as president-elect of the Statewide organization, will direct its efforts in next year's important elections.

Gilmore, a native of Julian in Guilford County, is a graduate of North Carolina State College, holding a degree in horticulture.

His appointment to the State Board of Agriculture in 1961 marked the first time a man as young as he was named to this board.

Details of the YDC National Convention at Las Vegas, Nev., which was postponed from December to February because of the tragic death of President Kennedy, will be discussed at Thursday's meeting.

Carolina club president, Lane Brown, urged all interested persons, club members as well as non-members, to attend the meeting.

JACOCKS COLLECTION

American and Old Master prints from the extensive collection of Dr. W. P. Jacocks will be on exhibit at the Ackland Art Center from Dec. 5 through Jan. 5.

The Ackland Art Center is open to the public Tuesdays through Fridays from 2 to 5 p.m. and 8 to 10 p.m.; Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.: and Sundays, 2 to 5 p.m. The Center is closed on Mondays.

Exam Schedule

The time of an examination may not be changed after it has been fixed in the schedule. Quizzes are not to be given in this semester on or after Monday, January 13, 1964.

Prior to taking an examination to remove a grade of "Exc. Abs." or "Cond." a permit must be secured by the student from the Office of Records and Registration.

World News Briefs

Administration Pledges Rights Support

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Johnson Tuesday threw the full weight of his administration behind an all-out campaign to win the earliest possible passage of the late President Kennedy's civil rights bill.

Leaders of Congress, organized labor and the Negro community immediately swung behind the President.

They pledged solid support for swift enactment of what Johnson has described as one of the greatest tributes that could be paid to President Kennedy.

The battle will begin Monday on Capitol Hill, and the target will be the Southern-dominated House Rules Committee, where the bill is now stalled.

FBI Report Indicates Oswald 'A Loner'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An FBI report concludes that Lee Harvey Oswald was a "loner" who shot and killed President Kennedy, government sources said Tuesday.

The report says the President was hit by two bullets, either of which would have killed him.

The report is expected to be submitted to Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy Wednesday.

By the end of the week it is expected to be forwarded to the White House and turned over to a blue-ribbon commission named by President Johnson to investigate the assassination.

Sources said the report finds that both Harvey and Jack Ruby were acting as individuals, not as part of any conspiracy.

Murder Trial Of Jack Ruby Postponed

DALLAS (UPI)—The murder trial of Jack Ruby, who killed the man accused of assassinating President Kennedy, was postponed Tuesday until Feb. 3.

Ruby's trial originally was scheduled to start Monday. But Dist. Judge Joe B. Brown postponed it after conferences with Dist. Atty. Henry Wade and defense lawyer Tom Howard.

Neither Wade nor Howard commented. But it was understood that neither was ready for trial Monday.

Senate Approves Bill For Mrs. Kennedy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate quickly approved a bill Tuesday to provide an office staff and Secret Service protection for Mrs. John F. Kennedy.

The measure was sent back to the House for action on a couple of minor changes. The House passed the bill Monday.

The Senate version gives Mrs. Kennedy an office staff for a year, free mailing privileges for life, and Secret Service protection for herself and her two children, Caroline and John Jr., for a year.

In other news, Mrs. Kennedy witnessed a solemn ceremony honoring the "exceptional bravery" of Secret Service Agent Clinton J. Hill, who jumped to her aid at the first sound of gunfire in Dallas.

220 Servicemen Leave Saigon For Home

A fourth plane developed engine trouble on Okinawa, and 74 other men were stranded here until today.

The 294 men are the first of 1,000 U.S. military advisers who expect to be home for Christmas. Two other flights have been scheduled during the next nine days.

Military sources here did not take the scheduled 1,000-man reduction as a sign the war against the Viet Cong guerrillas is going better or that the U.S. military effort is easing off. A total of 15,500 Americans remain.

Love Says Johnson Will Cut Budget

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Gov. John Love of Colorado said Tuesday that President Johnson will submit a budget next year $3 billion less than the one the late President Kennedy would have proposed.

Love quoted Johnson as saying such a cut was necessary to assist in getting the tax bill through Congress.

The governor did not know what the proposed Kennedy budget would have been.

Personality Tests Hard To Measure

By PATTY NASH

Measurement of personality tests in college admission procedures is "almost impossible," according to Charles Bernard, director of admissions at UNC.

Bernard agrees with the College Entrance Examination Board which recently warned its members that the use of these tests involves "very serious risks."

"I just don't believe there's an effective test," he said.

The CEEB feels that the full conquences of such tests of creativity, motivation and other characteristics are not yet known, and that they should not be used as a basis for admission to college.

The tests also make it possible for students to lie in reporting their behavior to their advantage, the board stated.

The trustees of the CEEB said that in many cases school authorities who don't understand the meaning of the measurement scores are given access to personal and private information.

UNC does not use personality tests in admitting students. In 1962, however, a group of freshmen were given the "Opinion, Attitude, and Interest Survey," a test which is known to be the most promising so far in its field. Motivation of the students was measured in this attempt to see if this type of testing is worthwhile. The results of the experiment are not yet known.

The "Opinion, Attitude, and Interest Survey" has several advantages over its predecessors. It is supposedly impossible to give a premeditated picture of yourself while taking the test. The best answers are not obvious, as is not the case with most tests of this type. The scoring keys are kept only at the scoring center, so it is impossible for unquilified persons to have access to this secret information.

The author of the test, Benno G. Fricke, hopes that this test will soon be used as College Boards are used, and to the same extent, according to Dan Campbell at the Computation Center.

Coppers Chase Campus Crooks

Little progress has been made by Chapel Hill Police concerning the rash of petty thievery currently plaguing the University community.

Chapel Hill Detective Howard Pendergraph reported four new complaints during the Thanksgiving holidays. Clothing was reported stolen from the SAE Fraternity House, St. Anthony Hall, Lewis Residence Hall and from an automobile parked on campus.

"Despite warnings not to leave clothing in parked cars and unlocked rooms, some people insist on running the risk of having something stolen," said Pendergraph. "These people cause 90 per cent of the trouble themselves."

Pendergraph said the Chapel Hill Police Department is doing all it can to halt the larcenies. "Any suspicious person should be reported right away," the detective said. "We'll need the co-operation of the students if the people responsible for these thefts are to be found."

SSL Interviews To Begin Today

Interviews and tests for delegates and alternates to the State Student Legislature will be conducted today in Roland Parker 2 and 3 in Graham Memorial from 3 to 5 p.m.

The interviews will run through Thursday. Graduates and undergraduates are eligible.

SSL is an annual mock legislature of state college and university students. Resolutions and bills discussed range from state and campus to international affairs.

This year's meeting of SSL will be in Raleigh Feb. 27-29. The UNC delegation will present a primary and an alternate resolution and will debate the resolutions presented by other schools.

'Luther Is Leaving (wheeze, crank) . . .'

Luther Hodges, our former "Businessman Governor" and a resident of Chapel Hill, will probably go down in history as the best known Secretary of Commerce the United States ever had.

Sadly enough, this isn't because of his achievements in running his department, although we understand he has done a most creditable job.

It's not due, either, to any involvement of Hodges in unseemly hi-jinx. Nor does he seem to have stepped on the toes of anyone in a position to retaliate by getting him fired.

No, it's simply due to the machinations of what appears to be a perpetual rumor-mill hidden somewhere within Washington. The damn thing keeps cranking out reports that Luther is leaving, which he consistently and stoutly denies.

He has denied it so many times, in fact, that it appears he has set some kind of record. One can only hope, with Hodges, we're sure, that the endless rumors will cease, now that the man Hodges supported for President at the 1960 Democratic National Convention is in the White House.

We feel sure that Hodges would rather be remembered for something other than denying rumors. We hope our fellow journalists in Washington will give him that opportunity by showing a little more responsibility when it comes to giving currency to unsupported rumors.

Dead Nags And Candidate Lake

I. Beverly Lake got his campaign for the 1964 Democratic gubernatorial nomination off to a great start Monday by beating hell out of a dead horse.

Speaking to a Greensboro civic club, Lake displayed the same irrational suspicions and lack of understanding which helped to keep him from winning the nomination in 1960.

The Raleigh attorney and former Wake Forest law professor played on his old theme about the sinister nature of 'big government,' even going so far as saying in a press conference afterwards that, "It is imperative to see that our children are taught to place their faith in freedom and to distrust big government . . ."

What a sterile pitch this is, especially now, with the state and the nation facing such pressing problems, and the need to progress on all fronts so important.

We already have 'big government,' as befits a nation of 190 million people faced with a huge population explosion and a continuing migration from independent rural living to interdependent urban living.

The problem, as we have noted before, is to keep governmental growth orderly and to keep the whole apparatus responsible to the people.

Lake seems blissfully unaware of such obvious distinctions.

Then too, in his remarks about teaching our children "to place their faith in freedom and to distrust big government," Lake gives evidence of dangerous confusion over the difference between education and indoctrination—the same sort of confusion which the Communists have made into a science.

Surely Lake can do better than this. Surely he must realize that this is a time for realistic solutions to real problems, not for caning old carcasses.

The Silent Must Find Their Voices

The New York Times

There has been much talk in recent days of the "shame of Dallas." It is worth remembering that most of us, no matter where we live, have a share in the guilt for the atmosphere that spawned an Oswald and a Ruby. In his appeal for "an end to the teaching and the preaching of hate and evil and violence," President Johnson has called on the nation to turn away "from the apostles of bitterness and bigotry, from those defiant of law and those who pour venom into our nation's bloodstream."

This appeal will vanish into nothingness if it moves only into the vast majority of decent citizens who in the past have sensed vaguely, if at all, their own responsibility for the national indifference that has permitted the hate groups to flourish. But there will no longer be cause for shame in Dallas or in Washington or elsewhere in the country if the President's appeal moves the smug, the self-righteous and—above all—the silent among the leaders of opinion in the nation and in every community.

There are some men in high places nationally and locally who have lent their presence and their tolerance to organizations founded on the principles of hatred and of fear. There are many more whose responsibility is not lessened by the fact that they simply have failed to speak out clearly and forcefully against the degradation of our democratic ideals.

It is those who have looked the other way among the nation's opinion-makers—the businessmen and labor leaders, the politicians and preachers, the school administrators, editors, professional men, police chiefs and local officials—who now, one must hope, will hear in the President's message the words of John Donne: ". . . never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee."

Stop! Thief!

Hopefully the student community will take to heart the remarks of Chapel Hill Police Detective Howard Pendergraph, when he warns against leaving items of value in unlocked cars and dormitory rooms.

To be sure, it is a sad fact that student cars and rooms are not safe from sneak thieves, but it is nevertheless a fact and we have to live with it.

Students who neglect to observe the elemental safeguard of locking their doors, Pendergraph notes, unwittingly cause 90 per cent of the trouble themselves by offering rich pickings with a minimum of effort.

Let's start making the thieves' job at least a little more difficult, thereby improving their chances of getting caught in the act. Let's keep those doors locked—or keep valuables stored someplace else. And let's not hesitate to report persons who are acting suspiciously.

This rash of thefts must be stopped.

The New Deluge Observed

By STEVE DENNIS

And it was Fall in the year 1963, and Vintage brought forth yet another batch of quality paperbacks. And the bookshelves which had been empty became less empty, and those which were full became even fuller. And it was an occasion for great rejoicing. The celebration of an intellectual mass was suggested, in honor of another victory at Random House, home of the proud parents . . .

Jerome S. Bruner's The Process of Education is, in essence, the expanded Director's Report from the 1959 Woods Hole Conference at Cape Cod. The purpose of this meeting was for members of several disciplines to discuss methods for improving the teaching of science in American primary and secondary schools. Included in the book are considerations of basic attitudinal factors influencing the readiness of students to learn and methods by which teachers might encourage such readiness and improve their teaching techniques with the information offered by professional psychologists and scientists. ($1.35)

The New World of Philosophy, by Abraham Kaplan, is a compilation of lectures discussing contemporary movement in philosophy at UCLA in 1959 and 1960. Kaplan recognizes three basic themes in the philosophies which he studies, rationality, activism, and humanism. In what could be termed a philosophic circumnavigation of the globe, he discusses pragmatism, analytic philosophy, existentialism, the influences on Freud on philosophy, Communism, Indian philosophy, Buddhism, Chinese philosophy, and Zen. He ignores almost completely (only one reference in the index to "phenomenological base") the phenomenologist philosophers, however. This is a serious oversight in a book aiming at inclusiveness. ($1.65)

Art students, and in fact anyone with an interest in aesthetics, will surely want to look at Wylie Sypher's new collection of essays, Art History: An Anthology of Modern Criticism. The essays are arranged in a rough order corresponding to the periods which they cover, and lesser known articles have been preferred to those which make most anthologies, in order to extend the range of materials readily available to the student. A reading list with other selections is included. Sypher believes his book is needed for two reasons: the great creativity in the last seventy years has resulted in much new art which needs to be examined and criticized, and he feels that many nineteenth-century decisions were the result of provincialism or a lack of enough relevant information. ($2.45)

Jane Jacobs sounds the tocsin for another fight among city planners in The Death and Life of Great American Cities, a no-holds-barred criticism of present concepts and their historic origins. She believes her criticisms are implicit in what city planners have done to the cities they have been allowed to plan. In an argument which she would not have extended from cities, she explains why she does not think the Automobile is the chief culprit and develops her theory of the importance of the "inner city." "This ubiquitous principle is the need of cities for a most intricate and close-grained diversity of uses that give each other constant mutual support, both economically and socially." She considers Le Corbusier's Garden City only the City Beautiful in different guise. ($1.95)

Modern science seems self-condemned to become ever more obscure to the average well-educated layman. The New World of Physics, by Arthur March and Ira M. Freeman, is another in the growing list of popular accounts of the events and men beyond all the new complications, and an attempt to explain in simple terms just what these new developments say which could not have been said before. The book is chiefly concerned with quantum mechanics and relativity and other concepts which cluster conveniently and automatically around these two. ($1.45)

Continuing the Council on Foreign Relations's admirable series of annual foreign policy surveys is The United States in World Affairs: 1962, by Richard P. Stebbins. Mr. Stebbins' aim is "to present a concise anaytical record of the American international experience in 1962" and "to appraise the year's developments in an independent and objective manner and to place them in such historical perspective as is possible so soon after the event." This book will probably be more useful for an overview and as a source of arguments than as the final opinion about 1962, which could hardly be expected in 1963.

The influence the discussions of a possible United States of Europe have had on American Foreign policy and an analysis of this concept is Max Beloff's The United States and the Unity of Europe, a Brookings Institution Study. The book studies the events in this area since the Second World War, and how American attitudes have affected them, both tactically and philosophically. Naturally, most of the emphasis is on the Europe of the Sixes and the European Economic Community (the Common Market). This is a book containing more facts and source materials than conclusions, which must wait for more developments to become definitive. ($1.65)

Probably the most important book in the entire collection, from the standpoint of the paperback itself, is the reprint of Nina Potapova's revised textbook Learning Russian. Language textbooks, especially in the elementary stages, represent a considerable expense for students, since they must be bought and ideally should be marked for study and reference. Often, though, consecutive books will overlap so considerably that some must be sold. A series of inexpensive paperback language grammars, added to the present paperback dictionaries, would be a great boon to students. This book represents a predisposition on the part of at least one publisher to do something about this situation. For this Vintage is to be highly commended. ($2.45)

. . . and in Chapel Hill the Intimate found room and the Bull's Head made room for these new arrivals. And students hungry for knowledge flocked to buy them. And lo, a few more courageous, read the books. And there was more rejoicing over this at Random House.

DISLIKE SOLITUDE

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI)—Hospital patients queried in a survey here overwhelmingly picked two-bed rooms and four-bed rooms over single rooms.

Only 22 per cent of the patients questioned preferred single rooms.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Recovery

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The nation begins to recover. We look about us and begin to piece back together the parts of the puzzle called "American Life." All of us take a hand in returning the pieces to their proper places, but now we are more conscious of the puzzle. We note with sorrow that someone has stolen one of the pieces and others are warped or frayed at the edges.

When will we again see "American Life" whole? Perhaps we never will, but then again, perhaps we may. But only when we realize that each of us has a hand on the jig-saw, only when we learn to work together to replace those warped and missing pieces will the puzzle become whole. And instead of merely painting the new pieces, we must add color to the whole with our love, our pride, our devotion.

No Civic Pride?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Several local chapters of national social fraternities take every opportunity to cast doubt on Barry Goldwater's contention that the fraternity system is "the last bastion of liberty" in the United States today, a contention that I, a member of a national fraternity for 13 years, find absurd.

Take a stroll down the north side of West Cameron Street from Columbia Street to the bottom of the hill. The entire block is cluttered with paper cups, beer cans, newspapers and assorted trash, rusty junk, and the remains of a Beat Dook float. Only piles of rotting garbage need be added for a perfect analogy to the poorest slums of New York. This sloppy mess is displayed directly across the street from the beautifully landscaped lawns of the Carolina Inn for inspection by visitors to Chapel Hill.

Many members of the fraternities responsible for the Cameron Street trash collection will eventually be leading citizens in their respective communities. I find it disturbing that they are already lacking in civic pride.

Let's Be Fair

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Thus far, no one has questioned the right of an individual not vested with a public interest to expel from his premise those persons whose presence he did not desire. It is absurd, therefore, to suggest, as you do, that one not be allowed to discriminate before entry against anyone whose company he does not desire.

Whatever fraternity leaders might use as a defense for discriminatory practices, the heart of their argument should be that no defense is required. The very principal is one of discrimination; it's the reason for which persons voluntarily bind themselves together. There would be no rationalization for associating with a group whose membership was contra to the wishes of those who comprised it; and to command a membership averse to those requirements which the group sets for itself is to destroy the ultimate in individual choice.

You suggest that the future policy of fraternities and sororities already established be dictated by the administration using student sentiment as the measuring rod. The ex post facto effect of such a course is so blatantly unfair that it hardly deserves comment. Suffice it to say most, if not all, the fraternities and sororities located here would never have been established had their founders been compelled to open the doors without discretion.

The Student Peace Union obviously is open to all those who want to join; but many don't ilike it, so they stay away. The same can be said of the John Birch Society, the NAACP, the ADA and the Manion Forum. Those birds who do like the various organizations flock together, and they try to fly in a common direction because their hearts and their efforts are set on a common goal. The point is that there is a group or association to meet the tastes of all—and the members, having come together, should be free from the interests and interference of those from without their group.

It is not a requisite, even, that the goal be a socially beneficial one to justify an organization's existence. Much criticism of fraternal life rests on the allegation that it is not "a truly effective community force," as your recent comment indicates. But that is not fatal. Again, the freedom which so many people insist upon compels that a voluntary body determine for itself whether it shall exisit to benefit society or for some other purpose not the equivalent of the United Fund. That an organization is not a community force—that some people believe it ought to be—should never be the justification for its abolition. If one group's desire should be imposed upon another group's activities, as is inferred from recent comment, then the institution of common slavery still would not be dead.

The fairest and most representative method for solving the problem, it would appear to this writer, would be for those who want to integrate a fraternity or a sorority, or to admit all ethnic groups without discrimination, is to organize one which allows the membership they desire. No thinking person would object to such a plan, just as none should now object—nay, can logically object—to the practices currently in force on this compus.

Erroneous

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Professor Robert Kozelka who is teaching for one year at the University of North Carolina while on leave from Williams was kind enough to send me an article which you carried in the Daily Tar Heel (approx. November 13).

In that article you made mention of the fact that the Beta Theta Pi fraternity at Williams College went local when it was compelled to accept a Negro boy.

In the course of two short paragraphs you made two completely erroneous statements.

In the first place the chapter did not go local; we have the strongest national position of any house on the campus. We discussed with the National fraternity at length the implications of Total Opportunity, a system which was introduced in order that all students wishing to gain admittance to a fraternity could do so. This agreement, however, in no way forced any house to accept a man which the house did not choose to offer a bid. The National fraternity is satisfied of this fact and our relations with them are excellent.

With respect to the Negro boy who was pledged as a member of Beta Theta Pi; this boy was one whom all the houses were after. He was president of the senior class, an honors major, president of the College Council (student government), a member of the varsity lacrosse team, and a fine individual.

I hope the above effectively points out your error and I trust you will be a little more thorough in the future in checking the sources of your information.

Cheerleaders?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I submit one emphatic amen to Jerry Haywood's letter of November 22. He spoke both of the deplorable behavior of some of the students and of the "barker who wears a cheerleader's outfit but sounds more like a marine drill sergeant with a bad hangover." Having seen every home game this year and most of them in the past two years, I know that both of these conditions unfortunately do exist.

It seems that the behavior of the drunks must be accepted—not on the grounds of "collegiate sophistication" as most of them feel, but with the understanding that they are little children who hopefully will soon grow up. But the "barker" is simply intolerable. At the Miami game Saturday he not only shouted vulgarities during the game (as Mr. Haywood pointed out), but he also shouted them at half time so that no one could hear the scores of the other games when they were given, and incited the Carolina students to extremely poor conduct in the form of shouting while Miami tried to call signals. Is this cheerleading? Here is one vote for the absence of "the barker and his toy" in '64.

Admissions Dept. Profile Gives Lowdown On Frosh

North Carolina high school students and young people throughout the nation interested in attending UNC can gain facts about members of this year's freshman class from a "profile" issued by the Office of Admissions.

The profile gives a bird's eye view of the composition of the freshman class, the students place of residence, their scores on College Board tests; whether or not they are sons and daughters of alumni; whether they have received financial aid; what kind of a secondary school they attended; their class rank in their secondary schools; whether a student received advanced credit.

About the only omission of the profile is the average height and weight of the students; the color of hair and eyes; and their favorite extra-curricular activity.

The profile is intended for the guidance and direction of college counselors in the secondary schools, prospective students, alumni, and other friends of the University.

It tells prospective students the steps they must follow in the admissions process; tells of the composition of the University's 14 schools and colleges; describes how students may be admitted early; describes advanced sections in academic departmental offerings.

Facts gleaned from the profile include the following: freshman class contains 330 alumni sons and daughters; of the total 2,051 members of the class, 1,291 came from 359 N.C. public schools, 42 from 15 N. C. private schools, 399 from 245 out-of-state public high schools, and 308 from 121 out-of-state private schools; 11 were admitted on other bases; 1,166 students are from the top fourth of the secondary school classes, 782 from the second fourth, 99 from the third fourth, and four from the bottom fourth.

Out of a maximum score of 800 which can be achieved on the verbal and on the math portions of the Scholastic Aptitude Test of the College Entrance Examination Board, N. C. students scored an average of 513 on the verbal portion and 549 on the math portion while out-of-state students scored an average of 570 on the verbal portion and 607 on the math portion. Some 94 of the state's 100 counties have students in the class and Guilford County leads with 75 students registered; 288 scholarships are held by class members; and 22 students received advanced placement credit in history (American and European), English, mathematics, Latin, modern foreign languages, and chemistry.

Peace Corps Is Rugged Says Carolina Graduate

ALBURQUERQUE, N.M. — Where can you attend ten hours of classes a day, learn to climb down a 60-foot wall and swim 15 minutes to an hour with your hands and feet tied?

At the University of New Mexico some 300 volunteers are learning to do this and more. The University, long noted for its Latin American studies program, is now a Peace Corps training site for all Latin American Peace Corps projects.

The trainees' first impression is the rugged terrain and the beautiful Sandia Mountains rising some 5,000 feet above the campus. His second impression is that he will have little time to enjoy it!

He faces a rugged training program including 300 hours of Spanish plus Latin American politics, geography and history as well as background on communist theory and philosophy.

When not in the classroom he is hiking through mountains, climbing down the stadium wall or taking part in the varied calesthentics program every afternoon.

However, he can always look forward to relaxing in the indoor pool in the evening, with his hands and feet tied for a half an hour during his "drown proofing" test.

This physical program is designed to test the endurance of the trainee, to see just how far he can go in overcoming a challenge. It is designed to instill confidence in the trainee which he will need when he reports to his overseas assignment.

Four groups of volunteers were in training for projects in Ecuador, Peru, Honduras and Columbia. The majority of the projects dealt with community development and health and sanitation in remote areas of Latin American nations.

Some 27 girls trained here for a health and urban development project in Rio De Janerio. They considered themselves "hardened veterans" when the new trainees arrive four weeks later.

They had many words of encouragement for the new arrivals. "Get plenty of sleep this week," they advise. "It will be your last chance."

Trainees soon learn that the gals are right as they plunge into a schedule which begins at 6 a.m. and ends, if they are lucky, at 11 p.m.

During orientation period they are introduced to Mr. Jack Vaughn, director of the Latin American projects. "The trainee must have three qualities to succeed," he states. " An interest in the program, a sense of humor, and a great amount of tolerance."

The amiable young director notes that "our best reward is not the change in the project in which the volunteer is working but the change in the volunteer himself."

William Toland, broad husky coordinator of the training program, calls on the trainee to be "flexible and alert." He proudly points out that the program is the "best training program in the United States for Peace Corps Service."

Featured speaker at the orientation meeting is Dr. Marshal Nason, director of the training center. He urges all volunteers to "give the Peace Corps its money's worth."

"Your training will be strenuous and difficult and you may think you'll never make it through," he cautions. "But we know you'll find the strength to come out on top."

In order to help the trainees and assess their capabilities they are under constant observation during their training. Four psychologists conduct personal interviews with each trainee and, along with each instructor, turn in an evaluation sheet on the prospective volunteer.

"You must remember that you will be under constant observation in your host country," comments Ann Roe, Peace Corps psychologist. "Our observation will be friendly and helpful while that overseas will be more critical."

After three months of training, two of academic studies and one at Talos, N.M., a Pueblo Indian reservation where the velopment techniques, he returns home for ten days leave.

He is then sent to his Latin American assignment which may include building roads and schools in the Chilian Andes or developing a rural sanitation system in the Columbian lowlands.

The statement over a Peace Corps recruiting poster spells out the challenge which a volunteer faces. It proclaims, "Hard Work, if you can get it."

Editor Says Paper's Role To Give News

By JIM NEAL

The role of a newspaper is to present the news and comment on it, James Shumaker, editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly, told the "Encounter" audience Monday night.

The role is the same whether the paper is a weekly or a daily, and no matter where it is located, he added.

Bill Scarborough, one of two Weekly reporters also on WUNC-TV's weekly panel show, said daily papers are more concerned with "hard" news, as emphasized to the "feature" news emphasized by non-daily newspapers.

But all agreed the responsibilities are the same for all newspapers.

Dr. John Clayton, associate professor of radio, television and motion pictures and moderator of the show, said next week's discussion will be on the fraternity system here. He said Dr. Walter Spearman of the school of journalism will be on the show with three students, as yet unnamed.

Shumaker replied to a question that he believes the press has the responsibility to tell both sides of the story. He said the editorial column is the place where the newspaper expresses its own opinion, and the editor is under no obligation to argue for but one side of an issue.

Shumaker said the reader who disagrees with the editor has several ways to express his feelings: he can either write letters to the editor, so that his views will be printed; or, most effectively of all, he can stop buying the paper.

Shumaker and Scarborough said they believed the readers of a newspaper influence it more than it influences them, because of the recourse the reader has to voice his displeasure.

J. A. C. Dunn, the Weekly's "human tape-recorder," says he reports interviews with people to show the people as themselves, and tries to keep from interjecting his own end of the conversation into the story.

On the question of what constitutes news, Shumaker said the Weekly concentrates on local happenings, or news with local significance. The Weekly, which actually comes out twice a week, tries to deal "in depth" with important local news, Shumaker said.

Dunn pointed out that there are two kinds of facts in a news story: gratuitous facts, those which are not the most necessary but may be interesting; and necessary facts, which make up "hard" news.

Shumaker agreed, and said that he decides what to print on the basis of whether it is in the public interest. He says the Weekly avoids "sensational" news, or news which seems an "unnecessary" invasion of privacy.

Chinese May Have Bomb

French editor Serge Lentz told a Duke University audience Monday night that he heard in Red China that the Chinese would test an atomic bomb this spring, but that he didn't believe it.

He said he was told about the Chinese bomb test but that he doubted that they could test it so soon. He said it would be a more dangerous weapon in the hands of the Chinese than in the hands of the Russians.

He also said that there was no truth in the belief that people in Red China were eagerly awaiting the day when they would be liberated by Nationalist China.

Might Give Her A Used Car—

A snappy little jalopy would be a right impressive gift, especially if you have time to give it a coat of pink paint and a tune-up—but think, chum—for the same money you could give her a hundred of the best new novels at the Intimate, and each one gift-wrapped prettier than the last. Now that's what we call impressive!

Might Give Her a Midget Submarine

Our Comparative Shoppers tell us that in Texas you can get a snazzy little one-woman sub for under twenty thousand bucks. Impressive, huh? Well chum, the same money would buy her a truckload of the most expensive art books at the Intimate, all wrapped up Christmaslike, with enough left over for a book-mark or two. What woman wouldn't prefer the world's loveliest books to a submarine?

Or a Solid Mink You-Know-What

Folks tell us that Mink Melts the Female Heart, and that it is Worth its Weight in Gold. Maybe so, but for the price of just a little bitty chunk of mink, you can buy her a shelf-full of books like THIS IS MY BELOVED and FOR YOU WITH LOVE. If she's nice, she'll let you read 'em to her and all that. Try reading a mink to a woman!

Or, Maybe, a Cute Baby Giraffe

We haven't any idea what a baby giraffe costs, but it should make an unforgettable gift! Still and all, we are sure that the same investment would buy enough books to pile higher than a giraffe's eye—and books won't shed hair all over the carpet!

But Shucks! She'll Like Books Better!

There just plain isn't any gift as good as a book for the sort of dame you would fall for. A biddy with brains as well as the usual facade likes to know that you notice both, and a good book gets the message across. In the Intimate, you'll find books to please almost any facet of the feminine fancy—love poems, cook books, scholarly books, sly humor, books that say "this is shared by you and me, and nobody else in the world."

Matter of fact, books are the most impressive Christmas gifts money can buy. Come join the Merry Christmas Shopping!

'Luther Is Leaving (wheeze, crank) . . .'

Luther Hodges, our former "Businessman Governor" and a resident of Chapel Hill, will probably go down in history as the best known Secretary of Commerce the United States ever had.

Sadly enough, this isn't because of his achievements in running his department, although we understand he has done a most creditable job.

It's not due, either, to any involvement of Hodges in unseemly hi-jinx. Nor does he seem to have stepped on the toes of anyone in a position to retaliate by getting him fired.

No, it's simply due to the machinations of what appears to be a perpetual rumor-mill hidden somewhere within Washington. The damn thing keeps cranking out reports that Luther is leaving, which he consistently and stoutly denies.

He has denied it so many times, in fact, that it appears he has set some kind of record. One can only hope, with Hodges, we're sure, that the endless rumors will cease, now that the man Hodges supported for President at the 1960 Democratic National Convention is in the White House.

We feel sure that Hodges would rather be remembered for something other than denying rumors. We hope our fellow journalists in Washington will give him that opportunity by showing a little more responsibility when it comes to giving currency to unsupported rumors.

Dead Nags And Candidate Lake

I. Beverly Lake got his campaign for the 1964 Democratic gubernatorial nomination off to a great start Monday by beating hell out of a dead horse.

Speaking to a Greensboro civic club, Lake displayed the same irrational suspicions and lack of understanding which helped to keep him from winning the nomination in 1960.

The Raleigh attorney and former Wake Forest law professor played on his old theme about the sinister nature of 'big government,' even going so far as saying in a press conference afterwards that, "It is imperative to see that our children are taught to place their faith in freedom and to distrust big government . . ."

What a sterile pitch this is, especially now, with the state and the nation facing such pressing problems, and the need to progress on all fronts so important.

We already have 'big government,' as befits a nation of 190 million people faced with a huge population explosion and a continuing migration from independent rural living to interdependent urban living.

The problem, as we have noted before, is to keep governmental growth orderly and to keep the whole apparatus responsible to the people.

Lake seems blissfully unaware of such obvious distinctions.

Then too, in his remarks about teaching our children "to place their faith in freedom and to distrust big government," Lake gives evidence of dangerous confusion over the difference between education and indoctrination—the same sort of confusion which the Communists have made into a science.

Surely Lake can do better than this. Surely he must realize that this is a time for realistic solutions to real problems, not for caning old carcasses.

The Silent Must Find Their Voices

The New York Times

There has been much talk in recent days of the "shame of Dallas." It is worth remembering that most of us, no matter where we live, have a share in the guilt for the atmosphere that spawned an Oswald and a Ruby. In his appeal for "an end to the teaching and the preaching of hate and evil and violence," President Johnson has called on the nation to turn away "from the apostles of bitterness and bigotry, from those defiant of law and those who pour venom into our nation's bloodstream."

This appeal will vanish into nothingness if it moves only into the vast majority of decent citizens who in the past have sensed vaguely, if at all, their own responsibility for the national indifference that has permitted the hate groups to flourish. But there will no longer be cause for shame in Dallas or in Washington or elsewhere in the country if the President's appeal moves the smug, the self-righteous and—above all—the silent among the leaders of opinion in the nation and in every community.

There are some men in high places nationally and locally who have lent their presence and their tolerance to organizations founded on the principles of hatred and of fear. There are many more whose responsibility is not lessened by the fact that they simply have failed to speak out clearly and forcefully against the degradation of our democratic ideals.

It is those who have looked the other way among the nation's opinion-makers—the businessmen and labor leaders, the politicians and preachers, the school administrators, editors, professional men, police chiefs and local officials—who now, one must hope, will hear in the President's message the words of John Donne: ". . . never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee."

Stop! Thief!

Hopefully the student community will take to heart the remarks of Chapel Hill Police Detective Howard Pendergraph, when he warns against leaving items of value in unlocked cars and dormitory rooms.

To be sure, it is a sad fact that student cars and rooms are not safe from sneak thieves, but it is nevertheless a fact and we have to live with it.

Students who neglect to observe the elemental safeguard of locking their doors, Pendergraph notes, unwittingly cause 90 per cent of the trouble themselves by offering rich pickings with a minimum of effort.

Let's start making the thieves' job at least a little more difficult, thereby improving their chances of getting caught in the act. Let's keep those doors locked—or keep valuables stored someplace else. And let's not hesitate to report persons who are acting suspiciously.

This rash of thefts must be stopped.

The New Deluge Observed

By STEVE DENNIS

And it was Fall in the year 1963, and Vintage brought forth yet another batch of quality paperbacks. And the bookshelves which had been empty became less empty, and those which were full became even fuller. And it was an occasion for great rejoicing. The celebration of an intellectual mass was suggested, in honor of another victory at Random House, home of the proud parents . . .

Jerome S. Bruner's The Process of Education is, in essence, the expanded Director's Report from the 1959 Woods Hole Conference at Cape Cod. The purpose of this meeting was for members of several disciplines to discuss methods for improving the teaching of science in American primary and secondary schools. Included in the book are considerations of basic attitudinal factors influencing the readiness of students to learn and methods by which teachers might encourage such readiness and improve their teaching techniques with the information offered by professional psychologists and scientists. ($1.35)

The New World of Philosophy, by Abraham Kaplan, is a compilation of lectures discussing contemporary movement in philosophy at UCLA in 1959 and 1960. Kaplan recognizes three basic themes in the philosophies which he studies, rationality, activism, and humanism. In what could be termed a philosophic circumnavingation of the globe, he discusses pragmatism, analytic philosophy, existentialism, the influences on Freud on philosophy, Communism, Indian philosophy, Buddhism, Chinese philosophy, and Zen. He ignores almost completely (only one reference in the index to "phenomenological base") the phenomenologist philosophers, however. This is a serious oversight in a book aiming at inclusiveness. ($1.65)

Art students, and in fact anyone with an interest in aesthetics, will surely want to look at Wylie Sypher's new collection of essays, Art History; An Anthology of Modern Criticism. The essays are arranged in a rough order corresponding to the periods which they cover, and lesser known articles have been preferred to those which make most anthologies, in order to extend the range of materials readily available to the student. A reading list with other selections is included. Sypher believes his book is needed for two reasons: the great creativity in the last seventy years has resulted in much new art which needs to be examined and criticized, and he feels that many nineteenth-century decisions were the result of provincialism or a lack of enough relevant information. ($2.45)

Jane Jacobs sounds the tocsin for another fight among city planners in The Death and Life of Great American Cities, a no-holds-barred criticism of present concepts and their historic origins. She believes her criticisms are implicit in what city planners have done to the cities they have been allowed to plan. In an argument which she would not have extended from cities, she explains why she does not think the Automobile is the chief culprit and develops her theory of the importance of the "inner city." "This ubiquitous principle is the need of cities for a most intricate and close-grained diversity of uses that give each other constant mutual support, both economically and socially." She considers Le Corbusier's Garden City only the City Beautiful in different guise. ($1.95)

Modern science seems self-condemned to become ever more obscure to the average well-educated layman. The New World of Physics, by Arthur March and Ira M. Freeman, is another in the growing list of popular accounts of the events and men beyond all the new complications, and an attempt to explain in simple terms just what these new developments say which could not have been said before. The book is chiefly concerned with quantum mechanics and relativity and other concepts which cluster conveniently and automatically around these two. ($1.45)

Continuing the Council on Foreign Relations's admirable series of annual foreign policy surveys is The United States in World Affairs: 1962, by Richard P. Stebbins. Mr. Stebbins' aim is "to present a concise anaytical record of the American international experience in 1962" and "to appraise the year's developments in an independent and objective manner and to place them in such historical perspective as is possible so soon after the event." This book will probably be more useful for an overview and as a source of arguments than as the final opinion about 1962, which could hardly be expected in 1963.

The influence the discussions of a possible United States of Europe have had on American Foreign policy and an analysis of this concept is Max Beloff's The United States and the Unity of Europe, a Brookings Institution Study. The book studies the events in this area since the Second World War, and how American attitudes have affected them, both tactically and philosophically. Naturally, most of the emphasis is on the Europe of the Sixes and the European Economic Community (the Common Market). This is a book containing more facts and source materials than conclusions, which must wait for more developments to become definitive. ($1.65)

Probably the most important book in the entire collection, from the standpoint of the paperback itself, is the reprint of Nina Potapova's revised textbook Learning Russian. Language textbooks, especially in the elementary stages, represent a considerable expense for students, since they must be bought and ideally should be marked for study and reference. Often, though, consecutive books will overlap so considerably that some must be sold. A series of inexpensive paperback language grammars, added to the present paperback dictionaries, would be a great boon to students. This book represents a predisposition on the part of at least one publisher to do something about this situation. For this Vintage is to be highly commended. ($2.45)

. . . and in Chapel Hill the Intimate found room and the Bull's Head made room for these new arrivals. And students hungry for knowledge flocked to buy them. And lo, a few more courageous, read the books. And there was more rejoicing over this at Random House.

DISLIKE SOLITUDE

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI)—Hospital patients queried in a survey here overwhelmingly picked two-bed rooms and four-bed rooms over single rooms.

Only 22 per cent of the patients questioned preferred single rooms.

POGO By Walt Kelly

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Recovery

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The nation begins to recover. We look about us and begin to piece back together the parts of the puzzle called "American Life." All of us take a hand in returning the pieces to their proper places, but now we are more conscious of the puzzle. We note with sorrow that someone has stolen one of the pieces and others are warped or frayed at the edges.

When will we again see "American Life" whole? Perhaps we never will, but then again, perhaps we may. But only when we realize that each of us has a hand on the jig-saw, only when we learn to work together to replace those warped and missing pieces will the puzzle become whole. And instead of merely painting the new pieces, we must add color to the whole with our love, our pride, our devotion.

No Civic Pride?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Several local chapters of national social fraternities take every opportunity to cast doubt on Barry Goldwater's contention that the fraternity system is "the last bastion of liberty" in the United States today, a contention that I, a member of a national fraternity for 13 years, find absurd.

Take a stroll down the north side of West Cameron Street from Columbia Street to the bottom of the hill. The entire block is cluttered with paper cups, beer cans, newspapers and assorted trash, rusty junk, and the remains of a Beat Dook float. Only piles of rotting garbage need be added for a perfect analogy to the poorest slums of New York. This sloppy mess is displayed directly across the street from the beautifully landscaped lawns of the Carolina Inn for inspection by visitors to Chapel Hill.

Many members of the fraternities responsible for the Cameron Street trash collection will eventually be leading citizens in their respective communities. I find it disturbing that they are already lacking in civic pride.

Let's Be Fair

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Thus far, no one has questioned the right of an individual not vested with a public interest to expel from his premise those persons whose presence he did not desire. It is absurd, therefore, to suggest, as you do, that one not be allowed to discriminate before entry against anyone whose company he does not desire.

Whatever fraternity leaders might use as a defense for discriminatory practices, the heart of their argument should be that no defense is required. The very principal is one of discrimination; it's the reason for which persons voluntarily bind themselves together. There would be no rationalization for associating with a group whose membership was contra to the wishes of those who comprised it; and to command a membership averse to those requirements which the group sets for itself is to destroy the ultimate in individual choice.

You suggest that the future policy of fraternities and sororities already established be dictated by the administration using student sentiment as the measuring rod. The ex post facto effect of such a course is so blatantly unfair that it hardly deserves comment. Suffice it to say most, if not all, the fraternities and sororities located here would never have been established had their founders been compelled to open the doors without discretion.

The Student Peace Union obviously is open to all those who want to join; but many don't ilike it, so they stay away. The same can be said of the John Birch Society, the NAACP, the ADA and the Manion Forum. Those birds who do like the various organizations flock together, and they try to fly in a common direction because their hearts and their efforts are set on a common goal. The point is that there is a group or association to meet the tastes of all—and the members, having come together, should be free from the interests and interference of those from without their group.

It is not a requisite, even, that the goal be a socially beneficial one to justify an organization's existence. Much criticism of fraternal life rests on the allegation that it is not "a truly effective community force," as your recent comment indicates. But that is not fatal. Again, the freedom which so many people insist upon compels that a voluntary body determine for itself whether it shall exisit to benefit society or for some other purpose not the equivalent of the United Fund. That an organization is not a community force—that some people believe it ought to be—should never be the justification for its abolition. If one group's desire should be imposed upon another group's activities, as is inferred from recent comment, then the institution of common slavery still would not be dead.

The fairest and most representative method for solving the problem, it would appear to this writer, would be for those who want to integrate a fraternity or a sorority, or to admit all ethnic groups without discrimination, is to organize one which allows the membership they desire. No thinking person would object to such a plan, just as none should now object—nay, can logically object—to the practices currently in force on this compus.

Erroneous

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Professor Robert Kozelka who is teaching for one year at the University of North Carolina while on leave from Williams was kind enough to send me an article which you carried in the Daily Tar Heel (approx. November 13).

In that article you made mention of the fact that the Beta Theta Pi fraternity at Williams College went local when it was compelled to accept a Negro boy.

In the course of two short paragraphs you made two completely erroneous statements.

In the first place the chapter did not go local; we have the strongest national position of any house on the campus. We discussed with the National fraternity at length the implications of Total Opportunity, a system which was introduced in order that all students wishing to gain admittance to a fraternity could do so. This agreement, however, in no way forced any house to accept a man which the house did not choose to offer a bid. The National fraternity is satisfied of this fact and our relations with them are excellent.

With respect to the Negro boy who was pledged as a member of Beta Theta Pi; this boy was one whom all the houses were after. He was president of the senior class, an honors major, president of the College Council (student government), a member of the varsity lacrosse team, and a fine individual.

I hope the above effectively points out your error and I trust you will be a little more thorough in the future in checking the sources of your information.

Cheerleaders?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I submit one emphatic amen to Jerry Haywood's letter of November 22. He spoke both of the deplorable behavior of some of the students and of the "barker who wears a cheerleader's outfit but sounds more like a marine drill sergeant with a bad hangover." Having seen every home game this year and most of them in the past two years, I know that both of these conditions unfortunately do exist.

It seems that the behavior of the drunks must be accepted—not on the grounds of "collegiate sophistication" as most of them feel, but with the understanding that they are little children who hopefully will soon grow up. But the "barker" is simply intolerable. At the Miami game Saturday he not only shouted vulgarities during the game (as Mr. Haywood pointed out), but he also shouted them at half time so that no one could hear the scores of the other games when they were given, and incited the Carolina students to extremely poor conduct in the form of shouting while Miami tried to call signals. Is this cheerleading? Here is one vote for the absence of "the barker and his toy" in '64.

Wake Cans Hildebrand; Gibson Gets Boot Also

WINSTON-SALEM (UPI)—Athletic director William H. Gibson and head football coach Billy Hilldebrand were relieved of their duties at Wake Forest College Wednesday and a committee began an immediate search for "dynamic" replacements.

Both Gibson and Hildebrand were offered positions with the development division at the Baptist-affiliated school, but it was not immediately known whether they would accept.

The shakeup resulted largely from Wake Forest's inability to compete successfully in big-time football. The Deacons won only one of their past 20 games and managed to break an 18-game losing streak only last month with a 20-19 win over South Carolina.

The victory over the Gamecocks earned Hildebrand national "coach of the week" honors from United Press International.

"I'd have to say naturally this comes as a disappointment to me individually and as an embarrassment to my many friends," said Gibson, a 55-year-old former FBI agent who took over as athletic director in 1954.

"I'm willing to take my share of the responsibility for our failure not to have a good football program," he said. "But I certainly don't think the full responsibility should rest on my shoulders or upon the shoulders of the head football coach."

Gibson was undecided whether to accept the university's offer to remain.

Hildebrand was not immediately available for comment. A secretary said he was meeting with his staff assistants.

Hildebrand, a 39-year-old standout at Mississippi State and a former assistant coach at Minnesota, has had a 7-33 record since taking over as head coach in 1960. He has three years remaining on his contract.

"After a thorough study of our athletic situation," explained Dr. Harold W. Tribble, president of Wake Forest, "an advisory committee has recommended that a reorganization of the athletic department and football coaching staff be made at once."

Tribble appointed the committee on Nov. 4. It was composed of members of the school's board of trustees, administration and faculty, the alumni association and boosters club.

Douglas Elam of Winston-Salem, a member of a committee which will help screen replacements for Gibson and Hildebrand, was candid in his appraisal of the situation.

"If you have a long streak of losing at football, something is obviously wrong," he said. "You begin looking for reasons for the losing record."

He said Wake Forest's record was due to a "combination" of factors, including athletic policies adopted by trustees, as well as those of the head football coach and athletic director.

"The responsibility must be shared by all of these persons," he continued. "As we select new personnel to head up what we hope will be a more successful and dynamic program, we hope to correct our weaknesses which have been obvious in the past."

Elam shrugged off rumors that Wake Forest intended to hire a big-name coach or sport figure in the single capacity of athletic director and coach.

Assassination Newspapers Are On Display Here

By JEAN HICKMAN

Showcases there contain at present 28 national and 30 state papers from Friday afternoon and Saturday morning, Nov. 22 and 23.

More papers are to be added to the display, according to Norval N. Luxon, Dean of the School of Journalism. They will remain there until after Christmas, he said.

Journalism professors, in commenting on the display, agreed that the newspaper coverage was "exceptionally good." Although they declined to make comparisons between individual newspapers without making a thorough study, they commented readily upon the coverage as a whole.

"I think it was handled very, very well," Dean Luxon said.

Ken Byerly, associate professor of Journalism, agreed. "I think it was very well handled."

Dr. John B. Adams, another associate professor, called it "a superb job."

They mentioned the difficulties that the afternoon papers had with the story breaking so close to deadline. "Especially since the deadlines of many are moving earlier and earlier," Dr. Adams pointed out.

The West Coast afternoon papers had the time advantage in this, he said.

He pointed out that many small N. C. dailies did an "excellent job of making over whole front pages"—a job he acknowledged as extremely difficult to do at the last minute.

As for the journalists themselves, Dean Luxon described them as "restrained" and showing "a great deal of ingenuity."

Dr. Adams said the tragedy proved that top-ranking journalists can write under pressure "of the severest kind." He said, "It's the kind of event you hope you never have to cover . . . but it gives you a feeling of pride at how well it was done."

Need A Job?

Mon., Dec. 9 — The Atlantic Refining Co.; Ernst & Ernst; The Martin Co.

Tues., Dec. 10—The Martin Co.; Fieldcrest Mills, Inc.; Haskins & Sells; Stanford University Graduate School of Business; American Oil Co.

Wed., Dec. 11—American Oil Co.; Price Waterhouse & Co.

Thurs., Dec. 12—Celanese Corporation of America; Blowing Rock Chair Co.; A. M. Pullen & Co.; Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Fri., Dec. 13—University of Virginia Graduate School of Business Administration; Kearfott Co., Inc.

Mon., Dec. 16—Frank P. Wall, CPA.

CORE Says 26 Places Discriminate

Some 26 business establishments in Chapel Hill maintain a policy of discrimination, a spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) said yesterday.

The latest list of segregated businesses, which shows an increase of seven over the previous one, was distributed during Tuesday afternoon's Christmas Parade.

According to the CORE spokesman, the following businesses in the area operate with discriminatory policies: Allen's Amoco service station, Allen's Grill, Brady's Restaurant, Carolina Barber Shop, Carolina Beauty shop, Carolina Grill, Chapel Hill Barber shop, Clarence's bar and grill, Colonial Drug store, Frozen Kustard, Leo's Restaurant and Merritt's Esso service station.

Also The Patio, The Pines Restaurant, The Rockoile, The Shack, Tar Heel Barber shop, Tar Heel Motel, Tar Heel sandwich shop, University Barber shop, University motel, Walker's Gulf station (Franklin St.), Walker's Gulf station (Eastgate), Watt's Motel and Watt's Restaurant.

Frosh After Cash Today

Today is Freshman Class Kickoff Day in Chapel Hill stores.

Four stores—The Hub of Chapel Hill, Varsity Men's Wear, J. B. Robbins and Town & Campus—will participuate, according to Jim Brame, class president.

Ten per cent of all sales made in these stores will go to the freshman class treasury for a dance and other future projects.

The dance will be tonight from 8:30 to 10:30 at Graham Memorial. A combo will be provided.

The Kickoff Day is the first of several activities to be lined up for freshmen, Brame said.

"We hope to get full participation today from the class in order to continue with other projects."

Xmas Season Starts With Many Thefts

Clothing And Cars Among Stolen Items

The Christmas shopping season was not the only season opening here this week. The Christmas stealing season also has began, with the theft of four cars Monday night and about $2,000 worth of clothes during the Thanksgiving holiday.

Chapel Hill policeman John Nesbitt said Christmas always brings a rash of thefts, but this year's was heavier than usual. He also predicted that more thefts would be reported, possibly today.

Victor Lee Jones, a teenager who lives on Craig Street in Chapel Hill, has been charged with larceny of an auto and larceny of a coat from a house on East Rosemary Street. The auto larceny charge will be tried in Orange Superior Court in Hillsboro, where the youth already had two other auto larceny charges pending.

Jones, caught early Tuesday morning, is charged with larceny of a Valiant, from West Franklin Street. The car is owned by Matt May, who said he saw Jones get in the car and move it, ran outside to stop him, and saw Jones run away when the car stalled. Moving the car constitutes larceny.

Other cars stolen were a 1957 Chevrolet from the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity House on South Columbia Street, owned by Wilson Lynch, a UNC student. Mr. Lynch's car was recovered at Craige Dormitory parking lot. A 1959 Chevrolet convertible owned by William Lee Allen was stolen from the parking lot behind Central Carolina Bank and Trust on West Franklin Street and was recovered in Highland Woods. A 1959 Rambler station wagon was stolen from Mary Hamilton at 1002 Highland Woods and was recovered in the Ram Varsity parking lot.

All the cars taken had either been left with the keys in them or had ignition switches turned to "off" but not locked.

The $2,000 worth of clothing was stolen from fraternity houses and cars parked near fraternities during the Thanksgiving holiday. Police are still investigating.

THEODORE ROPP TO SPEAK

Dr. Theodore Ropp, professor of history at Duke University, will present an address on the uses of social techniques in military history Thursday at 4 p.m. in 104 Peabody Hall.

A specialist in military history, Dr. Ropp holds degrees from Oberlin and Harvard. He has been on the Duke faculty since 1938. In the year 1962-63 he held the post of Ernest J. King Professor at the United States Naval War College.

His most recent book, War in the Modern World, was acclaimed by reviewers as an outstanding synthesis of military affairs.

Dr. Ropp has entitled his address: "Fools Rush In: The Uses and Abuses of Social Science Techniques in Military History."

The talk is sponsored by the Graduate History Club.

Judicial Report Is Before SL Tonight

By HUGH STEVENS

Phil Baddour, chairman of the Student Legislature Judicial Committee, will report to the body tonight on two bills which would have abolished the student judiciary system.

Bob Spearman, speaker of the legislature, said yesterday that no legislation is currently before the body, as tonight's meeting will be the first in a new legislative session. All bills under consideration at the end of the last session must be reintroduced.

The Judicial Committee has held a series of hearings and other meetings on the two anti-judiciary bills, which were introduced in response to the dropping of students from the Student-Faculty review board. The committee has investigated charges made by sponsors of the bills that the student judiciary system has ceased to be effective or useful.

Other business will include the naming of a new chairman of the Rules Committee, and a report by Ron Hendren concerning conferences with the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen about possible student participation in that body.

Reports are also expected from legislators on the activities of the Consolidated University Student Council, the Carolina Forum, the Graham Memorial Board of Directors, and the Student Carolina Athletic Council.

Spearman said there are currently four legislative vacancies, to be filled by the campus political parties in the near future.

Tonight

TOM GILMORE

YDC MEETING

Tom Gilmore, president-elect of the N. C. Young Democratic Clubs, will address a meeting of the Carolina YDC tonight at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Gilmore is expected to outline the YDC's obligations and responsibilities in next year's general elections.

Review Board Is Topic Of Debate

By HUGH STEVENS

Members of the UNC Debate Team discussed the dropping of students from the Student-Faculty Review Board before a large audience at the Chi Omega house Tuesday evening.

Bev Haynes, Chi Omega president, said the group numbered about 100, including her sorority and members of Alpha Gamma Delta.

"The debate was extremely informative," she said. "I thought the response was very good, including the questions that followed the debate."

Don Carson, who moderated the debate, said "those present received what was said very well. I think those present are much more informed about the Review Board question than before."

Debaters taking part in the discussion were Charles Heatherly, who took the faculty position, and Blain Yelton, who took the student side.

Haywood Clayton, president of the debate team, said that the response was excellent, and that the series should definitely be continued.

"There are still a few bugs to be worked out," he said, "but overall I was satisfied."

Two other debaters, John MacNicholas and Eric Van Loom, spoke on the issue in another meeting at the Alpha Delta Pi sorority.

"Because of the smaller audience, this meeting took the form of a discussion," Clayton said, "but I think that those present learned something about the issue."

Carson said that Tuesday night's response clearly indicated the value of the debates, which are scheduled for all residence halls, fraternities and sororities.

"There cannot be any action of value taken on this issue unless the students are informed," Carson concluded.

Round Trip Is $35

Trains Are Chartered For Jacksonville Trip

A chartered train is being made up in Raleigh to take Tar Heel football fans to the Gator Bowl Dec. 28, and negotiations are under way with two other railroad lines to charter two other trains.

Seaboard Airline Railroad has assigned one car to the special train, which will leave Raleigh for Jacksonville Friday night, Dec. 27. Other cars will be added as reservation requests come in.

Joe Augustine, executive director of the Merchants Association, said negotiations had started with Atlantic Coast Line Railroad to form another chartered train at either Rocky Mount or Fayetteville, and with Southern Railroad to form a third train starting from Greensboro.

The total price of a seat on the Raleigh train and admission to the Gator Bowl game is $35. Checks should be made payable to Continental Travel Agency, which is handling all reservations, and sent to Box 689, Chapel Hill. For further information call 942-4151.

Reservations are being handled on a first-come, first-served basis, and about 6,000 game tickets are left of the 12,000 originally made available here by Gator Bowl officials.

The $35 price includes transportation to Jacksonville, to the Bowl from downtown Jacksonville, back to the train after the game, and back to Raleigh. Arrival in Jacksonville will be early Saturday morning, arrival in Raleigh will be early Sunday.

Indications are that there are no more buses available for charter purposes to Jacksonville.

UNC head cheerleader Tom Gruehn reported Wednesday that a Seaboard Railroad official would visit the campus some time next week to sell individual train tickets to students at a round-trip price of $26.50 each.

Seaboard is expected to add extra cars to two of its trains leaving Raleigh at 9:10 p.m. Thursday and 6:15 a.m. Friday for Jackson.

Gruehn said that student interest in the plan was "going well" and he expected to announce more definite plans Friday.

Interested students are asked to call the student government secretary between 2 and 5 p.m. this afternoon at 933-1257 and tell her how many students are expected to be in your party.

The maximum number of cars will be twenty, Mr. Augustine said. Each car seats 52 people.

Other hapel Hillians have been making other arrangements to go to the Gator Bowl. One Trailways bus has already been chartered, and Trailways also anticipates the UNC Band to charter three or four buses, and other private parties to charter more buses.

William S. Johnson, general manager of the Jacksonville Area Chamber of Commerce, said hotel and motel reservations there should be made immediately. He said overnight accommodations in the town would soon be filled.

Those going into Jacksonville without hotel or motel reservations who wish to stay overnight should contact the Jacksonville Conventions and Visitors Bureau in Hemming Park. The Bureau maintains a daily list of tourist home and other transient rental accommodations.

Those flying to the Gator Bowl game can get to downtown Jacksonville by limousine, taxi, or rented car from the Airport in 12 minutes. Those driving to Jacksonville enter the city from any exit on the expressway which circles the city.

The bus station is in the heart of downtown Jacksonvile, and the railroad station is eight blocks from the center of the city.

Beach motels are 18 miles from the city, and information on beach motel accommodations can be obtained from Herbert Shelley, manager of the Beaches Chamber of Commerce.

The UNC football team will stay at the Ponce De Leon Hotel, 38 miles south of Jacksonville. The Ponce De Leon is owned by the Florida East Coast Hotel Co. William Rand Kenan, a UNC alumnus and donor of Kenan Stadium, is president of the hotel corporation.

Service Work Committee Is Formed By Y

Interviews Start Today At 3 P.M.

A new committee for service work at the John Umstead Hospital for the mentally ill in Butner is being formed by the YM-YWCA.

Interviews for the committee will be held today and tomorrow in the YMCA building from 3-5 p.m. Co-chairmen will be selected from the committee.

"Students who work as members of this committee will have the opportunity to serve the mentally sick and to learn how to maintain mental health," Claude Shotts, YMCA advisor, said.

The new hospital, an extension of Dix Hill, has about 17,000 patients ranging from the teens to old age. About 90 per cent of the patients are rehabilitated within one year.

The actual programs of the committee will be determined by its members. Possible projects are:

1) Personal services to patients

2) Planned group activities such as entertainment, picnics, dances and parties.

3) Group activities under the guidance of therapy department.

4) Establishment of a library for patients.

John C. Biggers, director of volunteer services at the hospital, will direct the committee.

The volunteer work can be rewarding for patients and volunteers, Biggers said.

The volunteers can learn more about mental health and the problems of the individual patients.

The patients gain a lot from having interested and interesting people around them, he said.

Race Problem Is Discussion Tonite On WUNC Radio

The third and final program in the "Desegregation in a Small Southern Town" series on WUNC radio's Carolina Roundtable will be broadcast tonight at 7 p.m.

The specific topic will be desegregation in Chapel Hill as it relates to ethics and morality.

Participants on the final program are Dr. E. Maynard Adams, professor and Chairman of the Department of Philosophy at the University, the Reverend Larnie G. Horton, pastor of the St. Matthews AME Church in Saxapahaw and a resident of Chapel Hill, and the Reverend Anne E. Queen, secretary of the YWCA at the University.

Dr. Earle Wallace, Associate Dean of the Graduate School and Associate Professor of Political Science, will again serve as moderator.

Listeners may phone in questions to the panelists while the program is on the air by calling WUNC radio station's number, 933-2085. WUNC is heard at 91.5, FM.

Previous programs concerned business and law and government.

HELP WANTED (FEMALE)

The Daily Tar Heel is in dire need of a secretary for Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Hours are 2-4:15 p.m. and no typing experience is necessary. The job pays a small salary. The only qualification for the job is that the girl must be beautiful. See the Old Lecher, Sam Bobsot, for further details.

WUNC RADIO

WUNC Radio will present a special program on European reaction to the death of President Kennedy tonight at 10:15.

The program, which expresses the reaction and shock of the German people to the death of the President, was sent to WUNC by the West German Broadcasting Corp.

Exam Schedule

The time of an examination may not be changed after it has been fixed in the schedule. Quizzes are not to be given in this semester on or after Monday, January 13, 1964.

Prior to taking an examination to remove a grade of "Exc. Abs." or "Cond." a permit must be secured by the student from the Office of Records and Registration.

Clemson Wins By 66-64 On Late Jump Shot

SPLASH — UNC's Mike Bissell and Joe Lea stretch out as they head towards the water at the start of the 200 yard medley last night in a meet with VMI. Bissell finished first against two VMI swimmers, and Lea finished second.

CLEMSON, S. C.—Mike Bohonak's clutch last-second jump shot at the end of a second overtime period here last night ruined a valiant comeback by Billy Cunningham and his North Carolina teammates and gave Clemson a thrilling 66-64 victory.

Bohonak's shot came after the teams had struggled through 40 minutes of regulation time and two extra five-minutes stanzas. UNC got no chance for the ball after the 6-2 senior put it in the basket.

Cunningham, who had a horrendous first half when he made just three of 14 shots, led a rally midway through the second scheduled period which sent the Tar Heels tied with Clemson to the wires of both the end of the regulation time and the first overtime.

Jim Brennan, Clemson's sharp shooting guard, had netted a 20-foot jumper with just 20 seconds left to give Clemson a 54-54 tie at the end of the regulation time.

In the first extra period, a short drive by Cunningham was offset by four straight free throws by Clemson's Gary Burnisky and Brennan. But here with Clemson up at 58-56, Cunningham brought UNC from the brink of defeat with a layup off a beautiful pass from Billy Galantai to tie as the final five seconds ticked off.

In the second, and telling, extra period, Brennan again got the Tigers off to a quick start with another long jumper, and Clemson led, 60-58. But Cunningham's foul shot, converted when Donnie Mahaffey fouled out of the game, and a short jump by sophomore Bob Bennett got the lead back for the Heels.

With 1:35 left, Burnisky swished two free shots, and 20 seconds later, Cunningham's foul marker tied it again.

Clemson called timeout at that point, and when play was back in, the Tigers worked deliberately for the easy shot. It wasn't, but they got it anyway when Brennan's jumper was true from 15 feet away, giving Clemson a 64-62 lead with 45 seconds left.

But it was the last time the Tar Heels got their hands on the ball, and 4,000 spectators jammed into this little bandbox of a gymnasium yelled in delight.

Clemson Coach Bobby Roberts did not call time after Billy C's bucket, letting his men set it up for the last shot on their own. The Tigers worked around the key for 20 some seconds before giving it to Brennan, the expected shooter. But the Clemson star passed off to the open man, Bohonak, and the latter was true just one second before the gun.

The Tar Heels experienced one of their coldest first halves in memory in the sloppily-played opening 20 minutes. The team could hit only seven of 33 floor shots in that time, and Clemson took advantage of it to run up a 29-20 lead at the break.

Cunningham got eight points in the period, but shot under 25 per cent in doing it.

Brennan, who had 10 in the first half, was the big outside threat to the Tar Heels all evening. But his shooting cooled early in the second frame when Carolina came from behind to take a seven-point lead.

With about five minutes gone in the half and UNC down by three, 356-33, Charlie Shaffer and Cunningham combined for 10 straight points for a 43-36 UNC margin.

But Clemson came right back on the aggressive play of Gary Burnisky, Manning Privette and Brennan to go into the lead again. Trailing 48-44, Privette tipped, Bohonak put it in free three and Brennan canned another long jump for a 48-48 lead.

Cunningham's two free throws, and Mahaffey's one deadlocked again at 50, and when UNC's Galantai rebounded and Brennan hit a short jumper, again it was tied.

Only 1:30 remained in regulation when Cunningham drove quickly for the lead bucket (54-52), but Brennan's clutch jumper with those 20 seconds left tied it just before the buzzer.

UNC Freshmen Lose Shocker To Tigers, 71-69

CLEMSON, SC — A strong Clemson freshman team, averaging almost 6-5 per starter, stunned UNC's touted frosh here last night in a 71-69 thriller.

With the score deadlocked at 67-all after a furious second half when the lead changed hands many times, Clemson's Jimmy Sutherland put in a long jumper with just 47 seconds remaining—to give the Baby Bengals the upper hand for good.

Sutherland, a 6-5 guard, paced the Tiger scoring with 26 points and was the main controller of the Clemson offense from his backcourt position.

Bob Lewis, Carolina's fine first-year man who set a school record of 51 points in the opener Monday, also got 26 to tie Sutherland for game honors. Ian Morrison and Billy Freuler contributed 15 apiece to the UNC total.

For Clemson, which starts four men over 6-5, Randy Mahaffey, the 6-7 center, had 16, and Walt Ayers 15.

Joe Ayoob, a 6-1 guard, contributed 12, and Clarence Channell, 6-5, got two. Mahaffey, brother of varsity captain Donnie Mahaffey, was a towner off the boards.

Swimmers Win Easily Over VMI In Opener

North Carolina's swimming team posted a 72-43 win over VMI Tuesday night in Bowman Gray Pool opening the 1963-64 spash season in fine style.

Loyola's Champs Retain Top Rating

NEW YORK UPI) — Loyola of Illinois retained its No. 1 status Tuesday in the first weekly United Press International major college basketball ratings without firing a shot.

The Ramblers, pre-season choice of the UPI 35-man coaching board, received 27 first place votes, but lost ground to second place Cincinnati in points, 336-310. The balloting was held before Loyola's opening game win over North Dakota Monday night.

Cincinnati, selected as the top team on eight ballots, defeated George Washington, 101-65, Saturday night as All-America Ron Bonham scored 31 points.

Duke moved into a third place tie with idle New York University in a sparse schedule that had only five of the top 10 teams in action. Jeff Mullins, who had teamed with graduated All America Art Heyman as last season's one-two Duke scoring punch, tallied 25 points for the Blue Devils in their 92-62 opening game victory over Penn State.

Wichita clung to fifth place after Dave Stallworth poured in 36 points as the Wheatshockers swamped Wyoming, 82-67; Ohio State remained seventh with a 68-42 triumph over the University of California's Dave Branch as All America Gary Bradds contributed 20 points, and Michigan moved up a notch to No. 8 with a 90-76 win over Ball State (Ind.).

Arizona State stayed in sixth place, Oregon State inched up a notch to ninth and Texas dropped two steps to 10th.

Kentucky led the second 10, with Providence jumping two places to 12th and San Francisco tying UCLA for 13th.

Villanova advanced four pegs to 15th, Kansas State and Stanford deadlocked for 16th, followed by Minnesota, Oklahoma State and Bradley.

Illinois and West Virginia dropped out of the second 10, being replaced by Minnesota and Bradley.

The ratings were based on games through Saturday night, Nov. 30. Points are awarded on a 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis on selections from first through 10th places by five coaches from each of the nation's seven geographical sections.

The United Press International Board of Coaches major college basketball ratings with first-place votes and won-lost records in parenthese:

| Team | Points |
|---|---|
| 1. Loyola (27) 0-0 | 336 |
| 2. Cincinnati (8) 1-0 | 310 |
| 3. (Tie) NYU 0-0 | 211 |
| 3. (Tie) Duke 1-0 | 211 |
| 5. Witchita 1-0 | 168 |
| 6. Arizona State 0-0 | 152 |
| 7. Ohio State 1-0 | 134 |
| 8. Michigan 1-0 | 65 |
| 9. Oregon State 0-0 | 55 |

Second 10—11, Kentucky (33) 12, Providence (30) 12 (tie), UCLA and San Francisco (24) 15, Villanova (23) 16, (tie), Stanford and Kansas State (16) 18, Minnesota (12) 19, Oklahoma State (9) 20, Bradley (8).

Others — North Carolina, (7) Indiana, Illinois and West Virginia (6 each) Mississippi State, Wake Forest, St. Bonaventure, Creighton (4 each) Princeton, (3) Rice, (2) Kansas, Notre Dame, Pittsburgh, and Temple, (1 each).

Peacocks Win Grapple Title

DKE edged out SAE by one point for the championship in the Frat league and Navy is the dorm champ, beating the nearest opponent by 6 team points.

Each winning team receives 120 points (40 entrance points, 70 achievement points and 10 place points.)

Lacey Chosen By Minnesota

CHICAGO — Bob Lacey, UNC's outstanding All-America end, was a sixth-round choice of the Minnesota Vikings late Monday in the National Football League's annual player draft.

Lacey, who last Saturday was picked by the New York Jets in the American Football League draft, was one of four early-round choices from the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Pat Crain, junior fullback from Clemson, was a surprise second-round future choice of the Chicago Bears while South Carolina guard Tommy Gibson was picked by the Pittsburgh Steelers and Maryland quarterback Dick Shiner was the seventh choice of the Washington Redskins.

UNC fullback Eddie Kesler was also a surprise future choice. Kesler, a junior, was tabbed in the 16th round by the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Other ACC players picked relatively early were Clemson end Bob Poole (San Francisco), Duke halfback Jay Wilkinson (Chicago), Maryland halfback Ernie Arizzi (Philadelphia) and Clemson end Johnny Case (Baltimore).

Nebraska, landing two choices in the frist round (guard Bob Brown and tackle Lloyd Voss by Philadelphia and Green Bay) was the most lucrative source for the pros, furnishing nine players.

Notre Dame was touched for seven and both Mississippi and Syracuse for six. Five schools furnished five players each (Pitt, Iowa, Michigan State, Georgia and Whichita.)

is the new 1964 SAAB in the same boat as Volkswagen?

As for styling or body changes, yes. They're few and far between. And both cars make a fetish out of sound engineering. But SAAB mechanical changes tend to be dramatic, year to year. Take the new 1964 SAAB. It has a completely new brake system: dual master cylinders with independent hydraulic lines that connect the front wheel on one side with the rear wheel on the other side. If one fails, you still get effective braking on both sides. So do your wife and kids. We made a dashboard change, too. Not one instrument, but the whole works.

Otherwise, SAAB sticks to the solid things it's always had: front-wheel drive, fantastic 2-stroke engine, and room — comfortable room. So it's not really in the same boat as Volkswagen. Nor is the price. SAAB costs about $300 more. Value-wise, it's worth it.

Only $1895 (right off the boat).

'What Are Students Thinking?' – Part I

First of Two Articles

An instructor friend of ours who had to make a speech on the topic of what Carolina students are thinking recently asked us for a little inside information on the subject.

Our first reaction was to question whether students, as a whole, are thinking at all. Our second reaction was to point out the difficulty of dealing accurately with such generalizations as "students" and "thinking." It's sort of like asking "What do people want?" What people? What are their needs and desires—what are their choices?

But all this, we finally admitted, was only begging the question, so we let the conversation drift to other topics. Nevertheless, the question has stayed with us.

What are students thinking?

Are they thinking about much of anything?

We asked some of our more active and articulate fellow students what they thought a good answer would be.

"Most students right now are just cramming for quizzes and papers," said one.

"I don't think most students think anything, about anything, ever," said another.

From still another came a longer, more thoughtful reply.

"Most of them are thinking how they can stay here four years, exert the least effort to achieve the 2.0 average necessary to graduate, and still manage to land an $8500-a-year job," he said. "Most of them are concerned with whether they have the correct loops on the backs of their shirts, and how they can beat the old man out of $70 for a camel hair sports coat."

These replies were seriously given but, we thought, still too general to be very useful. So we tried again.

"About two-fifths of the students are just preoccupied with trivia," ventured another student.

"Only about one-fifth are involved in something that's significant. The other two-fifths are in the middle somewhere. They kind of sway back and forth, from concern to unconcern, depending upon their personal situations and the nature of what is happening around them, on and off the campus."

A coed interrupted. "One danger of saying this is that many of those who appear to be involved with trivia really have some depth and are looking for ways to express it, wondering whether they ought to show this depth. It's sort of a carry-over from high school. They get a lot of kidding if they take an interest in something other than what their circle of friends seem to approve of . . . like reading serious stuff and talking about it and asking questions in class about things they really want to know about. Many of them are reluctant to do this, to draw attention to themselves."

Late Thanksgiving At Wake Forest

It looks as if Wake Forest got around to celebrating Thanksgiving a little late this year, and the only turkeys left around to axe were Head Football Coach Billy Hildebrand and Athletic Director William Gibson.

But it seems that the only one really doing any gobbling about the whole matter is college president Harold Tribble.

After crawling through the verbal thickets for a full fifteen minutes, we finally came up with a rough translation of what President Tribble had to say about the hatchet job, announced yesterday:

Statement: "An advisory committee has recommended that a reorganization of the Athletic Department and football coaching staff be made at once."

Statement: "It is the intention of the college to make athletics more effective and competitive in relation to the Atlantic Coast Conference and to promote a more vital relationship between athletics and the life and work of the college in keeping with high academic standards."

Translation: "Every team in the ACC has beat hell out of us for two years, and the alums have been screaming in my ear that THAT has got to CEASE!"

New Voices In The South

Leroy Collins, former Governor of Florida and now the President of the National Association of Broadcasters, asked a group of South Carolina businessmen an important question Tuesday night.

Alluding to unnamed Southern politicians, he asked:

"How long are the majority of Southerners going to allow themselves to be caricatured before the nation by these claghorns? How many Sunday School children have to be dynamited to death? How many Negro leaders have to be shot in the chest? How many presidents have to be assassinated?"

Collins told 500 members of the Greater Columbia (South Carolina) Chamber of Commerce that the assassination of President Kennedy was fostered by "Dixie battle cries which incite sick souls to violence." He said "these evil happenings are the products of environments where hatred has been preached and lawlessness extolled . . ."

Fortunately, Collins is not alone. His comments follow those of another Southerner of similar background.

The former Governor of South Carolina, Fritz Hollins, recently said in a speech in Asheville that ". . . we are living in a changing era and I don't think any of us believe in second-class citizenship in this country."

Both men, now free from their respective constituencies, have voiced their concern for moderation. Both now plead for political maturity in the South.

Significantly, they are not alone. In this state Gov. Sanford, while in office, has continually avoided the extremes and in a forthright manner has sought moderation. Gov. Sanders of Georgia can also be added to the growing list.

The point is that the leadership in the South is changing. As industry is attracted, as education improves, as the social revolution of our Negro citizens continues to advance, so too does our political thinking come closer to approximating reality.

What we must do, as Southerners and Americans, is to see that this trend becomes more pronounced, more obvious.

We must prove to ourselves, the nation and the world, that the true voice of the South is not represented by extremists, but by men of the caliber of Leroy Collins, Fritz Hollins and our own Terry Sanford.

A Victory In Venezuela

By PHIL NEWSOM
United Press International

Impossible to perceive at the time, there was tragic irony in President Kennedy's greeting upon the occasion last Feb. 19 of Venezuelan President Romulo Betancourt's state visit to Washington.

"You represent all that we admire in a political leader," Kennedy said.

He was addressing a man who had survived three assassination attempts and still was to survive a fourth in a nation which was the No. 1 target of Castro communism's attempt to destroy democracy in Latin America.

Yet 10 months later, it was President Kennedy, leader of the world's free nations, who was himself to fall victim to an assassin's bullet.

This week Venezuela turned an important corner.

Despite terrorist threats, more than three million Venezuelans turned out in free elections to name Betancourt's successor. It was an important triumph for Betancourt who has been determined that first, free elections be held and second, that next March he should turn his office peacefully over to the man who won.

It was an important victory, too, for the Venezuelan people and for the Venezuelan military who successfully had resisted the temptation to seize the reins of government and thus provide the terrorists with proof that democracy in Latin America would not work.

Now a new test involving the whole of Latin America is at hand.

Only a few weeks prior to Betancourt's Washington visit, Communist Cuba itself had made clear the importance it attached to Venezuela.

In a Havana rally marking the fifth anniversary of the overthrow of Venezuelan dictator Perez Jimenez, Cuban Communist leader Blas Roca declared that the Venezuelan rebels are not alone and that "we will continue giving them our backing every day." And he added:

"When they achieve their full independence and make themselves owners of the great riches in oil, aluminum and everything their earth imprisons, then all of America shall burn. The whole of America shall liberate itself once and for all from the ominous Yankee imperialist yoke."

In Roca's words were clear intent.

Yet within the Organization of American States, from whose councils Cuba already had been banned, there remained doubt. Words, they said, were not weapons.

Brazil, Bolivia, Chile, Uruguay and Mexico continued to maintain relations with the Castro regime, refusing to join other American states in a diplomatic and economic blockade of Cuba.

The Castro regime itself denied vehemently that it has given other than moral support to the Venezuelan terrorists.

Venezuela, backed by the United States, will demand that the OAS unite against Cuba under the Treaty of Rio which also is known as the Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance.

The answer should be overwhelming hemispheric solidarity. Unfortunately, past performance permits no such encouraging outcome.

Poisonous Danger

By RALPH McGILL
From The Atlanta Constitution

In the sad meditative days after the savage slaying of John F. Kennedy, the pace of the nation is slowed. In this unhastened stillness one could sense that most Americans are trying to answer questions rising like accusing ghosts out of the President's death. It was a time for summing up, for balancing the books of mind, heart, resolution and comprehension. Much of the more hate-motivated opposition of the dead President had grown out of the national failure to assess the country's requirements and to make moral judgments.

In the national stillness after the President's death at Dallas, words of the Prophet Isaiah seemed worth hearing: "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter . . .which justify the seeking for reward . . . ."

The ancient piece of prophecy could have been written about much of contemporary life and many of its opportunists in public affairs. Some of the Congress of the the United States, even, long had been engaged in the business of calling evil good and good evil, had been putting darkness in place of light and light for darkness.

The fast buck and the equating of comfort with liberty have grown as symbols of a false way in American life. The national conscience had been dulled by the tranquilizers of plenty.

So, there are questions for the nation rising out of the President's death by assassination. There will not be too much time to make decisions and give answer.

Within a short time the jackals of hate will come out of their dens and the more irresponsible political partisanship will again be confusing issues and insisting that light is night and night is is light. Those who hope for a semi-fascist or totalitarian state soon will resume their propaganda.

In this period of waiting the world, too, is watching and weighing. This death could be, and almost certainly will be, a pivot of history in our domestic and international world.

The man Kennedy had steel in him. The first to learn this was Richard M. Nixon who entered the 1960 campaign confident and sure he could "take him." Later Charles DeGaulle and Nikita Khrushchev, to name but two, also felt the Kennedy steel.

It cannot be said that the latter two had affection for Kennedy, but that they, much older in years, entertained great respect and even grudging admiration for the younger man they had hoped to dominate, or at least outmaneuver, is plain.

The Europeans saw in the President's superb handling of the Cuban missile issue an accomplishment they rated as perhaps the most historical act since 1945.

One of the ironic facts of our time is that the rest of the world knew John F. Kennedy to be a strong, resolute, well-informed leader with unalterable commitments to what we have called, perhaps too glibly, the great American dream of government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

Here at home the partisanship and resentments stirred by this Kennedy strength blinded many to reality and to the truly high quality of the leadership this country has known for almost three years. He came at a time of great decisions. That he acted with resolution and success against great odds is just now beginning to be comprehended.

So, in this period of waiting, our friends and enemies will hold back and wait to see what happens. Mostly they will want, and wait, to see how this nation responds to the mass indictment against all of us which followed the President's melancholy death at the hands of a psycopath, stirred by extremist hate.

Instant Equality

Editors, The Tar Heel,

In view of all the agitation for equality I would like to suggest my "Robinson Rule for Instant Equality." It may be applied to many groups — dormitories, student government committees, fraternities, or protest groups.

First: In the true interests of fellowship we must limit our membership to fifty members.

Second: Quotas must be assigned to the various interest groups to insure equality. Basic quotas are listed below.

1. 22 WASPS (White Anglo-Saxon Protestants)

2. 3 Jews (one must be blond)

3. 2 Chinese (may be alternated with 1 Cambodian: 1 Japanese; or else two Koreans)

4. 1 Rumanian (or 1 Bulgar or Slovene)

5. 7 American Negroes (preferably in the ratio—3 Georgians: 2 Alabamians 2 Mississippians)

6. 1 Persian, or a Berber, or a Syrfian (preferably wealthy)

7. 2 Filipinos (may be substituted by 1 Burmese: 1 Caroline Islander — only if selection date falls on the 16th Tuesday after the feast of Saint Alexander Nevsky)

. 1 Armenian (must be starving)
9. 2 Cubans (or else 1 Cuban: 1 Brazilian, Puerto Rican, or Mexican)

10. 1 Kikuyu (or else a blue-eyed Tanganyikian)

11. 1 Turk (or Serbo-Croatian)

12. 1 Arab (or an Egyptian, Algerian, Ethiopian — pick only one)

13. 1 Pole (or a Belorussian, a Magyar, or even a Ukranian)

14. 5 "half-breeds"'—choice restricted to a. a French-Slovak, b. a Danish-Italian, c. Portuguese-Kashmiri, d. a Greek-Quechua, e. a Scotch-Ebibio-Ifiki.

Third: Assign friends to each. Suggested method—have each fill out in triplicate a list of prospective pals, in order of decreasing affection. Then pair the last two of the first list with the first two of the following list, etc. Or else draw straws.

Realism Needed

Editors, The Tar Heel,

From time to time, editorials which appear in the Daily Tar Heel seem to show a woeful ignorance of reality on the part of the writer(s), and exhibit a loss of contact with campus sentiment which would be appalling if it weren't so unbelievable.

A case in point is the lead editorial of Thursday, November 21, concerning fraternity discriminatory clauses.

The DTH staff undoubtedly has uncovered much evidence concerning these practices in Carolina fraternities, and I do not question its general validity.

My concern is, rather, with the questions which the editorial asks, based upon this evidence.

The most glaring omission is the fact that the editorialists seem to have forgotten that a fraternity is composed of human beings. Like others of this species, fraternity members wish to associate closely with those who have interests generally akin to theirs.

In other words, there must be something in common among the members of a given house in order for the word "fraternity" to have any meaning.

Also, in many cases there must not be any glaring dissimilarities, such as a different race or religious belief, in order that a fraternity function.

Many houses have rituals which mean much to fraternity members, but would be totally incomprehensible to a person without these ties.

Another rather dubious question which the editorial asks is: "Should a white Protestant American pay taxes to support an institution which officially sanctions a system which might discriminate against his son or daughter on the basis of how he or she looks, speaks and dresses?".

We might ask whether or not this same "white Protestant American" (and Negroes and Jews) should pay taxes to support an institution which officially sanctions a system which might discriminate against their sons or daughters on the basis of College Entrance Examination Board scores.

It seems fair to assume that many more people are "cruelly hurt" by rejection of their applications for admission to UNC than are dealt a harsh blow by fraternities.

"Discrimination" is a word which the DTH seems to relish in applying on campus and elsewhere. What the DTH staff does not seem to realize is that a large proportion—perhaps even a majority—of the student community couldn't care less.

This is not as it should be, but let's face facts. Come down from Graham Memorial sometime for things other than the DTH staff football games, and sample student opinion.

If you find that a sizeable number of students feel as you do concerning fraternity discrimination, then call for a referendum. Otherwise, I warn you that it is doomed to failure.

The DTH seems to be quite adept at gathering facts. I hope that future editorials reflect some realism in the use of them.

Right To Choose

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The latest dispute concerning the "brotherhood of man," in the form of discriminating fraternity practices seems to stem from ignorance of the fact that all men are not compatible; they have different tastes and opinions, and these differences render impossible a friendship between all men.

A fraternity is a group composed of persons associating for social purposes, and may be considered as an organized group of friends. It is a group, but it is composed of individuals. And what person can claim the right to tell any individual who his friends should be? The right of choice of association should not and cannot be pre-empted for "the good of the majority" or to prevent disappointment caused by rejection.

So let us leave the choosing of members wholly to the fraternity members, for it is these members who have to live together for years with the people of their choice. Let us not destroy man's right to choose his own friends.

Psychoanalysis Is A Great Big Help! by Hubert I. Bermont, Stein and Day, $2.00.

By B. KEATING

The recent popularity of happiness books and the all time popularity of psychoanalysis have combined to make this delightful little book that is sure-fire cocktail party material. With a Rorshached ink-blot endsheet, the book is a lively mixture of medical and bawdy humor. The drawings are unbelievably funny and one needs only to look upon the Freudian-frought faces to burst into post-natal expressions of high good humor. Hubert Bermont, the author, is a very funny man with a new bent to his humor, and with a heck of a talented illustrator—Susan Perl, who uses the method known as stiletto and ink for the sublime cartoons.

"Psychoanalysis is a Great Big Help!" is a book for those people who have been psychoanalyzed, for those who haven't, for those friends who need it, and for those who had it. It is.

Carolina Sets Sights On First Bowl Victory

By JOHN MONTAGUE

This has been an unusual week for North Carolina's football team. First of all, there has been no practice. Secondly, the Tar Heels know they they have one more game to play, but they don't know who it is they will be playing.

Jim Hickey rewarded his team for a great season and a particularly gratifying win over Duke by giving the boys a week off from the practice field chores. Full-scale preparations for the December 28th Gator Bowl will get under way Monday.

The Heels are ready to begin drills. They are looking toward the post-season encounter with the same determined optimism they've had all year—the confidence which brought them through a glittering 8-2 season.

This will be UNC's fourth bowl game, and after three holiday losses without a win, the Tar Heels feel it's time for Carolina's post-season fortunes to change.

In the 1947 Sugar Bowl, it was Georgia 20, UNC 10. Oklahoma did in the Tar Heels, 14-6, in the 1949 Sugar encounter, and Rice did the trick, 27-13, in the 1950 Cotton Bowl.

The big question in the minds of the players now is quite simply "Who will we play?"

Speculation has it that the bid will go to Air Force immediately after its Saturday game with Colorado, providing the favored Falcons, 6-3, are able to down the Buffs. If an upset occurs, look for the invitation to go to Mississippi State. The Bulldogs own the nation's most impressive unimpressive record—6-2-2.

BULLETIN

PHILADELPHIA (UPI)—Mississippi State University Wednesday night accepted an invitation to meet North Carolina State in the fifth annual Liberty Bowl here Dec. 21.

The announcement ended considerable speculation that the Bulldogs, the "Cindereila" team of the Southeastern Conference, would get a bid to the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville, Fla.

Gator Bowl officials had said State and Air Force Academy were being considered for invitations to meet North Carolina in the post-season classic at Jacksonville Dec. 28th. A final announcement was expected after the Air Force-Colorado game Saturday.

Georgia's Griffith Given Polite Axing

ATHENS, Ga. (UPI) — Georgia football coach Johnny Griffith resigned Wednesday in the wake of three straight losing seasons. His successor was not immediately known.

Griffith, who succeeded Wally Butts after the 1960 season, had been under fire by alumni after his team posted 3-7, 3-4-3 and 4-5-1 records.

University President Dr. O. C. Aderhold announced the resignation today following a special meeting of the school's athletic board.

Aderhold said Griffith would remain as a member of the faculty in the department of health and physical education.

Griffith, 39, served as assistant backfield coach at Georgia from 1956 to 1958 and as head freshman coach in 1959 and 1960.

He was elevated to the head coaching position in December 1960 when Wally Butts, who had been head coach for 22 years, stepped up into the post of athletic director.

DOOLEY NEW COACH

Dooley, a former Auburn quarterback, was named as head coach of the Bulldogs by new Athletic Director Joel Eaves, former Auburn basketball coach.

"That was the way they wanted it. I'm disappointed but bear no bitterness," Griffith said.

Dooley was quarterback at Auburn for the 1951-52-53 seasons and in 1953 led the Tigers to a 7-2-1 record, their best in 17 years.

Dolphins At Navy

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — North Carolina's swimming team meets its "toughest opponent of the season" this afternoon in the first engagement of a two-meet road trip.

Navy, one of the nation's perennial pool powers, is today's opponent and UNC coach Pat Earey believes the Middies may have their strongest tank aggregation ever.

Liberty Bowl Back To 21st

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The fifth annual Liberty Bowl football game here, postponed earlier this week to Dec. 28, was transferred Tuesday back to its original Dec. 21 date.

Ambrose "Bud" Dudley, promotor of the benefit post-season game, said the game was returned to the Dec. 21 date to meet television commitments.

Dudley postponed the game last Sunday to Dec. 28 because of selection difficulties due to the fact that many regularly scheduled college football games were postponed because of the assassination of President Kennedy.

North Carolina State has since accepted a bid and Dudley said the school was agreeable to the change in scheduling. An opponent for the Wolfpack has yet to be named.

OLD BOOKS AT CHRISTMAS
Not everybody on your Christmas list merits the gift of a rare book. Only one or two would enjoy it—and that's the essence of a Christmas gift.
Folks who know the joy of discovering just the right book in an old book collection are a distinguished and very special group. They share joys that are not open to everybody.
But if you happen to have a friend whose collecting tastes you share, then there's nothing that will give him more joy at Christmas than the gift of an old book that merits a spot on his shelves. No gift under his tree will be so unique, nor so long cherished.
Such a book may be waiting for your discovery in our Old Book Corner.

Warren Commission Begins Work

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

From DTH Wire Reports

Investigators Resume Baker Probe

WASHINGTON — Senate investigators resume their inquiry today into the wide-ranging outside business activities of former Senate Democratic secretary Robert G. Baker.

Chairman B. Everett Jordan (D-N.C.) of the Senate Rules Committee said testimony about Baker's vending machine enterprises would be taken at the closed-door session.

The hearings have been in recess since Nov. 21. the day before President Kennedy was assassinated.

Chicago Boycott To Intensify

CHICAGO — Integration leaders pledged Thursday to intensify their efforts for an economic boycott of Chicago merchants after a noisy showdown session Wednesday with the Chicago school board.

"If they didn't understand a boycott by 25,000 children maybe they will understand when their cash registers stop ringing," integration leader Lawrence Landry said.

The conference between the Board of Education and civil rights leaders over alleged segregation in Chicago schools came to a howling halt.

The end came when the board voted 4-3 against adopting a policy favoring integration.

Plans for an economic boycott of Chicago businesses during the Christmas shopping season were announced earlier.

A SNCC spokesman said that although the economic boycott would be the "major action," there will be picketing downtown in conjunction with it.

Lehman, New Deal Leader, Dies

NEW YORK — Herbert H. Lehman, 85, New Deal architect and a liberal leader of the Democratic party, died Thursday of a heart attack as he prepared to leave for the White House to receive the nation's highest civilian peacetime honor awarded to him by President Kennedy.

Lehman succeeded Franklin D. Roosevelt as governor of New York and served four terms, matched only by the four terms of Al Smith. He resigned as governor in 1942 to head the nation's foreign relief and rehabilitation office. He served from 1949 to 1957 as U.S. senator.

Connally Finally Returns Home

AUSTIN — Gov. John Connally of Texas, grieviously wounded in the assassination of President Kennedy but not mending rapidly, came home Thursday from Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas.

The three Connaly children — John, 17; Sharon, 14, and Mark, 11 — met the 46-year-old governor and his wife Nellie at Austin Municipal Airport. Connally and his son John shook hands.

Mme. Nhu In Paris

PARIS — Mme. Ngo Dinh Nhu arrived here Thursday from Rome with two of her children and indicated in an airport statement she would stay in "gentle France."

She appealed to the country to help her find rest and inspiration.

Ambassador Quits

Blancke, who was named to the post in November, 1960, will be reassigned to a senior position in the State Department, not yet specified.

No successor has been named for the Congo post.

Fidel Has Guest

HAVANA — Dolores Ibarruri, Spanish Communist party secretary general, arrived Thursday from Moscow as a guest of Premier Fidel Castro. He met her at the airport and gave her a warm embrace.

4-H Lauded By LBJ

CHICAGO — President Lyndon B. Johnson telegraphed warm wishes Thursday to the 1,500 delegates to the National 4-H Club congress.

The telegram, to Chris L. Christensen, Tulsa, Okla., president of the National 4-H Service Committee, said: "These youths are to be commended for focusing on a strategic problem related to our resources and rural area development across the nation."

Labor Leaders Mourn

ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETARY, Va. — AFL-CIO President George Meany Thursday led a delegation of labor leaders to Arlington National Cemetery to lay a large floral wreath on the grave of President Kennedy.

The brief ceremony was witnessed by a virtually continuous line of mourners who continued to file past the martyred President's flame-lighted grave.

More Travel Plans Made For Gator

Four different transportation plans for the trip to the Gator Bowl in Jacksonville, Fla., December 28 are now available to University students and townspeople.

1. Atlantic Coast Line Railroad announced Thursday it is offering a "Carolina Special" to Jacksonville at a round-trip fare of $29.

The train will leave Rocky Mount at 11 p.m. Dec. 27, stopping at Wilson at 11:15, Selma 11:40, Fayettville 12:15, and arrive in Jacksonville at 8:30 a.m.

Fare includes bus transportation to and from the station, but does not include a ticket to the game.

The return trip is 8:30 p.m. Saturday.

A railroad representative will be on campus Tuesday from 9 a.m. until 9 p.m. in Woollen Gym to sell tickets and answer questions.

2. Patterson Travel Service in Raleigh has announced that seats are still available on an Eastern Air Lines charter flight to Jacksonville. The flight, scheduled for 8 a.m. Saturday departure from Raleigh-Durham Airport, costs $78.50 for round trip first class seat and $64.50 for tourist. Fare includes game ticket and bus transportation from the airport. Departure time is at 7 p.m.

3. The Chapel Hill Athletic Club is arranging a $35 round-trip plan via Seaboard Airline Railroad from Raleigh.

Checks should be made payable to Contintental Travel Agency, which is handling all reservations, and sent to Box 689, Chapel Hill. For further information call 942-4151.

Reservations are being handled on a first-come, first-served basis.

4. UNC head cheerleader Tom Gruehn has announced that a Seaboard Railroad official would visit the campus some time next week to sell individual train tickets to students at a round-trip price of $26.50 each.

Seaboard is expected to add extra cars to two of its trains leaving Raleigh at 9:10 p.m. Thursday and 6:15 a.m. Friday for Jacksonville.

Interested students are asked to call the student government secretary between 2 and 5 p.m. this afternoon at 933-1257 and tell her how many students are expected to be in their party.

SL Asks Administration To Reaffirm Position Of SG

By HUGH STEVENS

Student Legislature last night overwhelmingly passed a resolution urging the creation of a special committee "to affirm the role of Student Government" at UNC.

The resolution, a response to recent dropping of students from the Student-Faculty Review Board, mandates the president and vice president of the student body to propose the idea to the Chancellor, who would set up the committee.

The committee would be responsible for drafting a statement affirming "the philosophical committment of the University community to the theory and practice of student self-government."

The resolution came in conjunction with a report given by Phil Baddour, Judicial Committee chairman, on recent hearings held by that body. The report said that the committee "is genuinely concerned over an attitude of a lack of faith in the principles of student self-government."

The first article of the resolution states that there is immediate need for "persons of full and final authority" to affirm the fundamental values of student government and their committment to a mutual relationship based upon "trust and confidence."

Mike Lawler, student body president, called the action "the most significant step in recent legislature history."

"We need to affirm our faith here and now for the future of the University," he said.

As proposed, the committee would include both Lawler and Vice-President Bob Spearman, with "other student representation which the Chancellor may deem appropriate."

The resolution was introduced by Arthur Hays and Bo Edwards, who called on administration and faculty to make their position on student government and its powers clearly known. They pointed out that recent controversies have raised serious questions about the University's faith in Student Government.

The situation pointed out most often was that of the Student-Faculty Review Board controversy. Lawler, Spearman, Baddour, and Whitney Durand will meet this afternoon with the Faculty Council to present the students' position on the matter. Their oral presentation will be followed by the Council's discussion of the question.

Foreign Students Here For Short Inspection Tour

The group is studying the U. S. educational system and the country in general. They represent all fields of study.

Last night, the students met in Dey Hall with the Spanish Circle for a social hour. They are staying in Craige and Ehringhaus and are the guests of YWCA Executive secretary Anne Queen and the YMCA International Relations Committee.

The group was invited by the State Department. Their itinerary has been planned by the National Social Welfare Assembly.

Dr. Fred Gil of the UNC Latin American Institute will welcome the students at 10 a.m. today in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

The will attend an orientation session at the Institute of Government at 11 a.m. and will eat lunch in the Monogram Club at 12:30.

In the afternoon the students will visit the departments in their field of interest.

Tomorrow at 10 a.m., Dr. Fred Weaver, secretary of the Consolidated University will give the group a history of UNC and will lecture about freedom in the educational system.

In the afternoon, the students will drive to North Carolina College in Durham for meetings, receptions and a basketball game.

On Sunday, the group will have their time free to see the campus. Monday they will visit Raleigh and see the governor before boarding a plane for Washington.

Assassination Probe To Start With Subpoenas

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Warren commission, meeting formally for the first time under heavy police guard, agreed Thursday to seek authority to subpoena witnesses in its investigation of President Kennedy's assassination.

The seven members, appointed by President Johnson, met behind closed doors for two hours and 40 minutes in a high-ceilinged, gold-draped hearing room on the second floor of the National Archives Building on Pennsylvania Avenue.

After the meeting, Chief Justice Earl Warren, the chairman, called in newsmen and read a brief statement saying the commission had discussed organization and future plans, but had reached no conclusions.

He added that no information had yet been received from any government agency.

Anotner meeting was scheduled for 3 p.m. today.

The only outsiders admitted to the meeting were Deputy Atty. Gen. Nicholas Katzenbach and Okie Dyer, a shorthand stenographer from the U. S. attorney's office.

Warren sat at one end of a long, polished wood table. On either side in brown leather chairs were Sens. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.) and John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.), Reps. Hale Boggs (D-La.) and Gerald R. Ford (R-Mich.); Allan W. Dulles, former director of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), and John J. McCloy, former disarmament director and U. S. high Commissioner for Germany.

All are lawyers. None but Warren would comment after Thursday's meeting.

Eight extra General Services Administration (GSA) policement and officers joined the 12 guards normally assigned to the archives building, which is adjacent to the Justice Department Building.

They were scattered throughout the building, along with an unknown number of plainclothes policemen, outside and along the route to the hearing room.

No photographers or television cameramen were permitted in the room after the meeting.

Warren read this statement to newsmen:

"The commission has a very sad and solemn task to perform, one of great importance to the country. We have met here for the first time for the purpose of organization and discussing our work for the future.

"We are dealing somewhat in the dark because we have no reports as yet from any agency of government. The information we now have is little more than what we have learned from the news media. We have come to no final conclusions on organization or staffing. We will hold a further meeting tomorrow afternoon at 3 p.m. to pursue the same course of discussion.

"We will ask Congress for the power of subpoena for this commission."

Spring In Paris Offered For UNC Sophs, Juniors

Want to spend the spring in Paris?

Applications are due Tuesday for a special spring-semester-in-Paris program being conducted by the Institute of European Studies in Chicago.

The program stresses French language study and includes other courses taught in French by French professors.

Courses will be offered in contemporary European history, politics and economics, art history, the European novel and modern European poetry.

Language instruction will emphasize ear and speech training. Language laboratories will be used.

Applicants must be sophomores with three semesters of French or juniors with five semesters in French. All must have a B average.

Cost of the semester will be $1,230, or $1,590 including round-trip transportation.

Students accepted for the program will sail Feb. 1, 1964, and will return late in June.

The Institute also conducts full-year and spring-semester programs at the University of Vienna and the University of Freiburg, West Germany.

MRC Vs. Yack Finally Solved

Gerry Good, president of Men's Residence Council (MRC), stated that the campus residence halls were threatening to withdraw from the Yackety-Yack because of an alleged discrimination in allotment of the yearbook's pages to the residence halls.

He said the Yack had refused to allow residence halls as much space as other living units were given and the yearbook had said extra expense would be involved if the extra space could be arranged.

Later yesterday, the Yack had arranged to give the MRC the extra pages desired at regular cost by changing the layout.

Yack editor John Howe denied the yearbook was discriminating against anyone. "All yearbooks are laid out in signatures of 16 pages," he said. "The layout for the 1964 Yack has been set since the early summer and it is impossible to add any extra pages without adding an additional 16 pages. This could not be done unless the entire expense for such an addition were to be covered by the MRC.

Also, by adding 16 pages to the book, the cover would have to be increased in size and therefore in cost."

Although the pages have been arranged for the irate MRC, student body president said he has called a meeting for Monday between the two organization heads to iron out further difficulties.

Mock Bargaining Meet Held Here

"Mediation in Action"—a mock labor - management bargaining session — will be featured at a meeting of the N. C. Department of Labor Arbitration Panel here Saturday.

The meeting will be held in Room 2, Carroll Hall, at 2 p.m. The program was arranged by the N. C. Department of Labor Conciliation Division as one of the regular biannual meetings of the Arbitration Panel.

William E. Simkin of Washington, D. C., director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, will speak on "The Role of the FMCS." Simkin will be introduced by Frank Crane, N. C. Commissioner of Labor. Frank T. deVyver of Durham, a Vice Provost of Duke University and a member of the Arbitration Panel, will preside.

William Fred Ponder, South Carolina Commissioner of Labor, will attend as a special guest.

Participants in the mock mediation will include William S. Pierce of Atlanta, Ga., Region 3 Director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, and five of his staff members: D. Yates Heafner of Charlotte; J. C. Pierce of New Orleans, La.; and James E. Kelly, Robert P. Baker and Leland Dean, all of Atlanta, Ga.

Attending the session will be members of the N. C. Arbitration Panel; representatives of the Division of Conciliation and Arbitration, N. C. Department of Labor; UNC law students and faculty members; and other interested individuals. The meeting is open to the public.

The mock mediation will be staged to demonstrate the usefulness of mediation procedures as a practical means for the peaceable settlement of differences between labor and management.

Foisie Speaks On 'Frontiers' Here Monday

Philip Foisie, foreign news editor for the Washington Post, will speak on "Unexplored Frontiers in Journalism" Monday evening in Howell Hall.

Hiss address, set for eight o'clock, will be sponsored by the YM-YWCA.

As foreign editor of the Post, Foisie is responsible for a large staff of foreign correspondents and special representatives abroad. He selects and edits all foreign news copy.

Foisie was born in Seattle, Wash. in 1922. During World War II, he served with Army Intelligence in the Far East. He graduated from Harvard in 1947, and was employed by the United Nations Relief and Rehibilitation Administration in Shanghai for a year. In 1948 he served as city editor of the China Press in Shanghai.

He returned to the United States in 1949 and worked successively with the San Francisco Chronicle; the Press Democrat of Santa Ross, California; and the Louisville, Kentucky, Courier-Journal. Foisie joined the Post as cable editor in 1955.

Foisie has traveled extensively in China, Japan, and all of Southeast Asia, and also in Europe and North Africa.

Student Parking—I

No Plans; A Big Problem

By SUZY STERLING

First Of Two Articles

"The parking situation on campus and in Chapel Hill is terrible. There has been less foresight shown in this than any other aspect of planning on campus."

These words, spoken by Grant Wheeler, assistant to the Dean of Men and the man in charge of student automobiles, reflect the opinion of some 15 University officials on the subject of campus parking facilities.

For over 5,000 registered student automobiles, there are only some 2,900 student places provided. Although every professor or University employee has been provided a space on campus, there is no campus parking provided for students. The closest off-street parking facility to the campus is the Bell Tower lot whose 450 spaces are quickly filled.

The result is students' using faculty lots and reserved spaces, downtown street parking (which slows down business for downtown merchants), and areas so far from campus that it is almost impractical to drive at all.

In addition, Arthur Beaumont, campus police chief, noted that quite frequently cars acquire a "Chapel Hill badge" from trying to squeeze into spaces which are too small. The "Chapel Hill badge" is the marks of collision.

How did the problem get this far out of hand? Poor planning is only one of the reasons.

With a growing University an increase in automobiles can be expected. But this year, instead of following the normal annual enrollment increase pattern of 5 per cent, UNC enrollment jumped some 12 per cent above last year's.

There is also an ever-increasing percentage of students bringing automobiles to campus. At this time between one third and one half the students here have automobiles.

One reason for this higher-than-normal student car ratio is the large number of graduate and married students enrolled here.

Overall, there are simply too many cars and too few spaces.

* * *

What is being done to ease the situation? According to the survey, a few stop-gap measures are presently under consideration, but there is no over-all plan to deal with the problem.

The town is trying to ease its problem to some extent by purchasing three lots on Rosemary Street. These lots, when graded and paved, will provide form 160 to 250 spaces.

In addition, the zoning ordinance concerning new buildings is closely enforced. The ordinance requires that for any new building—whether it be classroom, dormitory, fraternity, or student facility—sufficient parking must be provided in the plans.

According to J. A. Branch, University business manager, the University is now "parking to the fringes." There are only two ways to move—up or out.

There is a plan being considered to move up—that is, triple-deck the Bell Tower parking lot. Two more decks would add some 300 spaces to the present 450 spaces.

So far, students with automobiles have not been charged anything beyond $2.50 for a student sticker, and a token charge for administration and supervision. If the Bell Tower plan is approved, each student with an automobile will have to pay a $50 fee annually to help finance this $2,150,000 project.

Civil Rights And The South

By TOM BOLCH

The current controversy over civil rights and its relation to the South is put into perspective by some of the top legal minds in the country in the winter edition of the North Carolina Law Review, published today.

The undertaking by the Law Review marks the first time a university law journal anywhere in the country has presented a comprehensive, in-depth report of civil rights and its meaning to the South.

In a symposium entitled "Civil Rights and the South", ten men well-versed on the subject write about the current status of civil rights, its constitutionality, its application to school desegregation, housing, property rights and employment, and the meaning of the social and legal revolution surging through the country.

U.S. Senator Sam J. Ervin Jr. views civil rights legislation now before Congress as constitutionally defective, while Arthur E. Sutherland Jr., professor of constitutional law at Harvard University, sees it as a legitimate extension of the powers of Congress.

R. Carter Pittman, a Dalton, Ga., lawyer, denies that the doctrine of human equality is the highest law of the land.

"This country," he writes, "was founded upon the doctrine that all men are born equally free and independent. That doctrine—not the doctrine that 'all men are born equal'—went into the constitutions and bills of rights of all American states, into the Federal Constitution and the Bill of Rights . . .

"The 'concept of equality' is wholly incompatible with the 'concept of liberty' for which the Revolution was fought and the Constitution written," Pittman says.

"The essence of liberty is the liberty to excell, to succeed and to be unequal," he adds.

Charles J. Bloch, another prominent Georgia attorney, declares that property rights are being eaten away in great gulps by Congress and the Federal judiciary.

On the other side of the fence, retired South Carolina attorney Marion A. Wright, vice president of the Southern Regional Council, views recent court decisions on civil rights as the result of legal mandates arising from moral imperatives.

* * *

Before going deeper into the reasoning behind the views, it seems appropriate to note the significance of an undertaking such as this symposium by the North Carolina Law Review, published by the University of North Carolina Press and headed by editor-in-chief George C. Cochran of Maysville, Ky., and William R. Hoke of Raleigh, business manager.

Orders of reprints of the articles began pouring in from all over the nation even before the Review went to press.

Law review articles, being one of the chief sources of scholarly legal research, often have a way of becoming a catalyst in legal thinking, accelerating the process whereby differing views react together to facet and polish the rough stone of an idea into a sparkling gem.

Judges often look to the law reviews to find and select proper rules and principles and thus the ideas expressed in the reviews become part of the land when incorporated by judges in their decisions.

In his introduction to the article, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy says, "Some aspects of civil rights have won public attention chiefly through crisis headlines. These, like bright flashes of lightning, have served to reveal the urgency of the general question.

"But the trained spotlight of professional inquiry may well serve better to illuminate the real nature of the problems and their future development."

Sen. Ervin says the overwhelming defect of proposed civil rights legislation "is the abrogation of the principle of federalism involved in all of its proposals."

Much of the legislation, he says, "would obliterate our federal system," would "reduce the states to meaningless zeroes on the nation's map." He was referring to the fact that the Executive Department of the federal government would have very broad powers within the separate states in enforcing the proposed act.

"The proposed law is scarcely operative at all unless the Attorney General, acting either with or without reason, so wills. This is not government by law. It is government by the whim of the Attorney General.

"I might say that, should such legislation continue to be introduced and passed, then several years from now we will need new civil rights legislation to protect all of us from the abuses of an arbitrary federal government."

* * *

Sutherland says the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution "proclaim a new and comprehensive undertaking toward Negro citizens; and primarily to achieve this, a profound revision in the relation of nation and states."

The 14th Amendment, he contends, "documented a fact of national life: that we had reached the stage where the federal government must assume a much greater degree of control over the local affairs than had previously been the case. The legislative power which the amendment gave to Congress is only part of a process of extension of the powers and concerns of the federal government which has been going on . . . ever since the Constitution took effect."

Congress has at its disposal and should use if necessary to guarantee freedom from oppression for all classes, the commerce power, the power to protect the vote, the war power, the power to tax and spend and the power to allay widespread public distress.

Pittman says a rose by any other name would NOT smell as sweet. Civil rights are really civil wrongs dressed up to fool those who sincerely want to do what is right, he implies.

"An endeavor to enlarge one's 'civil rights' in personal associations sounds better than an endeavor to restrict the power of another to select or cull his associates. An endeavor to increase human equality sounds better than an endeavor to diminish human liberties. The idea of 'improving the environment' of the children of one ethnic group sounds better than the idea of impairing the environment of another by integration."

* * *

While the 1954 Supreme Court decision held that Negro children were injured by being forced to attend segregated schools, a 1963 decision by a federal court judge in Georgia holds the opposite, Pittman says.

The judge in the case of Stell versus the Savannah-Chatham County Board of Education ruled in the U.S. Southern District Court in Georgia on June 28, 1963 that forced integration in schools impairs the educational opportunities of children of both races; that the cause of the gross differences justifying segregation are genetic—not environmental—and may not be changed by integration, and that forced integration injures the children of both races.

What fate this decision will have on appeal can only be guessed.

Bloch asserts that, "When integration commences, disintegration does likewise. The right of a property owner voluntarily to operate his business in accordance with the traditions and habits of a community is a right of property. There is nothing in the 14th Amendment which deprives the property owner of that right."

Wright says property rights are rightly abridged by ethical considerations.

". . . the law seeks to be consistent with sound morality; from the legal point of view that one may do what he pleased with his own property or business, even though the purpose is to cause loss to another, we have advanced to the view that one may never do anything with his property or business for the purpose of injuring another without reasonable and just excuse."

He says that judges, especially southern judges, should not yield to the pressure of public opinion when it goes contrary to declared law.

"Where the pressure . . . is merely a reflection of community prejudice, and the judge, as he should, rebukes it, he not merely properly obeys his oath of office; he performs another and an equally important function.

"He asserts the proper moral position of the community. He is, at the moment, in advance of the present moral position. But his assertion, particularly if vigorous and militant, pricks the community conscience and causes men to think. When they begin to think, they begin to move toward the moral plane occupied by the enlightened judge."

* * *

Paul R. Ervin, a leading North Carolina lawyer and former member of the State's Advisory Committee on Civil Rights, traces the history of the constitutional and legal development of civil rights in North Carolina and compares actual conditions to the law.

Ervin believes that a majority of North Carolina citizens "have a genuine appreciation for those civil rights which were held so dear by the framers of both our State and Federal constitutions . . ."

The preamble of the State Constitution begins, "We the people of the State of North Carolina, grateful to Almighty God . . . for the existence of our civil, political and religious liberties . . . do, for the more certain security thereof, ordain and establish this Constitution."

Laurence W. Knowles, associate professor of law at the University of Louisville, places into context school desegregation and its effects on the South and states the interesting assertion that "pupil desegregation in the South has moved with glacial speed. Teacher integration has not moved at all."

Martin E. Sloane, attorney-adviser of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, details the latest laws and administrative rulings on desegregation as they apply to housing, zoning, restrictive covenants, federally assisted housing, urban renewal, FHA mortgage insurance and fair housing laws.

Berl I. Bernhard, staff director of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, argues that everyone has "a personal and critically important stake" in the struggle to close the gap between the proclamation of freedom and its practice in America.

The law demands it. Morality pleads for it. Our economy argues for it. National survival cries for it, he says.

"In the true spirit of our American heritage, an independent judiciary has led us far along the road toward the realization of equality before the law.

"The challenge of our times is whether we, independently as individuals and collectively as a nation, will demonstrate the maturity to walk that road, to translate judicial promise into living reality, and to write an honorable ending to one of the least proud chapters in American history."

Why Little Hometowns Are Little & Home

Second of Two Articles

In pondering an answer to the question of what Carolina students are thinking, or if they are, we are reminded of something which Chapel Hill Weekly writer Jim Dunn wrote as UNC was about to open this fall.

Talking about the potentialities and failings of us returning students, and our freshman and transfer classmates, Dunn wrote:

"Most of them will be disarmingly mediocre, the ones that make (and break) Presidents. They are the reasons little hometowns are little and home."

Dunn, we think, put his finger on a good bit of truth in a memorable way. Implicit in what he wrote is a recognition of the fact that most people have always been pretty average, and there is little reason to think that today's students are any different from the bulk of their predecessors.

We would tend to agree with the estimate in yesterday's editorial that about two-fifths of us students are preoccupied with trivia, about two-fifths of us sway back from concern to unconcern, and about one-fifth are involved in something significant, something larger than ourselves.

It is important to note that this one-fifth of our number who are concerned, involved and thinking about matters of significance don't always appear that way. Students deeply immersed in their studies fall into this category just as much as do those who exhibit their deep interest by participating in extra-curricular activities. Thus, outside activities cannot be taken as the sole index of interest, nor is it always a valid index. There are those, for example, who mask their intellectual blandness by going through the motions of participating but never really do so in a meaningful way.

The question, however, is why an estimated four-fifths of us — supposedly the cream of the educational crop — make such a poor showing on the scale of thought and involvement.

First of all, many of us just haven't got what it takes. We don't have the desire, or the will-power or the intellectual curiosity, or the opportunity, to think about things outside of our own habitual realm of experience.

Secondly, as we have noted before, this is an age of bigness. Business, labor, government . . . problems, issues, events . . . some of us feel dwarfed by the scope of these things, and we don't have the intellectual gall required to think about them and try to reach some conclusion, even a tentative one.

Thirdly — and this, we think, is a problem that afflicts many of our elders — today's world seems so incomprehensibly complex, with everything affecting everything else in some way or other, that many of us just say to hell with it all and crawl back into our intellectual shells, whether consciously or subconsciously. This, of course, has always been a problem, but in today's world it is especially acute.

Well, then, is there hope? Is there a silver lining someplace?

What do you think?

The Distribution Of Blame: He Did It, But We Let Him

Since the Black Friday of President John F. Kennedy's treacherous assassination, those of us here and abroad who work at being decent and honorable have tried to put our grief into context.

In our sincere, well-intentioned questionings of what caused the foul event, some of us have been indiscriminate with blame. Reason, and the memory of a man who so exemplified its nobler qualities, now insists that we re-examine our generosity with this blame and recognize that much of it has been misdirected.

To be sure, it is hard to agree with the belief that the death of John F. Kennedy was not due at least partially to some flaw in the American character, to the climate of hate and frustration which has developed in the grey years of the Cold war, or to the presumed sickness of the city of Dallas.

But a careful examination of the evidence to date leads inexorably to the conclusion that all these things and more—real or imagined, however harmful they are or may be in themselves—were largely irrelevant in Mr. Kennedy's death.

Sen. Thruston Morton (R-Ky.) has perhaps put it best. In a recent speech on the floor of the Senate, he said:

"It was not a flaw in the American system or the American character that struck down John Kennedy. It was not the sin of a city or of its citizens. It was not a tragedy that struck from some dark stain of violence on the American system or in the American soul. And we do not serve the best interests of our nation, or of the memory of a murdered President, by letting wrongly-placed recriminations overcome the good sense of this great nation."

Lee Harvey Oswald, the man whom our best evidence convicts of Kennedy's murder, was a "stranger to the American heritage, and his mind had been warped by an alien violence, not by a native condition," Morton continued.

". . . Let us mourn the terrible event, but let us not mourn for the American soul—for that soul is stout and lighted by truth and faith. Let the blame be on him who actually committed the crime . . . What happened was not America's fault. Only the sober realization of that can make our mounrning meaningful and not torture it with a guilt that is undeserved and unworthy of the cause in which our Presidents live and for which sometimes they tragically die."

Yet, even Morton, for all his demonstrated wisdom, was not entirely correct. Nor was his colleague, Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.), who jumped up, praised Morton's words, then seconded them.

"I accept no blame for what this demented man did," said Gore. "I feel no sense of personal guilt. He is the one who became a fanatic. Why should all America be blamed for the actions of one fanatic? True, our society has many problems and imperfections, much stress and distress, hate, fear and disappointment; but it is an injustice to our millions of people of good will, even the teeming thousands of hospitable, cheering people in Dallas, to charge them with murderous guilt.

"I reject it for myself and for my people," Gore added. "This was an act of a madman."

No, neither Sen. Morton nor Sen. Gore, for all the excellence of their insight into this situation, are entirely correct.

For there is some blame left over from the lion's share due Oswald. And that blame is upon all of us, as citizens, for the perhaps understandable but nevertheless very real neglect we have shown in being socially callous where mental health and the sale of firearms is concerned.

Oswald's record reveals that several years ago, while living in New York, it was recommended that he receive treatment for what appeared to be a schizophrenic condition. Instead he was allowed to remain free, and his sickness worsened.

In this condition, along with thousands of other Americans who are criminal or unstable, he was allowed to purchase a gun with a minimum of effort.

Thus we, as a nation, unwittingly aided in the assassination of our chief of state, so part of the guilt for Oswald's crime is ours. Had we acted positively in the fields of mental health and regulation of firearms, as we have done in varying degrees in other areas—such as the licensing of drivers—the horrible deed might never have been perpetrated.

So it is that we take slight, but significant, issue with the otherwise profoundly-wise words of Senators Morton and Gore.

Until we, as a nation, act legislatively to reduce the irrational ease with which Mr. Kennedy's murder was carried out—to prevent the indiscriminate sale and ownership of firearms, and to develop a sound mental health program complete with enforceable standards—until then our grief will be wasted, and we will have left the door open for the hideous deed to be repeated, if not upon a President, then upon you or us or a member of our family.

Canadians Visit The South

By KELLIS PARKER
And JAENE YEAGER

The tragic events of the past week made it particularly difficult to introduce the visiting students from Toronto to the Carolina way of life. The events did, however, give special meaning to the discussions which were centered on the theme "North Carolina: Microcosm of the Changing South."

The 26 students from Toronto and their Tar Heel mates had hardly arrived at the new State Capitol in Raleigh when the tragic news was received.

UNC students will never forget the reaction of shock and grief that we shared with the Toronto students and government officials. In the faces of the Toronto students we saw the international significances of the President of the United States.

Tom Jones, a member of the department of the budget and a graduate of UNC managed to meet the challenge of the hour by reminding the group of the unique characteristics of the American system of government and of the method of succession. He then talked and answered questions on the financial status of the State, the amount of influence the federal government has over State finances, and the Speaker Ban to which he was opposed.

After the visit at the State House, the exchanges had a banquet in the State Room of Morehead Planetarium. Many University officials attended the banquet and officially welcomed the Canadians to UNC. The students left the banquet and went to the Playmakers's performance of "Long Day's Journey Into Night."

On Saturday morning, the students attended classes with their Co-Tar Heels and participated in a discussion on the role of Student Government at UNC. Bob Spearman, student body vice president, began the discussion by presenting the three branches of government at UNC and some of the issues that confront Student Government. Phil Baddour and John Ulfelder presented the two-party system as it exists at Carolina. Whitney Durand gave a brief description of the Honor System and summarized the activities of GMAB. Mike Lawler and Hugo Spechar compared Student Government at UNC to student governments throughout the United States.

Fred Weaver, former dean of students, now Secretary of the Consolidated University, was main speaker at the banquet which was held on Saturday night. He told the group that "veritas-truth is the most important object of a university education. The whole University must search for truth, and since the students tend to be a little closer to the truth, the administration must look to them."

Borrowing from a student's letter to the Daily Tar Heel, Weaver defined the faculty as students and students as scholars, two groups seeking the same goals and sharing the same problems.

On Saturday night, Roger Foushee, a graduate student in political science, led a discussion on the organic development of Student Government at UNC. The Toronto students were particularly interested in the relation of liberal developments at UNC to similar developments in the State. The students responded to this analysis by comparing their own student government experiences with the tradition of Student Government at UNC. The Canadians remarked that they would begin to pursue an environment of greater student initiative and responsibility at their own university.

The weekend was officially concluded Sunday morning at a discussion on views of "The Changing South." Bob Spearman began the discussion by presenting a historical analysis of the political development in the South.

Led by David Dansby, a Negro Law School student, the discussion focused on integration. He compared the white moderate with the segregationist and concluded that one is as bad as the other. "The ultra-conservative forces a showdown which results in faster integration; but the moderate condescends to accepting slow changes for the sake of maintaining peace. Thus, integration follows at an illogically slow rate." Assisted by Roger Foushee, Dansby traced the history of desegregation at the University.

All of the students at UNC who participated in the exchange deeply regretted the departure of the Canadians. The number of cancellations made us aware of the real significance of the Toronto Exchange.

For three days, 52 students from different cultures and different backgrounds were able to transcend these differences; consequently, new avenues of understanding were opened.

The exchangees from UNC look forward to meeting their newly-acquired friends at the University of Toronto January 30.

Future Investment Plans

The McGraw-Hill Survey of business plans for plants and equipment spending shows an increase of 4 per cent over what is actually being spent in 1963. Taken at face value, this figure would make the business outlook for the coming year look quite gloomy. Investment outlays for the fourth quarter of the present year are running well above the average for the entire year. A 4 per cent increase from year to year, therefore, would mean a decline below present levels sometime toward the end of 1964. This need not become a recession but it would very likely mean an increase in unemployment.

Fortunately, there is reason to think that investments will do better than this very early survey of intentions suggests. A look at the record shows that businessmen in times of high activity have bettered initial estimates by 3 to 5 per cent. This would mean an increase in investment outlays for 1964 as much as 10 per cent, which is the gain many economists have been expecting. Even this is not a very great rise and might not produce much of a drop in unemployment.

The estimates available so far underscore the importance of an early tax cut. While it has been widely argued that business has already discounted it, the McGraw Hill Survey showed very little evidence of that. An increase in consumer spending would quickly raise the operating rates of business firms, which now average about 85 per cent. A higher operating rate, together with somewhat lower taxes on business profits, should lift investments. While it might take some time for plans to be adjusted upwards, the effects ought to be clearly visible by the second half of 1964.

OLD BOOKS AT CHRISTMAS

Not everybody on your Christmas list merits the gift of a rare book. Only one or two would enjoy it—and that's the essence of a Christmas gift.

Folks who know the joy of discovering just the right book in an old book collection are a distinguished and very special group. They share joys that are not open to everybody.

But if you happen to have a friend whose collecting tastes you share, then there's nothing that will give him more joy at Christmas than the gift of an old book that merits a spot on his shelves. No gift under his tree will be so unique, nor so long cherished.

Such a book may be waiting for your discovery in our Old Book Corner.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: CLEM PATTON

From the time he joined Southern Bell in Nashville, Clem Patton (B.S.E.E., 1958) has continually impressed his management with his engineering ability.

Given the job of designing telephone cable connections between the central office and new residential subdivisions, Clem found ways to design connections that expertly met the engineering problem, and yet, kept costs to a minimum.

Because of such creative engineering talent, Clem was selected by his company to attend the Telephone Operating Engineers Training Course at Bell Labs. On completion of the course, Clem will return to Southern Bell and the increased responsibilities that await him there.

Clem Patton, like many young engineers, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

UNC Swimmers Defeat Navy

The equatic Heels of Coach Pat Earey captured a thrilling win in the final 400-yard freestyle relay race to come away with the big prize. Thompson Mann nipped Navy All-America Mike Collins by 15 feet on the final leg of the race after Harrison Merrill had obtained the initial lead for Carolina.

Larry Roberts, Chip Smith, Merrill and Mann were the guns that got the seven points which brought UNC back from a 41-46 deficit going into the final race. Their time of 3:18.8 is a new pool record at Annapolis and also broke the ACC mark of 3:19.6 set by Carolina in the conference meet at Raleigh last year,

Navy's Collins had taken both the 50 and 100-yard freestyle contests earlier in the day, defeating Merrill in the latter race. But the relay was a different story.

Mike Hogg of Navy had an opening margin over UNC's Roberts to start the race, and midshipman Charley Wright took the advantage to lead Merrill most of their leg. But the powerful Carolina junior, a 200-individual medley winner earlier, came on to pass Wright at the end of the lap.

Smith, swimming third leg, kept the lead on Navy's Dick Hunter, but Mann and Collins put on a furious show in the final laps before Thompson pushed away three laps from the end.

Mann, like Collins and Merrill an All-America, won the 200-yard backstroke (his specialty) and also swam on the winning 400-medley relay team (time: 3:46.3). Besides the two relays and the individual wins by Mann and Merrill, UNC got two other wins — the 200 butterfly by Fred Lipp and the 200 breastroke by Rick Forum.

200-yard Freestyle — Wier (N), Sheldon UNC), Hefelton (N) 1:52.8

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Although there is an abundance of feminine beauty afoot, there are few natural beauties so perfect in every respect that they can't and don't resort to beauty boosts. Artificial lashes, for example, are used more and more to elongate or enlarge eyes and to fill where natural hairs are sparse.

Artificial lashes are quite easy to cut and trim, and the real skill in their use is to subtly blend the natural and the artificial. Although the false lash adhesive is transparent when dry, it is wise to follow up with an accent of eye liner or eyebrow pencil and to finish up by blending carefully and tastefully with mascara.

Incidentally, careful and tasteful adequately describe the attention your hair receives at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon. Whether it be a shampoo, permanent or styling, our operators and stylists use their training and experience to fullest advantage at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon, 133½ East Franklin Street, Phone 942-4335. ## AFL Playoff On Jan. 5th

NEW YORK (UPI) — Commissioner Joe Foss announced Wednesday that the American Football League's championship playoff game will be played on Sunday, Jan. 5, in either San Diego or Oakland, Calif.

The title game originally had been scheduled for Dec. 22, but was set back two weeks after the AFL postponed all Nov. 24 games because of the death of President Kennedy.

Foss also announced that the AFL's third all-star game, originally set for Jan. 5 in San Diego's Balboa Stadium, has been re-scheduled for Sunday, Jan. 19.

The re-scheduled AFL games will provide the nation's television viewers with four consecutive Sundays of pro football fare between Dec. 29 and Jan. 19.

Philadelphia Eagles 5-Grand Purchase

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The Philadelphia Eagles football team was sold Thursday for $5,505,500 to a group headed by Jerry Wolman, 36-year-old Washington building contractor.

The sale of the club is subject to approval by 12 of the other 13 franchise holders in the National Football League.

It represents a return of $60,500 to the shareholders who put in $3,000 per share in 1948.

Originally there were 100 shares of stock but nine have been retired by the club.

The Wolman bid was high among four considered by 51 stockholders who met for four hours before making their decision.

A Baltimore group headed by James Keelty, former president of the Baltimore Orioles baseball team, and his brother, Joseph, made a last minute bid of $5,120,000.

A group form Cherry Hill, N. J., headed by Joseph McCrane, a son-in-law of race track owner Eugene Mori, put in a bid of $5,105,800 and a Philadelphia group headed by Jack Wolgin, banker and credit corporation official, bid $5,100,000.

Everett Petition Opposes Faculty Committee Action

By JOHN GREENBACKER
And KERRY SIPE

A petition criticizing the faculty for its actions in ousting the student members of the student-faculty review board is being circulated by the residents of Everett Hall, Everett president Paul Dickson announced Thursday.

The petition reads in part, "We feel this unilateral faculty action demonstrates a great lack of faith in student judgment and maturity, and further, that this action violates the spirit of mutual trust and co-operation essential to the well-being and continued progress of our institution."

Copies of the petition were presented before Student Legislature Friday night, and will later be presented to the Faculty Council and the Administration.

Dickson said the purpose of the petition was, "to show that students are interested in this thing. I think it was the opinion that the students had no concern for the action, and we want to show that they actually do," he added.

Phil Baddour, Student Legislature majority leader and a resident of Everett Hall, said that the petition currently has approximately 400 signatures on it.

The petition had been circulated through the lower quad and copies have been extended to Ruffin and Joyner Halls.

Pick Delegates To Mock Session

Delegates and alternates to this year's meeting of the State Student Legislature were chosen in interviews this week.

All delegates and alternates must attend a compulsory meeting Tuesday, Dec. 17, at 4 p.m. in Roland Parker 3.

The mock legislature meets this year in Raleigh, Feb. 27 through 29.

UNC is allotted 14 voting delegates and seven official alternates. There are also 25 other unofficial alternates.

Delegates this year are: Phil Baddour, Kate Blackwell, Clark Brewer, Whitney Durand, Bo Edwards, Dick Ellis, Neal Jackson, Mike Lawler, Bill Lucas, Armistead Maupin, Darst Murphy, Karen Rawling, John Ulfelder and Pete Wales.

Official alternates are: Maida Burch, Mike Chanin, Jeff Davis, Harry DeLung, Mal King, Chuck Neely and Munny Yates.

TO EASE PARKING PROBLEM

Town To Provide Three Lots

By SUZY STERLING

Second of Two Articles

Editor's Note: Yesterday's article discussed the serious lack of student parking facilities here on campus. It was noted that there are a few stop-gap measures under consideration, but that there is no over-all plan to deal with the problem.

In efforts to solve the mammoth parking problem confronting Chapel Hill, the town has purchased three lots on Rosemary Street.

The University is discussing a proposed $2,150,000 plan to triple-deck the Bell Tower parking lot, at an annual cost of $50 to each student with a car. Two smaller lots have been proposed for the opposite ends of Alderman and McIver dormitories. However, these lots will only provide a total of 60 more spaces.

What is the real difficulty in providing these spaces? Arthur Tuttle, the University's director of planning, says the main difficulty is the "cost of parking and the extreme shortage of land."

The State Legislature has placed limits on the expenditure for each student's dormitory and parking facility. It is said to be next to impossible to provide adequate facilities within this alloted amount, particularly considering the high cost of land purchase.

In fact, the Legislature may not approve the Bell Tower plan because of its high cost. Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont noted that the only hope to have this plan approved is to have the proposed structure declared a fall-out shelter.

Perhaps the plan being considered by Grant Wheeler of the Dean of Men's office is the only workable one — that is, to limit student automobiles further. According to Wheeler, sophomores may have the same restrictions that freshmen do now in the next three or four years, possibly sooner.

University Business Manager Arthur Branch concluded, "We have no definite plans, but we know we have to have the spaces in the years to come."

The underlying question, however, is why so many students find an automobile a neccessity. On week-days, automobiles are used mainly on campus, to and from classes. However most students with cars here indicate that they brought them for week-end use.

If, as Wheeler stated, cars are further restricted, there will have to be some substitute for cross-campus and off-campus automobile transportation.

If, as Editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly, Jim Shumaker, stated, "The reason for such a high percentage of cars per capita is that neither Chapel Hill nor the campus has a public transportation system," then this system may be the needed substitute.

It does not seem likely that students with cars will be happy about paying a $50 annual fee to finance the Bell Tower project.

And it seems even more unlikely that sophomores will be pleased about losing automobile privileges. Therefore, either a substitution or a solution must be arrived at, and soon.

The substitution could be a cross-campus and off-campus bus transportation system. At present there is only one bus operated in the Chapel Hill area running between Chapel Hill and Glen Lennox. This system would provide cross-campus transportation at the heavier times of the day, being particularly convenient for those residents of Craige, Ehringhaus, and Nurses' Dorm.

According to the figures drawn up last year by a group of Craige residents, the cost of buying, insuring, maintaining and salarying a driver for each bus would be approximately $10,000 for the first year. After that there would be only the estimated operating expense of $2629 per semester.

In order to pay for this project, there would probably have to be a small fee charged to all those who make use of the buses. Suggested rates are a nickel for on-campus rides and 25 cents for off campus transportation.

But this bus system can be more than a substitute for restricted automobiles. It can play a major role in allowing students to keep their cars as well as providing a convenience for those students without cars. It can be a solution to the parking problem.

Behind Craige dormitory are hundreds of acres of land for sale to the University. If UNC did purchase this land and made it into a large parking lot, the bus system could provide transportation to campus for those who parked their cars so far out. Closer parking cannot be offered, for there is the beauty of the campus to consider. So, by purchasing this land and setting up a bus system, UNC would still be able to allow students to keep their automobiles.

Otherwise, restriction is practically inevitable. And because of the parking situation, Chapel Hill would become an even closer-knit pedestrian community.

Henderson Dies

Dr. Henderson had been in declining health for the past two years.

Walker's Funeral Home of Chapel Hill is in charge of arrangements.

Funeral arrangements and further information will be in tomorrow's Daily Tar Heel.

Final Touches Being Put On Jr. Year Abroad

UNC's first junior year abroad program is in its final planning stages.

Dr. Richard Frautschi, associate professor of French, will fly to Lyons, France, today to make final arrangements with the French university there for a program next year.

Dr. Frautschi will direct the program which is scheduled to begin next September.

About 30 students from any major field will be chosen to go to Lyons for the year. They will attend a rigorous six-week language course during the autumn and then attend the French university for two semesters.

All students will live with French families if possible. Dr. Frautschi will be settling this problem on his trip.

The Lyons program is expected to cost the student several hundred dollars more than a year at UNC.

All normal UNC scholarships will remain in effect for students studying at Lyons, according to Dr. Julian Mason, director of student aid.

In addition, other scholarships especially designed for the program will be offered.

"No good student should hesitate to apply for financial reasons," Dr. Mason said. "If he is qualified, we will find something for him."

All credits for courses taken at Lyons will be transferred back to UNC for the senior year if the program goes through.

Applications for the year abroad for next fall are tentatively scheduled to be made available in January.

Eligibility requirements will be a B-minus average overall and a B average in all French courses. Students must have completed French 21 by June of the year they plan to go.

Students Propose Reinstatement Of S-F Review Board

Oswald May Have Shot At Walker

WASHINGTON— (UPI) —The possibility that Lee Harvey Oswald, accused assassin of President Kennedy, was also the sniper who narrowly missed killing former Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker last April in Dallas was under thorough FBI investigation Friday.

FBI spokesmen firmly declined comment, but from other sources it was learned:

—Oswald's Russian-born wife has told FBI agents that her husband—noticeably excited—confided at the time of the Walker shooting incident that he had tried to kill the one-time general who quit the Army to devote himself to right wing causes.

—The FBI has asked the Dallas Police Department for full particulars of the Walker case.

The sniper's shot at Walker occurred on the night of April 10. The bullet fired by the unseen rifleman drilled through a window of the former general's fashionable North Dallas home and missed him by scant inches.

Walker was injured slightly by bursting fragments of glass and metal from the window frame. The bullet was recovered in badly misshapen condition from a wall.

At the time of the shooting, detective D. E. McElroy of the Dallas police said: "Whoever shot at the general was playing for keeps. The sniper wasn't trying to scare him."

All three rifle bullets that killed Kennedy and wounded Texas Gov. John Connally were recovered. An Italian - made rifle bought by mail order by Oswald last March also is in police hands.

The FBI undoubtedly is making laboratory tests to determine if the Walker bullet could have been fired from the Oswald weapon, informed sources said.

They also related that Marina Oswald, the 22-year-old Soviet pharmacist who married Oswald during his defection to Russia, had told the FBI that he had come home in great excitement on the night of April 10 and related that he had tried to shoot Walker.

MOCK BARGAINING

A mock labor management bargaining session, Mediation in Action, will be conducted today during a meeting of the N. C. Department of Labor Arbitration Panel.

The meeting will be held in room 2, Carroll Hall at 2 p.m.

Ask Faculty To Set Up Committee

By HUGH STEVENS

Student Government officials proposed to the Faculty Council yesterday that the Student-Faculty Review Board be temporarily reinstated while a special faculty committee may study the Review Board controversy and discuss it with student leaders.

The proposals came as part of a presentation to the Council by Mike Lawler, Bob Spearman, Whitney Durand, and Phil Baddour.

The presentation included the opinion of the student leaders that the faculty, in abolshing the Review Board without consulting students, had broken a contractual agreement that was based on "mutual trust and cooperation."

The Faculty Council announced later that it could not consider the proposals because they were not formally placed on the agenda.

Chancellor William Aycock, speaking for the faculty, said, "we could not consider these proposals as a motion, so the agenda committee has been instructed to place them on the agenda for a later meeting if it sees fit."

In response to the Chancellor's announcement, Lawler later issued the following statement:

"Sometimes technicalities should yield to equity. A technicality has deferred faculty action until January.

A Committee should be meeting and talking this situation over now, and the rest of us should be working on the needs of our University. But the greater interest of this University have been yielded to "the agenda."

Phil Baddour, chairman of the Judicial Committee of Student Legislature, began the student presentation by pointing out the tradition of cooperation between faculty and students with regard to the Honor System.

"I want to show you," he said, "why we have been so hurt by the recent action of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline."

He noted that the foundations of the student judiciary rest upon student-faculty cooperation, going back to the first such arrangements in 1875. He pointed out that the Faculty Council had unanimously approved the decision to set up the Student-Faculty Review Board in 1956, and had also approved its conclusion in the student constitution.

On October 22, Baddour continued, student leaders were informed that the Board would suddenly consist of faculty members and would "automatically" hear all appeals from the student courts of original jurisdiction.

"In other words," he concluded, "a plank of the student constitution has been abrogated by the faculty without consultation with a single student leader. That which began as a contractual agreement between two parties has been abolished by one party."

Whitney Durand, Men's Council chairman, reviewed the effects of the decision upon the judicial system, saying that the effectiveness of the student courts had been significantly decreased by the new system of automatic appeal.

"In effect," he said, "a student who receives a verdict of guilty can immediately ask for and be guaranteed another trial. He has nothing to lose, since the faculty very rarely gives a more severe sentence than the Council."

Bob Spearman, student body vice president, said "we are disturbed that a joint enterprise entered into in good faith by students and faculty in 1956 should be arbitrarily ended by one party."

The decision, he continued, has undermined the faith of the student body in their government.

Spearman called attention to "the spirit of mutual trust under which the educational enterprise can best be fulfilled."

Rites Today For Former Law Dean

A Kenan Professor and former president of the American Association of Law Schools, he was awarded the Thomas Jefferson Award in 1962 for being that member of the UNC faculty whose life most resembled the spirit of Thomas Jefferson.

A native of Ashland, Wis., Van Hecke received Ph.D. and J.D. degrees from the University of Chicago Law School and joined the UNC faculty in 1921, becoming dean in 1931 and continuing in that post until 1941. He continued to teach after his resignation as dean.

Funeral services will be held at the Community Church at 3 p.m. today, followed by burial in the Old Chapel Hill Cemetery.

Which Twin Is The Phony?

By DAVID NORDAN

If that nice, new, crisp, one dollar-bill you just bummed off your room-mate looks a little different, don't panic and don't call J. Edgar.

Look at the top of the bill, just over George's picture. If Federal Reserve Note is written where Silver Certificate used to be, all is well. You are the proud owner of one of the new one-dollar Federal Reserve Notes that Uncle Sam has spread out among the masses to replace the old Silver Certificate.

Why? It seems there has been a lack of silver on the market recently, and this move is designed to release some of the silver used to back up the old Silver Certificate. The Federal Reserve Note is backed up by 25% gold and 75% govt. securities.

Up until now Federal Reserve Notes have represented 85% of U. S. Government currency, being issued in $5.00 through $50,000.00 denominations. This is the first time $1.00 bills have ever been issued through the Federal Reserve Bank.

The last time the currency was changed came during World War II when the government issued two series of emergency currency with the word Hawaii printed on the front and back.

The silver released by the mint will probably be coined and turned out to the public, which will put their dimes and quarters into one-armed bandits, cigarette and coke machines, and eventually wind up back in Uncle's mint.

Author Sees No New Talent

By FRED HARWELL

"To say what you are trying to say is the most difficult thing in the world," Russell Brantley, director of communications at Wake Forest College, told the UNC Press Club here Thursday.

But Brantley had no trouble saying something about a great many things—including his controversial novel "The Education of Jonathan Beam."

He told the group, which included many journalism majors, that "you will probably not be in newspapering long. Many of the brighter students will go into public relations."

But, Brantley said, this doesn't mean your job will be better, it "implies only that it will be better paying."

Brantley said that a news bureau man winds up as a "garbage collector—he acquires many unexpected jobs.

"Basically," he said, "you are a buffer between the institution and the newspapers."

As a novelist, Brantley has one book out — the highly-regarded "Education of Jonathan Beam."

"I don't think the book reflects on Wake Forest College," Brantley said, "but it is a criticism of the North Carolina State Baptist Convention."

The book had to do with the 1957 Convention decision against dancing on the college campus, which "always seemed to me to be one of the most unreasonable pieces of legislation ever passed by any body," Brantley said.

Brantley said he received two main complaints about the book:

—Its abusive language. But Brantley said he does not think it was overdone, and that it "was not done to shock anyone." Conversation in any college dorm is "pretty rough," he said.

—That it was an attack on the ministry. But why shouldn't the ministry be attacked just like any thing else?

"It seems to me that this kind of freedom to criticise is a particularly important thing on a college campus—one of the few remaining places where such freedom can be found. It needs to be safeguarded."

Brantley admitted that somewhere in the book he got "perturbed" and probably spent more time than was artistically necessary "hitting someone over the head."

He told the group that his character was not supposed to be a typical college student.

"Today's students are more serious than they used to be," he said, "and infinitely more religious.

"They are also more cosmopolitan—but I don't think they are any more intellectual."

He credited students today with more "superficial gloss" than before, but "the quality of writing on the college level is no better today than it was 10 years ago," he said.

Director Speaks

"The 'angry young men' in England are not really angry at all," said Eric Salmon, visiting British actor, director and lecturer who spoke here Wednesday at the first public forum sponsored by the newly established Division of Fine Arts.

"The 'angry young men' are merely committed to writing good plays taken from life, not previous theater," he said. According to Salmon, the term 'angry young men' was created on the typewriters of journalists trying to coin a phrase for the new breed of British playwrights. The name came from a popular play, "Look Back in Anger," written by Osborne, a promising young writer.

"These 'angry young' outbursts were made possible by the Arts Council, a government organization which has subsidized the arts since the end of World War II. During the war, a group which called themselves The Council for the Encouragement of Music and The Arts (CEMA), was organized to provide entertainment both for the military personnel, and for the civilian population. Since London was under a rigid "black out," the arts took to the smaller communities in England. Fine plays and music were so well received in these towns, and the government subsidy of the arts was so popular, that the Arts Council took over when the war ended to "encourage the spread of the arts to all towns and shires of this our realm."

According to Salmon, "The Arts Council was the difference between the life and death of some of the arts."

Judge Preyer Leaves His Camp

Judge Richardson Preyer, candidate for Democratic nomination for governor, finally expressed his views on the Speaker Ban Law while campaigning in Kinston this week.

To those of us who look to Preyer to provide the traditionally enlightened leadership which has characterized the governors of this state through most of this century, the Judge's pronouncements on the law came as quite a disappointment.

Preyer said he agreed with the intent of the law and does not favor its repeal, but said he does feel that ways could be found to improve it. He elaborated on this by saying that "there ought to be a way to allow scientists and other scholars who have no ulterior political motives to visit with each other on our campuses and exchange views on matters of scientific and scholarly interest."

He then added, "Certainly the fact that we are the only state in the nation that does not allow such an exchange ought to give us pause and concern."

It should give us pause, but Judge Preyer's statements should give us pause too. From a man of the Judge's political beliefs we expected an outright condemnation of the law, but perhaps it would be too naive to expect this condemnation from a man who is also running for office in this state. What Preyer has said is politic, realistic and a shade compromising, and it leaves some of his most ardent supporters wondering.

But what exactly are his feelings? He says, " . . . I do not think that Communists or anyone else should be allowed to use the buildings of state-supported insttutons to advocate the v-o lent overthrow of our government."

That seems to be fairly specific: Communists can speak so long as they don't advocate the violent overthrow of our government in their speech. That we believe, is exactly what the 1941 law says. If this is what Preyer believes, then he, like the college leaders in this state, feels that the new law is unnecessary. We can only wish he had said this in the first place, but such are the machinations of politics.

The Judge should take care that in crossing over and looking for followers in his opponent's political camps he doesn't lose too many followers in his own camp.

Let's Leave The Driving To Them

Head Cheerleader Tom Gruehn and Student Government officials are going to considerable time and trouble to help arrange train transportation to the Gator Bowl for all interested students.

They are doing this for one central reason: To keep as many of us as possible off the highways at such a dangerous time of year.

Let's help them help us prevent Gator Bowl traffic accidents by taking advantage of the plan they are working on, or any of the three others outlined in yesterday's paper.

It's a good bet that doing so will not only be safer, it will also save considerable time and trouble.

Theory And Practice Don't Quite Meet

UNC's Student Legislature Thursday night took a very meaningful step in an effort to clear away some of the distrust and misunderstanding that now surrounds the controversy over the Student-Faculty Review Board.

Noting that the recent controversies about the role and authority of student government have raised serious questions about the University's commitment to student self-government, the legislature passed a resolution urging the creation of a special committee to affirm the role of Student Government at Carolina. This committee, made up of the President and Vice-President of the student Body and any other members selected by the Chancellor from the Administrative and Faculty branches, would discuss the philosophical basis for student self-government and remove the whole problem to a plane above the current disagreement.

Article I of the resolution says: "A consderation of the recent history of the University demonstrates the immediate need for:

1. The persons of full and final authority to affirm their unequivocal recognition of the delegation of authority as a historical fact and singular commitment of the University,
2. The persons of full and final authority to affirm their commitment to the fundamental values of the theory and practice of student self-government,
3. The persons of full and final authority to affirm their commitment to a mutual relationship based upon trust and confidence.

We feel the legislature is wholly justified in asking this affirmation from the University, for while most members of the Administration and faculty affirm their commitment to the theory of student self-government, many seem quite reluctant to allow this theory to be carried out in practice.

It is imperative that the legislative, judicial and executive branches of Student Government know if they are operating in a vacuum. If they are, it mght be interesting to see how the administration and faculty would fare in attempting to carry out all the functions now handled by those groups.

Now That We're Back, When Can We Go?

The first thing that naturally captures our attention after the Thanksgiving vacation is finding out when the Christmas vacation starts. We put ourselves to this task at the beginning of the week, and had no idea what finding out this little bit of information would entail.

It seemed only logical to check the most authoritative sources, but the authoritative sources authoritatively contradict each other.

The class schedule booklet of April 1, 1963, put out by the Office of Records and Registration, says instruction ends at 6:00 p.m. on Dec. 20.

It took a while, but we finally found that Charles Bernard, Director of Admissions, has the responsibility for setting up the schedule.

And what does he say? It's the best of the bunch: 12 noon, Friday, Dec. 20.

Now the only thing we're worried about is whether Santa Claus arrives at 12:01 a.m. December 25th, as North Pole Bulletin No. 713 says, or whether his arrival time is actually 11:49 p.m. December 24th, as the Elf Memorial Calendar says.

Uncertainty. Always uncertainty.

A Living Memorial To A Dead President

The text of a sermon, entitled "Let Grief Run Its Course!", delivered Sunday, Dec. 1, at the Community Church in Chapel Hill. The Rev. Mr. Jones is pastor of the church.

By CHARLES M. JONES

An admirer of President Kennedy, greatly grieved at his death, remarked at the close of the funeral, "Now we must go back to normal living." If he meant we must return to our regular duties—buying and selling, teaching and studying, cleaning house and tending children—he is so right. We cannot let grief immobilize us. But if he meant we must literally resume life "as usual," we shall tragically misuse our national sorrow. We must let grief do its full work, run its full course.

The first response to a sudden and tragic death is always shock. It was so with the President's death. Some were rendered speechless. Those who could speak, could only say, "It's incredible," or "I can't believe it."

When we saw the coffin being loaded into the airplane the unbelievable became believable. And grief continued on its course as the necessity to talk about our loss filled every means of communication with expressions of sorrow and admiration. If the death of Mr. Kennedy was unbelievable, the immediate and universal outpouring of praise and sorrow by men of such widely varying interests, positions and convictions was even more so. One is tempted to be cynical about this — Khrushchev and Franco, Senators Morse and Byrd, Governors Rockefeller and Wallace, business man Roger Blough and labor leader Walter Reuther—men able to agree on few things united in this outpouring of praise and regret. Were Democrats and admirers of the President conferring sainthood on the dead man? Were those who had opposed him so vigorously in life being merely polite or speaking hypocritically with tongue in cheek? I do not believe this to be so.

Grief was running its course. After the shock at the news of death human beings are moved to talk about their loss. It is not that we pelieved the dead one to have been perfect. We know his faults and weaknesses and indeed often love the person, not in spite of, but partly because of these human qualities. But in times of grief we talk about those strengths, the admired qualities of mind and spirit we shall miss most. It is at this point in our sorrow that the funeral or memorial service offers us the chance to express our deepest feelings of hope and love. One did not have to be a Roman Catholic to respond with hope and courage to the service that was held in this time of sorrow.

But is my friend correct? After the funeral do we go back to life as usual? When grief runs its normal course the impulse comes to do honor, to somehow do something to perpetuate the memory of the loved one. It was this that moved Mrs. Kennedy to light the eternal flame. This is the usual course of grief and it faces us with a most difficult task. Shock comes naturally, expressions of grief and love flow easily, but appropriate memorializing has and always will be difficult.

One of the most common ways of perpetuating the memory of a loved one is by the erection of a tomb stone. Already an architect has been employed to design a stone to be placed at the head of Mr. Kennedy's grave. He promises simplicity and dignity in carrying out his task. This is not unexpected but it is welcome news. The erection of large and ornate tombstones tells more about the people who place them there than the people who lie beneath them. But, at their best, tomb stones are poor perpetuators of memory. Memorial Hall on the campus of the University of North Carolina is a memorial to many loved ones. As you climb the steps to the gallery you are confronted with perhaps hundreds of stone tablets each placed there by persons desiring to keep alive the memory of someone. But who reads them? If one does read them it is often with a sense of indifference or curiosity. Stones so lovingly erected in memory of persons tend with the passing of years to be markers and not memorializers.

It is probable that as we attempt to memorialize Mr. Kennedy we shall resort to the time-honored custom of portrait hanging. When these portraits are hung, as many members of the family as possible will be brought to the ceremony and the youngest one present, John-John or Caroline, will pull the string that unveils the picture. An historical address will be made by some public figure at the unveiling. The portrait hanging may go on for years. But portraits, too, are por perpetuators of memory. In the Morehead Planetarium Building there is a large collection of bewhiskered gentlemen adorning the walls. Ask any trustee, alumni or visitor who may be attending a pre-football luncheon held there who one of those great and good men might be and he will move nearer, squint his eyes and read the name underneath the picture. That is all he will know.

Should we chose to memorialize the President by a portrait hung in the Morehead Planetarium Building where after a couple of hundred years this clean-shaven young man will be viewed by bearded observers (then we shall all be wearing beards if the trend continues) who will have to squint to read the name under the picture on the wall, even as clean-shaven men squint to read the name of the bearded men pictured there now. In reality portraits are too poor memorializers.

Already France is renaming a street in honor of the dead President. Germany is naming a square in memory of him. The name of Cape Canaveral has been changed to Cape Kennedy. And the Chapel Hill Weekly suggests we name a new building in memory of him. These are well-meant attempts to perpetuate the memory of John Kennedy but they will be ineffective as the naming of streets and buildings has always been ineffective.

Returning from Washington recently we got lost, as we nearly always do in Washington. To get on our way again we were directed to go iseven traffic lights to Dorsett Street, which would take us to River Road and into Highway 495 and on our way. We went through the seven traffic lights (when they were green) and turned on to Dorsett Street. We were glad to find Dorsett Street, but as to who Dorsett was we knew little and cared less. Yet somebody named that street to perpetuate his memory.

I am not saying this to discourage naming a building on our campus in honor or memory of Mr. Kennedy. Indeed I am glad we name our buildings after persons. It is much better than saying Dormitory A, R, or C, to say Vance, Craige or Ehringhaus. But we need not fool ourselves at this point. Ask any student who lives in Craige what good and great thing the man did. Few, if any, will know or care. We may regret this and wish it otherwise but all attempts to perpetuate the memory of persons by stones, buildings or streets do not succeed. Perhaps it honors us more to do this than it honors or even memorializes them.

Yet grief, if it runs its course, will demand of us some memorializing, some effort to keep alive the memory of the loved one for in this way the pain and grief of sorrow are surmounted. The handling of our national sorrow should not stop short of memorializing, but we need to ask how this can be most effectively and appropriately done.

This is the question we now need to ask as grief moves on its course: What can we do that would best serve the memory of John Kennedy? Perhaps we can find a clue to our answer in what appears to be more and more an emphasis on living memorials. Not simply on the death of prominent persons but of the equally loved but less prominent persons it is often suggested that flowers be omitted and contributions be made to an educational scholarship, and endowment fund for medical research or some cause that will make for health and happiness of people. Often the cause selected is one that concerned the person who is dead.

If, instead of returning to normal living, the people of the United States in their geographic and economic groupings and in their individual capacities would seek to advance the concerns and the enterprises to which the President gave himself and thus provide living memorials to him we shall let grief run its full course in such a way that the dead will be honored and mankind helped.

Let's examine a few of these concerns and enterprises.

The President was concerned with the rising tide of hatred as men's opinions and interests clashed. He knew Dallas had its share, if not more, of people consumed by hate. Mr. Johnson was subjected to violence there nearly three years ago. Just prior to the President's visit Mr. Stevenson with great difficulty spoke to a public meeting and following it was tapped on the head with a sign and spat upon by a young man. So great was hate in Dallas that there was doubt in the minds of many of his advisors that he should go there. So great was the hate that he was assassinated and his alleged killer assassinated in turn. The mayor of Dallas received threats on his life for attending the funeral of Mr. Kennedy as did the Judge who swore in our new President. A Methodist minister has police protection today because he criticized the expression of joy by some school children when they heard of the death of Mr. Kennedy.

Hate there is in Dallas. But the city that is without sin had better cast the first stone! The President might have been as easily killed in Pheonix, Arizona, Los Angeles, California, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania or Jackson, Mississippi. If children in Dallas expressed joy over the death of the President so did some children in Chapel Hill. It is reliably reported that a man in Chapel Hill remarked "Well, it is no loss to the country. We can spare him."

It is probable there was less hate in Chapel Hill for Mr. Kennedy than in Dallas. But had it been Mr. Wallace or perhaps Mr. Goldwater who suffered death I suspect there might have been something less than deep sorrow over that. Should a bullet by a refugee consumed with hate kill Mr. Castro or Mr. Khrushchev are there not many whose hatred would make them openly rejoice in that?

Mr. Kennedy was aware of and concerned that this rising tide of hate be checked. In his inaugural address he asked, (in the context of relationships with Russia!) that we remember "Civility is not a sign of weakness." He hoped to prevent the United Nations Assembly from becoming "A forum of invective." A speech, undelivered in Dallas because of his death, called on the people to refuse to listen to the nonsense of the preachers of hate. But hate had done its work too well.

What more fitting memorial could there be to a man who died because of hate, who earnestly and courageously sought to reduce it and stop its growth, than that of the dedication of politicians, educators, preachers, industrialists, labor-leaders, parents to reduced the hatred in the world. Can we pass on to our children the practice of civility, the ability to hold firm convictions and to act with a sense of care and respect for those against whom we argue and act? To do so would indeed be a living memorial.

A second concern of the late President we might share and further is best expressed in his inaugural address when he said:

". . . . I have sworn before you and Almighty God the same solemn oath our forebears prescribed nearly a century and three quarters ago . . . the world is very different now . . . yet the same revolutionary beliefs our forebears fought for are still at issue around the globe—the belief that the rights of man come not from the generosity of the state but from the hand of God. We dare not forget today we are heirs of that revolution!"

Surely it would be a fitting memorial to the President if we could bring a new sense of urgency to the struggle for civil rights in our country. Bottled up in Committee, scheduled for frustration by long hearings is a Civil Rights Bill. It has become the victim of two forces. Political forces, both Democrat and Republicans, as they jockey for advantage in the coming election year over who passes it and what is or is not in it, and Southern political leaders who are determined to have nothing passed, will in all probability keep anything from passing this year. Our own legislators join with other Southern legislators in their moves.

What fitter memorial could there be, what more could we do for ourselves, than to see that the cause of civil rights is an urgent one and not only legislation but local changes be introduced so that we join this revolution to determine that no man or State, because of strength deny to any man the rights that are rightfully his from the hand of God? This might be done if Congress could see the best way to memorialize the President is not to name Cape Canaveral Cape Kennedy, nor to put his picture on a dollar bill (as our own Representative proposes), nor to adjourn for thirty days and mourn, but to bring forth a Civil Rights Bill which will let us join the revolution for the rights of men rather than oppose or hinder it.

Let us not put this responsibility on the politicians alone. We all — ministers, educators, businessmen, parents as well as politicians in our own sphere of influence and autonomy need to bring a sense of urgency and courage to this concern. This would indeed be a living memorial to the dead President.

A concern for peace, also expressed boldly in the inaugural address of Mr. Kennedy, needs attention. Mr. Kennedy saw clearly one precondition of peace would be "A more fruitful life for all mankind." In his inaugural address among the pledges he made was one "To the people in the huts and villages across the globe struggling to break the bonds of mass misery, we pledge our best efforts to help them help themselves, for whatever period of time is required—not because the communists may be doing it, not because we seek their votes, but because it is right . . ." We don't hear much of that kind of talk. Rather we hear, "Let's limit aid to three years" or "If those folks don't vote our way, why help them?" And, "This aid is costly but if we don't give it the Communists will." What fitter memorial could there be than a broadening of our sympathies, an extension of our concern, a willingness to sacrifice so that the mass of humanity may be lifted from poverty into a liveable life, from despair into hope?

In addition to the poverty of millions that block the way to peace Mr. Kennedy also saw the United States and Russia with their cluster of Allies would have to work together before international peace could be a reality.

Again from his Inaugrual Address we read: ". . . neither can two great and powerful groups of nations take comfort from our present course—both sides overburdened by the cost of modern weapons, both rightly alarmed by the steady spread of the deadly atom, yet both racing to alter that uncertain balance of terror that stays the hand of mankind from final war." Then he suggests a new beginning with sincerity on both sides saying, "Let both sides explore what problems unite us instead of laboring those problems which divide us.

"Let both sides, for the first time, formulate serious and precise proposals for the inspection and control of arms—and bring the absolute power to destroy other nations under the absolute control of all nations.

"Let both sides seek to invoke the wonders of science instead of its terrors. Together let us explore the stars, conquer the deserts, eradicate disease, tap the ocean depths, and encourage the arts and commerce.

"Let both sides unite to heed in all corners of the earth the command of Isaiah to 'undo the heavy burdens and to let the oppressed go free.'

"And if a beachhead of cooperation may push back the jungle of suspicion, let both sides join in a new endeavor, not a new balance of power, but a new world of law, where the strong are just and the weak secure and the peace preserved."

Mr. Kennedy saw quite clearly that unless these were the concerns of the citizens little would be accomplished. He said this plainly, "In our hands, my fellow citizens, more than in our minds, will rest the final success or failure of our course. Since this country was formed each generation of Americans has been summoned to give testimony to its national loyalty. The graves of young Americans who answered the call to service are found around the globe."

"Now the trumpet summons us again—not as a call to bear arms . . . not as a call to battle . . . but a call to bear the burden of a long twilight struggle, year in year out, 'rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation'—a struggle against the common enemies of man: tyranny, poverty, disease, and war itself."

In a state where a gag law is so quickly and easily passed to shut off confrontation and discussion with Communists by citizens the above sounds far from possible. Yet something of this sort must be done if peace is to come. What fitter memorial could there be to the late President than a dedication to bringing rationality and good will to the problem of working together with Communists, toward bringing about conditions in which peace with justice might exist.

We were all greatly moved by the tragic events of the death of John Kennedy. We were moved into shock and we were moved to tears. If we are not moved to let grief run its full course in memorializing the late President by dedication to the concerns and enterprises to which he gave his life it will be a tragic misuse of our national sorrow.

Illinois Educator Slams Medical Testing Program

The man who heads America's first office of research in medical education said here that the student most wanted by medical schools may be the most likely to flunk out the first year because of testing procedures now in use.

Dr. George E. Miller of the University of Illinois College of Medicine said students are being tested on their abilities to "parrot" their teachers and to recite textbooks.

They are not being tested on the more complex thinking processes, such as critical and analytical thinking.

"Tests are for subject matter," he said, "rather than for the intellectual process."

Dr. Miller said medical school faculties say they want students who can solve problems, evaluate and interpret data from many sources and "synthesize" this data into original or new ideas.

But when tests are given, the students with the most desired intellectual qualities are put at a disadvantage.

"The best critical thinker may not be the best recaller," Dr. Miller said.

He urged medical schools to stop fiddling with study courses and with rearranging the number of hours devoted to each course.

"The time has come," he added, "to bring dispassionate observations to education in the health professions.

"We must stop building on strong opinions and beliefs and convince faculties that education is susceptable to careful, systematic precise scrutiny.

"We don't have all the final answers, but it's time to begin using the science of education and educational research.

"We must begin to examine what is actually in our study programs and gather data upon which to make sound decisions."

He said the "climate for learning"—which includes the behavior of faculty members—is much more important in teaching medical students than is the arrangement of courses and hours for each course.

"We should be more concerned about what our students have learned rather than about the time they are exposed to teachers," he said.

"We must place on the student—not the faculty—the responsibility for learning."

During a question and answer period, Dr. Miller acknowledged that his school's faculty was "mostly unhappy" with some of the recommended changes in teaching practices.

"It's hard for anyone to accept that what he's been doing is wrong," he said. "It's much easier to change curricula and hours than to change people."

Dr. Miller, director of research in medical education at the University of Illinois since 1959, was the last in a current series of student-faculty seminar speakers at the UNC School of Public Health.

Student Proposals

"The abolition of the Student-Faculty Review Board exemplifies the very antithesis of the spirit of mutuality which we must cultivate," he said.

He said that student government itself had not been entirely satisfied with the old system with some of its "questionable characteristics."

"These problems and complexities of the old structure needed careful and close attention to be sure that the system did guarantee the rights of due process," he said, "but they were problems and complexities which should have been worked out in concert."

Spearman then proposed that the Review Board be temporarily reinstated while a faculty committee considered the problem.

The committee, as proposed, would consist of the chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, another member of that committee, and several other faculty members. Its responsibilities would be to study the structural and legal problems of the Student-Faculty Review Board, to discuss these problems with officers of the student judiciary and leaders of the Student Body, and to submit recommendations for changes in procedure or structure to the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

"In conclusion," Spearman said, "the joint enterprise of the Student-Faculty Review Board was abolished by unilateral action. This action was, from the viewpoint of the student constitution, illegal. The new review procedure presents some very clear problems, particularly in its feature of automatic appeals from student courts."

"Therefore, we ask for temporary reinstatement of the Student-Faculty Review Board with a special committee to make recommendations for changes in its procedure or composition."

McKenna Honored

RALEIGH — Richard McKenna of Chapel Hill was among the Carolinians honored by the State Friday for literary achievement. The awards came at the close of the 1963 Culture Week activities.

McKenna was presented the 1963 Sir Walter Raleigh award by the N. C. Literary and Historical Association.

Ethel Stephens Arnett of Greensboro was presented the 1963 Mayflower award for non-fiction for her novel, "William Swain, Fighting Editor," the biography of O. Henry's grandfather, who was editor of the "Greensboro Patriot" from May, 1829, through Dec. 1835.

Author Julia Montgomery Street and poet Herman Salinger were honored earlier Friday for their works.

Mrs. Street, of Winston-Salem was presented with the 1963 award for juvenile literature for her book, "Dulcie's Whale."

The award was presented by the American Association of University Women through the N. C. Literary and Historical Association.

Salinger is head of the department of Germanic languages and literature at Duke University.

John L. Bell Jr., a member of the department of social science at Western North Carolina College, was presented this year's R. D. W. Connor award for the best article of the year which appeared in "The North Carolina Historical Review."

His article dealt with "The Presbyterian Church and the Negro during Reconstruction."

One-Acts Rescheduled

The Carolina Playmakers have announced new production dates for its upcoming bill of three original one-act plays. The bill, originally scheduled for presentation Dec. 7-8, has been re-slated for the following Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 14-15.

The change in schedule was necessitated by the two additional performances of "Long Day's Journey Into Night" last week.

The three one-acts, written by students in Prof. Thomas M. Patterson's playwriting class, are "The Button" by George Gray of Gastonia, "Sidney," by Richard Philp of Vero Beach, Fla., and "A Matter of Distinction" by Tom Benenson of New York City.

Curtain time for both performances will be 7:30 p.m. There is no admission charge.

UNC Isn't Seeing Double, Fella; It's Twins!

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

THE SHADOW OF Larry Brown measures only five feet, ten inches but it has already cast an enormous blot upon North Carolina's basketball team.

UNC's first two performances have been anything but impressive, and the most glaring weakness in the 92-87 South Carolina win and the 66-64 double overtime loss at Clemson has been the ball-handling and playmaking lack caused by Brown's absence.

Coach Dean Smith, pleased with his rebounding and the play of a few individuals (notably, Billy Cunningham and rookie Bob Bennett), nevertheless has had to take another long look at the prospects for a season like last year. What he has seen has not left him doing handsprings. Indeed, he is seriously questioning whether his team is really the contender it is cracked up to be.

"I still don't know what to expect from this club," he says. "Two games have left it a mystery as to whether we can challenge Duke in the ACC."

Perhaps the best yardstick of the atmosphere of puzzlement Smith conveys is his commentary on, first, the South Carolina game, then the Clemson disaster. He starts off optimistic, and you get the impression everything is okay. But, after a little while, after he has outlined the mistakes, the shortcomings, the weaknesses, optimism disappears, and you, like Smith, have to wonder.

"South Carolina was a good opener, really, up until the last ten minutes. We just couldn't move it in or make the layup against the zone press. We had looked so good against that in practice. I just don't know what happened."

What happened, happened last year when Larry Brown's eligibility ran out. Harsh as it may seem, Carolina can no longer do the things it could with the little guy in there.

Zone Press: Trouble For UNC

"A ZONE PRESS is a gambling defense," Smith goes on. "You go after one man with the ball with two or maybe three of your own men, and this leaves some guys open. We should be able to hit those open men."

UNC seemed to hit them. The team seemed to get that first pass ("the crucial one that starts the offense moving against the zone press," says Smith), but after two more passes, UNC still didn't have the layup. This meant trouble.

Smith smiles when he says "our ballhandling has left a lot to be desired." But the understatement does not bring any more than that, for if it happens too many more times, he knows he won't be smiling. And the fact that South Carolina has the best zone press of any team (with the possible exception of Duke) UNC will face still does not erase the fact Carolina could not work effectively against it.

"The ballhandling and shooting, the general offensive play in the first half at Clemson, was the worst of any team I've seen play here." This is Smith again. This time, he is not smiling. This time, he lost.

"We lost down there, sure," says the coach, "but the way we came back after that horrible first half and in front of that crowd really pleased me."

The close ones only count in horseshoes, coach. But he does have something, considering opposing teams going into that Clemson bandbox is almost like Kellis Parker walking into John Carswell's Colonial Drugstore. Almost.

"Our defense was poor against South Carolina, and you could see we missed Yogi (Poteet) and Larry (Brown). But down there (Clemson), it was tremendous. You can see that by looking at the score at the end. Our shooting certainly didn't keep us close."

No, and .333 (.233 in the first half) isn't going to be able to keep it close too many times more, either. While on defense, Smith paused again to explain the strategy of opposition defenses, which this year, it ssems, will change from what they have been against UNC.

VanArsdales A Twin Catastrophe

"OUR BACKCOURT, as we expected, has been a problem. We'll know a little more about it after these next two (Indiana and Kentucky). But right now it looks like we're going to get these pressure defenses thrown against us much of the year."

And what is the reason for this? Again, his name is Larry Brown. Carolina does not have the small, fast backcourt man needed to shake the press defenses from mid-court which both South Carolina and Clemson have used already. You didn't see that too much last year. As Smith says, ""No one dared do that against us last season. Brown killed them all off."

Nobody is going to "kill them off" this year. This has already become apparent, as have two generalizations which, though generalizations, are inescapably, specifically true.

1. UNC is not as good as it is supposed to be.
2. Billy Cunningham is.

The future will prove this. (Although in the first case I hope I'm wrong). And that future starts tonight against a team, which along with Duke, NYU, and Kentucky has to be called the toughest on the schedule.

Indiana has these two guys who were billed golden gods when they came to the varsity last year, and the fact they are twins didn't hurt the publicity in the least.

Well, Billy went up there in mid-December 1962 and wasted these guys, outscoring and outrebounding them both put together (28-21, 16-13), and their image was considerably tarnished.

They are back this year, and this time they seem to be ready to challenge the Kid. Their names are Tom and Dick VanArsdale, and they will come to Charlotte fresh from 34 and 42 points, respectively, against Notre Dame, which not so incidentally has its best team since the Tom Hawkins' days.

What Smith is planning to do against these guys is not certain. I suggested a hatchet, but he is considering some sort of new defense, much less violent. Probably cyanide.

Whatever the case, the cards are on the table. Indiana, Kentucky, then three more before Notre Dame, Wake Forest and Duke. It's a longer road than we thought to Durham.

Promising Season Opens For Matmen

By BILL LET

This will be the initial match of a testing season for the program's "Youth Movement." Last year the team compiled a 2-10 record, but had 11 seniors graduated from the previous year's squad, and inexperienced men had to bear the load.

As a result, there are ten returning lettermen, largely battle-scarred juniors, plus several grapplers up from the freshmen. The return of other upper-classmen for various reasons also helps the cause.

Coach Sam Barnes remarked on the coming season, "We're bound to be better than last year. We've got five lettermen on the second string.

We got back Dick Blackmon, who was supposed to be last year's captain, Glen Glazer, senior letterman, Russel Simmons who was out due to an operation, and Dick Sargent who was out with an injury. Blackmon was also second in the ACC in 1961 in the 147-pound class.

In the opening meet, Barnes is going with sophomore Paul Weston in the 123 class, juniors Ken Furr and Russel Simmons at 130 and 137 respectively. Soph Roy Hagarty at 147, and Bill Woodall, junior at 157.

Junior Elliott Dworin—167, Soph Steve Lister—177, and Jerry Cabe, a senior heavyweight, round out the starters. Cabe is this year's captain and finished second in ACC competition last year in the heavyweight division.

Both he and Lister are being counted on a great deal this year, but will have to miss a couple of matches because of the football Gator Bowl bid.

Commenting on the freshman team, Barnes had this to say, "we have some outstanding freshmen and I think we'll have a good team. We'll juggle the line-up a lot because our second team is as good as our first. The boys have looked good and worked hard and I think we have a lot of talent."

Starting tonight will be Chuck Stedman, 130, a high school champion from Burlington. Jim Goodwin, 130, from Apex, attended Mercensburg Academy and placed fourth in the Lehigh Tournament. Dick Garrison of Mount Airy is at 137, and Lane Verlanden, 147, was an outstanding wrestler at Baylor,

Indiana VanArsdales At Charlotte Tonite

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina has had it as far as 1963 ACC basketball goes.

The Tar Heels, who have been an early disappointment in splitting two conference games with South Carolina (92-87) and Clemson (66-64, two ot), meet five straight non-league opponents between tonight and the end of the year. And then they take on Notre Dame Jan. 4 in Greensboro before playing another ACC game.

Indiana, a team UNC has failed to beat in two previous games, figures to be a tough hurdle again tonight at 9:30 after Davidson, possibly the South's finest team, and St. Joseph's of Philadelphia meet in the opener (7:30).

Indiana is the first of Carolina's two straight toughest non-ACC second Monday night against Kentucky at Lexington's Memorial Coliseum.

The Hoosiers have demonstrated a strong scoring punch in their two victories this season, 80-65 over Southern Illinois and 108-102 over Notre Dame Wednesday night.

Their two big guns are alike in more ways than ability to produce points. They are both forwards, they are both 6-5 and they are both Dutchmen from the basketball-rich town of Indianapolis.

They are the VanArsdale twins, Tom and Dick, and they already have shown marked improvement from last year when they followed the blaring trumpets to 12 point soph averages.

In the Southern Illinois victory, the twins scored 33 (Tom led with 18), but the Notre Dame game may have been a more accurate account. In that one, Dick had 42, Tom 34 for 76 total.

Indiana becomes stronger up front when you look at the center position and the relief for it. Starting this evening will probably be Larry Cooper (6-7) who tallied 24 in the first game. He is a transfer from Hutchinson (Kan.) J.C.

Cooper got the job when erstwhile starter Ron Peyser (6-8) hurt his knee in pre-season practice. Another man Coach Branch McCracken can use is Jim McGlocklin (6-5) who was first string pivotman much of last season.

But McGlocklin, despite 12 points at center in the opener, has now been switched to guard (where the scoring has been weak) and he got 15 at that position against Notre Dame.

Steve Redenbaugh (6-2), veteran guard, and Al Harden (5-10) operate in the backcourt when McGlocklin is not there, but they do not help the Indiana scoring situation substantially. Gary Grieger (6-4) and Max Walker (6-2) are the top replacements.

Last year, McCracken could manage only a 9-5 conference mark and 13-11 overall (90-76 over UNC) despite the Big Ten's number two and three scorers Jimmy Rayl and Tom Bolyard.

But the run-and-shoot style the old master teaches to such perfection appears to have continued this season from the 1962-63 effort when the Hoosiers scored 90.4 points a game. The fact that they also gave up 89.4 a game never bothers McCracken.

UNC is expected to start with the same five which began the Clemson game, Billy Cunningham, who last year had his first big game against this Indiana club, is averaging 27 and will play center. The forwards will be Ray Respess (6-4) and Bob Bennett (6-8) who are expected to draw the defensive assignments on the VanArsdales.

The two have scored 26 and 15 points, respectively, in the two games, with Respess having hit 22 against South Carolina. They will need, and get, help on the VanArsdales from Bryan McSweeney (6-5).

At guards are the two senior co-captains, Mike Cooke and Charlie Shaffer who have each had a good and a bad game. Cooke scored 20 in the SC clash but ran into foul trouble at Clemson where he was three for 11 from the floor and seven points. Shaffer, got 14 against Clemson but had a very poor floor night in the opener.

Swimmers Top Princeton By 54-41

PRINCETON, N. J. — North Carolina's swimming team splashed to its second stunning upset in as many days here Friday nigth with a 54-41 victory over Princeton.

Coach Pat Earey's mermen rode to the victory on eight wins in the individual events to only three for the aquatic Tigers. UNC came from behind with five events to go and won four of the remaining races.

After Jed Graff's victory over Thompson Mann in the backstroke, gave Princeton a 36-34 lead, Carolina took the last three events to come away with the win.

John Sheldin and Mike Bissell captured one-two in the 500 freestyle, Rick Forum took the breaststroke, and UNC's 400 free relay team, with Mann niping Graff at the wire, sewed it up for the Tar Heels. Sheldon and Harrison Merrell were double winners in the Blue Dolphins' big win.

Senator Selling Insurance

Title Misuse Not Intended

By GARY BLANCHARD

Republican State Senator Charles Strong, a possible candidate for his party's gubernatorial or congressional nomination next year, is selling student life insurance through the mail using his official title of "Senator."

However, Strong last night denied that such use of his title was intended to exploit his official position.

"If it appears that this is being interpreted that way, or is a wrong use of my designation, I would certainly be the first one to take whatever steps are necessary to correct thet situation," he said.

Strong, a Greensboro minister who has resigned his pulpit effective February 1 in order to campaign for Congress or the governorship, said he used his title to eliminate confusion between him and another Charles Strong in Greensboro.

"I've had a continuous problem of mail getting mixed up," the Guilford County legislator said.

He added: "The (insurance) letter is a personal letter from me. It does not carry any letterhead or anything like that. It's a personal letter from me. I did not feel that this was in any way wrong."

Asked about the legality of such use of an official title, State Insurance Commissioner Edwin Lanier said he preferred to withhold comment until he returns to his office Monday and has an opportunity to check the matter thoroughly.

A local life insurance agent, however, said the use of an official title in connection with a strictly business matter could cause some people to think the insurance plan is in some way officially approved or endorsed by the State. But, the agent added, there is no reason to doubt the worth of the insurance or the "mail approach."

The insurance materials apparently are being mailed to the parents of all students here at UNC. One set was received by a student here who lists his campus and home address as identical in the easily-available Student Directory.

The envelope containing the material carries a mass-mailing postmark of "Reading, Pa.," home office of the Valley Forge Life Insurance Company, which is identified as offering the plan and which Strong apparently represents.

THESE ARE the insurance materials apparently being mailed to parents of all UNC students, under the name of "Senator Charles W. Strong." Number one is part of two brochures describing the student insurance plan; second is part of envelope showing return address; third is self-addressed application form; fourth is part of letter describing the plan. Picture at left is identified as "Senator Charles W. Strong."

Printed in the upper left-hand corner of the envelope are the words, "A Personal Message from Senator Charles Strong, Box 10347, Greensboro, N. C."

The envelope contains two brochures describing the plan, complete with application blanks and a "Senator Charles W. Strong" return address as before.

Accompanying the brochures is an apparently mass-produced letter signed by Strong and carrying a photograph of him.

The letter is headed, "A personal message for parents of students." It describes the plan, saying "Read it carefully and I am sure you will be as enthusiastic about it as I am."

Earlier this year another incident occurred concerning student life insurance here. A parent wrote Dean of Men William G. Long asking if a certain student life insurance plan was endorsed by the University. The company's literature said "For students of University of North Carolina."

Long replied that the University endorses no student life insurance plan of any nature. He then wrote the company concerned and requested that the wording be changed to remove the implication of University endorsement. The company conferred with Long and indicated it would change the wording.

'That Kind Of Man'

A Tribute To Archibald Henderson

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

He was that kind of a man.

"Archibald Henderson was one of the most affable and social men I have ever known. He was characterized by a loud and wavy laugh . . . he was quite polished and a gentleman in every way."

Former UNC Chancellor Robert B. House is one of many people who remembers Archibald Henderson, who died Friday after a long illness.

Henderson, 86, was a noted educator, historian, critic, and mathematician. He was also the official biographer of George Bernard Shaw. He was on the UNC faculty 49 years prior to his retirement in 1948.

"Back in the early days when most of the faculty hadn't had a chance to do much traveling, all thought Archie was a wonder because he was so well traveled and so versed on what was going on," House remembers.

"He had an extremely active and lively mind," House said. "He was very outgoing and was characterized by his loud and wavy laugh."

The Salisbury native graduated from the University in 1898. He was a scholar in the Renaissance sense, with interests which embraced the arts and sciences.

As a scientist, he taught and wrote in the field of mathematics for half a century.

"He did not drive a car," House said. "He was characterized by his constant walking to and from campus. When he wasn't able to walk, he used a taxi cab. He was probably the oldest and most consistent patron of the Chapel Hill taxis that we have ever had."

House also remembers Henderson as being quite fond of sports. "He used to go quail hunting quite often."

House said that Henderson was quite a family man, too.

"He had his regular office hours," House said, "then he would go home, take a nap, and take some time to play with his children.

He would also work on his books at night," House said. "He wrote all of them in long-hand and the printers set the type directly from the long-hand copy.."

Louis Graves, founder of the Chapel Hill Weekly, has known Henderson longer than anyone else living in Chapel Hill.

"Archie became known to me very quickly," Graves said. "Nearly everyone around took notice of him when he came here as a freshman. He was very attractive and humorous."

Graves was 11 years old when Henderson came to Chapel Hill. Later Henderson taught Graves in his mathematics class. They became close friends and neighbors in later life.

"I used to play tennis with

him," Graves said, "Archie was also the best Master of Ceremonies that I have ever seen. His wit really came through but he could also make a scholarly speech."

Another intimate associate of Henderson's was mathematics professor John Lasley, who shared an office with Henderson for some 20 years.

"During that period, I never saw him come to the office out of sorts. He was always on the up and up.

"He had the finest vocabularly of any man I have ever seen, but he could use little words as well. One thing I remember was that he could spell any word you ask him. I once asked him the ten most misspelled words, and he spelled them all correctly."

Lasley said that in the classroom, Henderson was as magnetic as he was out of class.

"He could really cover the blackboard," Lasley said. "He looked like a great big spider, the way he went from one side of the board to the other."

Lasley said that Henderson had one of the most dominant personalities of anyone he had ever come in contact with.

"He was a fine Christian gentleman and meant as much in my life than any other man. He was a real inspiration.

"He was that kind of a man."

World Briefs

Xmas Visits Nixed By West Berlin

BERLIN (UPI) — Communist conditions unacceptable to the West Saturday dashed hopes of West Berliners getting through the Communist wall into East Berlin for Christmas visits with relatives and friends.

West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt rejected the terms attached to East Germany's offer to permit passage to the Communist sector for the first time since the anti-refugee wall was erected Aug. 13, 1961.

Brandt said in a television speech the Reds were trying to use the issue of Christmas passes for political ends that could pose a threat to the city. He said the West Berlin government could not allow that.

Russia Keeping Eye On China Safari

MOSCOW (UPI) — Russia was reported keeping a wary eye today on preparations for a Red Chinese safari to Africa, an area in which rival Red factions are vying for power.

Red China's Premier Chou En-lai and Foreign Minister Chen Yi will begin an African tour in Cairo next week.

President Johnson To Address UN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Johnson announced today he will address the United Nations in New York on Dec. 17.

Johnson told a previously unannounced news conference in his office that he would make a brief appearance at the U.N. General Assembly to stress the nation's unity and the government's continuity since the assassination of the late President John F. Kennedy.

More Burnings In Saigon

SAIGON, South Viet Nam — (UPI)—A 20-year-old Vietnamese man who attempted to burn himself to death in a city park Friday was reported in critical condition at a Saigon hospital today.

The Viet Nam press agency said he set fire to himself near the presidential palace, but the flames were put out and he was rushed to a hospital by police.

The agency added that he left four letters near the attempted immolation scene in which he explained that he was going to take his life "because he was repudiated by his father."

Gilmore Speaks

A student commitment to the cause of "world-wide understanding as sought by the late President Kennedy" was urged by Tom Gilmore in an address here Thursday night.

Gilmore, State Young Democratic Club president-elect, spoke in Gerrard Hall to the Carolina YDC.

He said one means to carry out the idea of understanding is for students to "go out of the way to meet visiting foreign students."

"Many exchange students," he said, "leave the United States with anti-American feelings because of a poor reception."

Gilmore, a resident of Guilford County, outlined the importance of next year as an election year. "The reason for the complete Republican victory in Guilford County last year," he noted, "was that the Democratic Party and its leaders lost contact with the voters."

Stressing the importance of supporting the party now, Gilmore stated, "this mistake should not happen again."

Gilmore stated that he was "personally violently opposed to the Speaker Ban Law."

He said the so-called Gag Law does nothing but "defeat what it was trying to accomplish. If you prohibit these speakers, students will go elsewhere to learn more about communism."

"I feel that students are mature enough to have good judgment; to know that the democratic system is by far superior."

In discussing the processing of the bill, Gilmore stated that it was "hastily enacted by legislators who thought they were doing right."

Gilmore also is opposed to the Little Federal Plan. He stated, "I am personally against it, coming from Guilford County. I think it is a strong injustice to the state."

The UNC chapter adopted a resolution urging the State's representatives in Congress to support the pending Civil Rights legislation.

Council Puts Two Students On Probation

A freshman was placed on two semesters probation for cheating and four other students were implicated in the theft of a telephone in Men's Council trials Thursday night.

The freshman pleaded guilty to the cheating charge, telling the Council he had panicked on the quiz and looked on another boy's paper.

The teacher noticed similarities on the papers of the two boys and confronted them with this information. The defendant then admitted his guilt and turned himself in.

In the telephone theft, one boy ripped a telephone off a wall in a girls' dormitory. He then joined three friends who were charged by the Attorney General as accomplices after the fact of the theft.

The three boys told the Council they had intended to see that the telephone was returned. But when the four boys were confronted by a campus policeman, they did not tell him of the theft.

The telephone was returned the next day anonymously.

The boy who originally took the phone pleaded guilty and was placed on two semesters definite probation.

The other three pleaded not guilty, but were found guilty because of the incident with the policeman. They all received official reprimand.

One of these boys, however, was already on a probation sentence from the Council for an earlier offense. Under the rules of probation, a second conviction for any Honor or Campus Code offense results in automatic suspension for one semester. The boy was thus suspended.

Parties Meet

The Student and the University Parties will hold elections for their leadership positions within the next two weeks.

The Student Party will meet on Tuesday at 7 p.m. in 105 Garner Hall. On the agenda will be announcements of the party elections to be held at the following meeting.

The University Party will meet Tuesday, 8 p.m., in Gerrard Hall, at which time a new party chairman will be elected to succeed Mike Chanin.

Cunningham Nets 29 Points In Upset

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

CHARLOTTE—All of the Charlotte Coliseum (11,639) held a collective breath here last night when Billy Cunningham crunched to the floor, his knee throbbing in pain. But the magnificient one got up off the floor with 16 minutes left and led UNC to a strong 77-70 victory over a heavily-favored Indiana team.

Up on a slim five-point lead (48-43), Carolina came on to put it away as the fantastic Cunningham re-entered the game and scored eight points in a twelve-straight string for the Tar Heels.

Mike Cooke, a fine ball-handler last night, added two baskets in the drive, and UNC pulled away to a 58-43 margin—a margin that killed Indiana.

The fabled VanArsdale twins, two look-alikes whose forte is hatchet play off the boards, brought the Hoosiers back to within eight with only 3:45 left, but the big push which The Kid led after his injury was too much of an impetus for Indiana to overcome.

The score was 70-56 Carolina, when Tom VanArsdale hit a jumper and two free throws and Steve Redenbaugh converted a fast break for six straight which cut the UNC margin to 70-62.

But Carolina's fine rookie, Bob Bennett, swished two foul shots and Mike Cooke one around a lay-up by Dick VanArsdale to put the lead back to nine with 1:15. And that was it, for Indiana's final drive led by Dick VanArsdale, was too little and too late.

Cunningham, beaten and battered all evening by at least three different men, plus a collapsing zone defense, devised especially for him, had another of the fabulous evenings which are expected of him.

Billy C was 11 for 23 from the floor and a surprising seven of eight from the line for a game-leading 29 points. He was credited with 10 rebounds.

Cooke and Charlie Shaffer forgot they were supposed to be erratic guards, and both came through with fine floor games plus 14 and 13 points, respectively.

Marchers Mail Letters

Some 50 persons, including 15 whites, staged a "write-in" and sidewalk march in downtown Carrboro and Chapel Hill Saturday afternoon. No incidents or arrests were reported.

The march, sponsored by two local integration groups, urged the immediate passage of the Civil Rights bill now deadlocked in the House Rules Committee.

Individual letters supporting the controversial bill were carried in a sidewalk demonstration from the First Baptist Church on Roberson St. to the Carrboro Post Office. Some were mailed in Carrboro while the rest were deposited in the Chapel Hill Post Office on E. Franklin St.

The letters were apparently addressed to North Carolina Senators Sam Ervin and B. Everett Jordan and members of the House Rules Committee.

This was the Town's first racial demonstration since the Sept. 20 Memorial March for the four children killed in a Birmingham, Ala., church bombing. It was the first such protest conducted in Carrboro.

"Letters for Freedom" was sponsored by the local chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and Citizens United for Racial Equality and Dignity (CURED).

Encounter Will Discuss Frats

The merits and demerits of fraternities will come under close scrutiny Monday night on WUNC - TV's "Encounter," as the pros and cons are discussed by a panel of students and a faculty member.

Dr. John Clayton, associate professor of radio, television and motion pictures, and moderator of the weekly panel discussion show, said Dr. Walter Spearman, professor in the School of Journalism, and Tom Davis, graduate divinity student at Duke University and former YMCA chaplain here, have agreed to appear on the show.

Two students have yet to confirm whether they will appear. Both went home for the weekend and were unavailable for comment.

Dr. Clayton said the idea for the discussion of fraternities came to him from a student, and said he would be glad to get other ideas from students.

"Encounter" is designed to reveal the "Minds, Manners and Morals" of students, and to determine why they act as they do. Previous discussions have been on folk music and why students like it, the relations of students with the law and the function of a newspaper in a college community.

Davidson Rolls To 88-77 Win Over St. Jo

By MAT FRIEDMAN

CHARLOTTE — The Davidson Wildcats did something St. Joseph could not do, take the good shot, and rolled to an 88-77 victory here last night.

The high-flying sharp-shooting Wildcats hit 60.8 per cent from the floor against 33.7 per cent for the Hawks, and that was the story right there. High scorer for the winners, who now have taken three of three, was the heralded Fred Hetzel, who collected 25 points on eight of eleven field goal tries, most from close to the basket.

A tight but sloppy game most of the way, it was finally a tenacious Davidson defense which forced the Hawks to take many bad shots and broke the contest open with about eight minutes to play.

Jim Boyle and Steve Courtin, with 28 and 22 points respectively, led the Hawks scoring, but when they stopped getting the shots there was no one to take up the slack. Courtin was the only Hawk to hit with any consistency from the outside and for much of the game was solely responsible for keeping his team in the contest.

Don Davidson hit 19 for the Wildcats, many of them key baskets in the second half when he frequently broke loose under the basket. Little Barry Teague was a playmaker-supreme all evening, although he tallied only eight. But it was Dick Snyder with 11 who drew the plaudits from Davidson coach Lefty Drisell. "Hetzel took a little rest tonight," said Drisell and Snyder did a very good job on defense. He was the best defensive player of the game.

ALL ABOARD!

A representative from Seaboard Railroad will be on Campus Tuesday from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. to sell tickets for the trip to Jacksonville. The round trip fare is $26.50. The train will leave Raleigh about 9 p.m. Thursday or Friday Dec. 26 or 27. Several times are open for the return trip.

The ticket sales will be in the lobby of Woollen Gym.

This One Should Be Good–Don't Miss It

Philip Foisie, foreign news editor of the Washington Post, will speak on campus Monday night in what could be one of the most rewarding programs so far this year. Foisie, who will speak on "Unexplored Frontiers in Journalism" at eight o'clock in the basement of Peabody Hall, brings to his subject a rich background of experience as a journalist in this country and abroad.

He was employed by the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration in Shanghai for a year, and then served as city editor of the China Press in that city. In this country he has worked on the San Francisco Chronicle, the Press Democrat of Santa Rosa, Cal., the Louisville Courier-Journal, and in 1955 joined the Washington Post.

Foisie has traveled extensively in China, Japan and all of Southeast Asia as well as Europe and North Africa, and should provide some insights into the reactions of the new President, and other vital matters.

After Mr. Foisie's talk there will be a seminar type discussion for all those interested. We heartily recommend your participation.

John Carswell Meets The Press

The famous neuroses of the owner of The Colonial Drugstore in Chapel Hill were demonstrated again yesterday when he told a Daily Tar Heel reporter to leave the store.

Was the reporter being obnoxious in any way?

No.

Was the reporter there for a valid purpose?

Yes.

The reporter had gone in to see if the owner, John Carswell, or anyone else in the store cared to make any comments on the civil rights demonstration partially aimed at Carswell's segregationist policies.

It might interest Mr. Carswell to know that the policy of this paper in covering news is to be sure that all parties to any controversy have an equal opportunity to be represented in our coverage of that controversy.

But then, such phrases as "equal opportunity" apparently don't make much sense to Mr. Carswell, anyway, so perhaps the ejection, if rude and ridiculous, is at least understandable.

The Age Of The Psuedo-Event

By ROBERT EBERT
Editor, The Daily Illini

We live in the age of the pseudo-event.

It no longer matters whether anyone heard the tree fall in the forest. What matters is whether or not the fall of the tree was documented on television.

The vast majority of Americans are no longer capable of believing something thing on their own authority. Indoctrinated since childhood by boxtop offers of a "guaranteed genuine official" world, they seek desperately for Authority—and find it everywhere but in themselves.

A commonplace example. Find me, if you will, a can of baked beans that does not carry the instruction, "Heat and Serve." Why do the American consumers require this instruction? Because a good many of them do not have the nerve to heat and serve those baked beans without official approval. Common sense is no longer a guide.

Thus it is that things no longer happen of themselves. They happen only after a sufficient portion of the public has been told they happened. And then only if the public senses that it was "officially" all right that they happened.

I would suggest, for example, that the Goldwater "boom" of today is not a particle stronger than the same boom a year ago. What is significant is that people have now been told that it exists. Likewise, the civil rights revolution did not exist for middle class white Americans until they had been told about it. Never mind that they could see it all about them, everywhere, every day. They had to be told. And I believe that, in the minds of these same people, the same revolution could again cease to exist if the establishment were to tell them so. The facts seen by the self are nothing compared to the facts reported in Time magazine, a notable spokesman for officialdom.

Another example. The use of news photographs, long a means to document a fact, has been discontinued on the Huntley-Brinkley program. An artist has been employed, instead, to do sketches of events. By almost the same token, the news itself on this program has been replaced by the employment of Huntley and Brinkley, who appear to bring the news into being, full-blown from their brows, simply by deigning to acknowledge it.

Despite the public's willingness to believe what is "officially" stated, it still has some hesitation on the really important things. Millions of Americans are not willing to wake up in the morning and be told who is the new President. They must sit up all night in front of their television watching the electric lights flash behind Walter Cronkite. Apparently they do not realize that the electric lights, and Cronkite, are present only to make the event "official." Neither has anything to do with reporting the news.

You don't believe me? Look around you at the next Illinois home game and see how many people who are sitting in Memorial Stadium are, nevertheless, holding transistor radios to their ears so that Larry Stewart can TELL them what is going on before their very eyes. Or remember, if you will, how many Americans watched the solar eclipse on television when the real thing was going on in the heavens right outside their doors.

Or take another example. Is it morally correct to sell wheat to Russia? Three months ago, public opinion said no. Today, public opinion says yes. And yet I would bet you that no one has changed his mind on this question—if, indeed, anyone could really say on his own authority whether the sale was right or wrong. We "go along." As a nation, we're great at that. Every four years we choose who to go along with.

Now, then. What about this business of classroom television?

A spokesman on this campus said that within 25 years EVERY freshman and sophomore level course at the Nniversity would be taught on television.

That's right. Every one.

And would this be such a bad thing? There are some, you know, who argue that an instructor is more "believable" on television than in person. Raises fewer doubts in the student mind. Seems to have more authority behind him.

But still, a question remains.

Does a classroom lecture really happen if it is on television? Do an instructor and his students actually share an experience that has been made "real" by kinescope?

Does the tree in the forest really fall, if nobody hears it? But what if it were an imaginary tree, and yet everyone heard it? Did it, then, fall?

"It's The Christmas Season — Time To Hang Up The Legislation"

The New Campus Team

By DON CURTIS

About this time of the year it seems to be in high fashion for all writers of any note at all to list their selections for various all-star teams. Certainly not wanting to be left out of that all-knowing group of individuals who deem themselves so capable to make all star choices, we too have selected our own all star team. It is after very careful consideration that we proudly announce our 1963 All-Campus team.

Left End: Pat Cusick — Despite the fact that Pat has fumbled a few passes here and there, we feel Pat throws a lot

Review

By STEVE DENNIS

New Horizons in Education; The Benefits of Study Abroad, Pan American Airways, 1961, $2.

The approach of another winter in Chapel Hill marks a good time for students interested in studying abroad to begin making plans and checking into the many institutions which exist for this purpose.

Pan American Airways, interested in a possible marriage between themselves (specifically seats on their planes) and such students, has recently published a very helpful little book on the subject. New Horizons in Education can be valuable in many ways as a basic reference tool in a shrinking world.

Over one hundred seventy-five institutions are described. These universities are in almost every country in the free world. The only serious omissions are for Great Britian, but the text explains these schools were left out because of their unusually long waiting lists of American students. A few British schools are included, however they are the lesser known ones.

Under the description of each university, such basic matters as the size of its enrollment, whether it is co-educational, the dates of its academic term, courses of study which it offers, summer sessions, fees, entrance requirements, the language of instruction, room and board (usually private), average living expenses, student life, and the transfer of credits back to an American school are considered.

There are short introductory essays on the values of study and travel abroad by Senator Fulbright, Dr. James B. Conant, the president of Smith College, the president of the Institute of International Education, and the president of Pan American Airways. These stress individual considerations and possible drawbacks resulting from faulty preparation for study abroad as well as benefits from such an experience.

Left Guard: Gary Blanchard and David Ethridge—These two hard-hitting stars have been guarding the left all year. Occasionally they go downfield to intercept a pass or cover a punt, and very often they've been known to put the hard rush on some of the running backs—even throwing a few for some long losses. Once in a while, when nobody else will carry the ball, Dave or Gary will. Dave is the team's kicking specialist despite the fact that he's failed to convert on several occasions this year.

Center: Kellis Parker—This is a unanimous choice since Kellis has been in the center of a lot of controversy for over three years now.

Right Guard: Arthur Hays — Don't let his size fool you, pound for pound this guy is tough. Arthur has put a stop to a number of well-planned plays in the past couple of years. He's a senior, and experience counts in this game.

Right Tackle: Sam Himes — Sam has thrown some hard blocks on certain left-wing legislation, and, despite the fact that he has given up several scores, Sam deserves a starting position. Like any tackle, Sam has received his share of lumps and bruises from being knocked around on certain plays.

Split Right End: Hubert Hawkins—Very strong on that right flank is another unanimous choice. As captain of the Di-Phi team, hustling Hub has received good support from his entire team.

Quarterback: Mike Lawler — Yes, Mike's calling the shots this year, and although occasionally he's had a few mix-ups in the backfield resulting in a fumble or two, he's run the show fairly well. Once or twice he's had to punt out of trouble, and a couple of times he's had plays sent in to him from the coaches.

Running Back: Bob Spearman—The fans keep yelling for Bob to switch to quarterback next year, but if Bob decides to tie the knot with Barbara before the election, the game could well be over, and Bob might choose to retire and turn to other sports. For right now, however, Bob is definitely a hard running back.

Way Back: Joel Fleishmann —Yes, way back in the picture is our own ambassador from Raleigh, Joel Fleishmann. Joel earns this all-star spot for helping to call the signals and run the show.

Similar to NCAA football rules, many students choose to sit out a year and take five years to get in their four years of playing time. It should be pointed out that Jim Clotfelder, last year's unanimous Assback, is sitting out a year. This year of practice just might make Jim an even stronger contender next year.

Every team also has a few red-shirts. We have selected two of the best in the business—Larry Phelps and John Salter. When Salter returns to action, he'll more than likely return to his former position of lonesome left end.

Our Cherleader selections for this year are Hank Patterson, John Randle, and Roger Foushee. Although they'd like to get back into the action, being grad students about all they have time to do is cheer from the sidelines.

Looking back over the team, it's noticed that there are only ten selections on our first team. Oh well, you pick the eleventh.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Lapses In Logic

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I trust that the elementary lapses in logic appearing in Sam Himes' December 5 letter defending fraternity discrimination escaped no alert reader. Himes woefully tries to justify racial discrimination in fraternities by claiming that College Entrance Examinations discriminate also. It is incomprehensible to me that the distinction between the fair, elaborate selection process of the College Boards and the flagrant discrimination on the basis of race practiced by some fraternities can be so subtle as to have escaped Mr. Himes.

Himes suggests, further, that the very meaning of the word "fraternity" might be destroyed if some of the boys in some of the houses had to practice racial tolerance. He fails to explain whxy only SOME of the brotherhoods are so fragile in this respect, while others have been able to eliminate discriminatory clauses with little apparent effect.

As a member of the same national fraternity as Mr. Himes, I urge him to stop lauding the decadent aspects of the cherished ritual, and begin working for the changes necessary to make the fraternity system a progressive, not divisive, influence on college campuses.

Interested?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Many students have been appalled at the noisy clamor from self-styled liberals protesting the "Speaker Ban" law. Not only have the newspapers been filled with unbecoming and repetitious rantings and ravings against the law from our supposed educational leaders, but many outstanding patriotic civic leaders have been reviled and persecuted from many quarters.

In order to correct, in a small way, the harm done by these childish insults to our fine leading citizens, many right-thinking students have formed the Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers. The Committee's head is a much-decorated veteran, ex-Private F. C. Wintergreen. Each week, the Committee will publish an official List of those who deserve to be cited and honored for having best put to use the virtues of Morality, Education, Reason, Diligence, and Energy in the uphill fight against godless, atheistic Communism, who see the many devious forms it takes in its masterfully deceitful efforts to destroy our American Way of Life. This list will be selected by a democratic vote of the Committee members. (The organizers reserve the right to establish qualifications for membership.)

More news of our activities will follow.

GENEVA—Gunnar Lange, Sweden's minister of commerce and chairman of the European Free Trade Association, endorsing the tariff-reducing plan proposed by the late President Kennedy:

"How appropriate that this great plan was named after the late President, when he was still with us. And what an obligation it is to us today to make it a success worthy of his great name."

* * *

CARACAS, Venezuela — U.S. Army Col. James K. Chenaut after his release unharmed by pro-Castro terrorists who kidnapped him:

"I was urged to read books on communism, some of them printed in Czechoslavkia, but I rejected these. At one point my captors hammered away at me continuously on the virtues of communism."

* * *

AUSTIN, Tex. — Texas Gov. John B. Connally leaving Parkland Hospital where he was treated for wounds received when the same gunman killed President Kennedy:

"I owe my life to you at Parkland. I'm sorry to have met you under these circumstances."

* * *

WASHINGTON—Speaker of the House John W. McCormack praising Mrs. John F. Kennedy during a memorial tribute to the late President:

"She is a patrician capable of grace under pressure unequalled in our times."

Impact Of President Kennedy's Death On The 1964 Gubernatorial Campaign

(From The Chapel Hill Weekly)

The full impact of President Kennedy's death on North Carolina's 1964 Gubernatorial campaign cannot yet be weighed with anything other than speculation. It might remain largely imponderable after the campaign has run its course, since reading the trial balance on what finally tips a vote one way or another is still not an exact science.

But it is not exactly wild speculation to say that the candidate whose Gubernatorial chances have suffered most from the President's death is I. Beverly Lake.

The Kennedy administration would have been a major target for the Lake attack. Now that target no longer exists.

Another major Lake target would have been Governor Terry Sanford, and the Governor will still collect some random shots. But the thing that made Sanford such an inviting target for Lake was his close ties with the Kennedy administration. The Sanford bullseye has become considerably smaller.

If those shots in Dallas had never been fired, Dr. Lake would have ranted long and loud about Big Government and invasion of States' Rights. It is conceivable that he will still take this line of attack. If he does, his attack will certainly be softer and more cautious—in other words, blunted from the outset.

With the new President still settling into office, the mood of the country next spring can be expected to be one of patience, tolerance and sympathetic understanding. There will be continued pressure for civil rights legislation, but the chance of another racial upheaval such as last summer's will be remote. The only climate in which Dr. Lake's candidacy can thrive is one of racial turmoil.

These radical changes brought about by the President's death are bound to have shaken Dr. Lake's projected platform badly, if they didn't leave it in splinters. But the heaviest damage to his candidacy is much more profound and one that can't be repaired.

Dr. Lake's campaign in 1960 was one that fed on bitterness and hate and fear. His appeal was largely to those who had become embittered because of integration, who had come to hate the Supreme Court for ruling integration and the Federal Government for enforcing it, and who feared progress and change. They feared progress and change not only in racial matters but in all things.

There are reliable indications that we have now recognized these fears and hatreds in whatever area of the political spectrum they fester; we know them for what they are and the terrible ends to which they can lead, and we are finally done with them.

Dr. Lake can try to present himself as a different candidate in 1964, and that would seem to be the better part of wisdom. But this would require a campaign aimed primarily at convincing the voters of what he is not rather than what he is. It isn't worth the effort.

Chicago Offers Law Grant

Want to go to Law School? At the University of Chicago? Then see Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey before Feb. 1.

UNC nominates one senior each year for the National Honor Scholarship to Chicago.

No application form is necessary. Dean Cathey asks any student who would like to be considered to express their interest to him.

The scholarship pays the $1,500 tuition for the first year and is renewable for the second and third years.

The Chicago Law School stresses law in its historical and sociological context in the catalogue. There are also extensive courses on law and economics.

There are 140 students in each class. After the first year the student has a choice of seminars and study plans.

The school prefers a 3.3 average or better for admission and a score of 550 or better (75th percentile) on the Law School Admission Test.

The average score on this test for this year's freshman class at Chicago is 631, or the 92nd percentile.

1. Now that I'm a senior I have to start thinking about my future. Will you marry me?

Will you be able to give me all the things I crave—like pizza pie and chow mein?

2. I've lined up a terrific job. There's a choice of training programs, good starting salary, challenging work, and the chance to move up. That's Equitable.

I agree—but what's the company's name?

3. Equitable—it's Equitable.

It certainly is. It's also fair, square, and just. But I would still like to know the name of the company.

4. We're not communicating. I keep telling you it's Equitable—and you keep asking what's the name.

I keep agreeing your job sounds good. But you stubbornly refuse to tell me who you're going to work for.

5. Can it be you never listen to my words? Is it possible that what I thought was a real relationship was but a romantic fantasy?

Is it conceivable that what I took to be a solid foundation was just a house of cards? That what I thought was a bright flame was merely an emotional flicker?

6. I'd hate to lose you, but at least I'll still have my job with Equitable—The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States.

Jacocks' Prints On Display

American and Old Master prints from the extensive collection of Dr. W. P. Jacocks will be exhibited at the Ackland Art Center this week through January 5.

Etchings, engravings, woodcuts and lithographs, accumulated by Dr. Jacocks over a period of almost 30 years, are included in the exhibit.

Among the major artists represented in this exhibition from his collection of Old Masters are: Lucas Cranach the Elder, Rembrandt, Albrecht Duerer, Hans Beham, Ugo da Carpi and the School of Andrea Mantegna.

When he presented his two-phased collection to the University of North Carolina it was Dr. Jacocks' desire that the prints be used for teaching purposes. His entire collection of prints is now in the Ackland.

The museum is open to the public Tuesdays through Fridays from 2 to 5 p.m. and 8 to 10 p.m.; Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sundays, 2 to 5 p.m. Closed Mondays.

Let Chapel Hill's Big Friendly Bookshop Add Joy To Your Christmas Season !

The Intimate Bookshop

119 E. Franklin St. Open Till 10 p.m.

Five Cent Christmas Cards

For years the Intimate has carried only 5c Christmas cards. Come see them. You'll be surprised what nice cards a nickel will still buy.

Bargain Books

At the Intimate there are shelves and shelves of good books priced at about half the original sales price. Make no mistake, these are shiny new copies, and we'll gift-wrap them at no extra charge.

Children's Books

At the Intimate, the stock of junior books is larger than the complete stock at many book stores. They are colorful, delightful — and many are in the low price range.

Gift Editions

At the Intimate, extra nice books, designed for Christmas giving, range from the dollar editions from the Peter Pauper Press, right on up to very beautiful, and costly, titles. If there's someone on your list that you really want to impress, try the Intimate!

Stocking Stuffers

This year, we've made a special effort to stock small but handsome books — the sort that top off a Christmas stocking better than anything else in the world. We don't know what stocking concerns you, but whether it is a sheer silk number, or a well-worn little thing no bigger than that, we have the book to fit it.

On The Way To Fine Record
Carolina Broke Fine Records

By JOHN MONTAGUE

It was a record-breaking year in Tar Heel football. On October 19, 45,500 fans jammed Kenan Stadium to see North Carolina battle N. C. State. This set a new UNC attendance mark.

On Thanksgiving Day, the Tar Heels nosed by Duke for their eighth win of the season — the best record for a UNC club since 1948, when Choo Choo Justice & Co. went 9-1-1. And the win over the Blue Devils also gave Carolina a share of its first ACC title since the loop was formed 11 years ago.

Statistical records—both individual and team—were shattered by the bushel. Actually, ten school marks were broken and three were tied. They read like this:

TEAM RECORDS

1. Total Offense—Led by the passing of Junior Edge and Gary Black and the running of Ken Willard, Eddie Kesler and Ron Tuthill, the 1963 Tar Heels rolled up 3,414 yards in total offense. This easily surpassed the previous high of 3,245, set by the 1948 club.

2. Most Yards Passing—Carolina's air arm amassed 1,605 yards, breaking the old mark of 1,387 set in 1958.

3. Most Passes Attempted—The Edge-Black combo threw the ball 243 times this fall, erasing the attempt mark of 222 set last fall.

4. Most Passes Completed—As might be expected, this one fell too. 129 completions were registered this year, besting last year's record number of 116.

5. Most Passes Attempted, Single Game—Edge and Black tossed 37 times against Duke, surpassing the top mark of 36 against Michigan State last year.

6. Most Yards Passing, Single Game—Against the Blue Devils, 260, bettering the previous high of 254, set at Michigan State last season.

7. Most Passes Intercepted, Single Game — Alert defenders picked off six of Maryland's passes. Old record demolished was five against Notre Dame in 1960.

8. Fewest Fumbles, Single Game (tied)—Twice this year, against NC State and Miami, the Tar Heels didn't bobble the ball a single time. Only once before had this been done, against State last fall.

INDIVIDUAL RECORDS

9. Most Passes Attempted, Single Game—Edge let fly with 32 against Duke on Thanksgiving Day, breaking the mark of 27 he set last year against Michigan State.

10. Most Passes Caught, Single Game (tied)—Bob Lacey hauled in 10 against South Carolina, just like he did last year against MSU.

11. Most TD Passes Caught, Single Game (tied)—Joe Robinson grabbed two scoring tosses against N.C. State, a mark already shared by Art Weiner, Jeff Newton, Paul Severin and Benny Walser.

12. Most Passes Attempted, Career—Edge again, but how close! He threw 357 times in his three years here. The old record was 356, by Ray Farris, 1959-61.

13. Most Passes Completed, Career—Edge has connected with his receivers 193 times, wiping out the previous high of 173, belonging to Justice.

And this is not all. The Gator Bowl performances will be counted in with the regular season statistics for the purpose of school records. With this in mind, it looks like Willard will break the most-carries-in-a-season mark of 174, held by Hosea Rodgers (1948). Willard carried 167 times during the regular season.

Also, Lacey needs only ten more receptions to break Weiner's record of 57 catches in a season. And a real good day for Edge might see him break his own most-completions mark of 103, set last fall. Edge has 89 so far this season.

Navy Wins, Heads For Cotton Bowl

PHILDELPHIA (UPI) — Fullback Pat Donnelly ran for three touchdowns Saturday and hard-pressed Navy captured its fifth straight victory over Army, 21-15, when the clock ran out with the Cadets just two yards short of a score in a football game dedicated to their slain commander-in-chief, John F. Kennedy.

Directly after the game, Navy announced it had accepted a bid to the Cotton Bowl at Dallas, Texas, on Jan. 1 where it will meet unbeaten, top-ranked Texas.

Donnelly ran four, one and 20 yards for his touchdowns, tying a Navy record set by Joe Bellino in the 1959 game.

But almost equally tremendous was Army's Rollie Stichweh, who scored 14 of Army's 15 points and recovered a fourth-period "onside" kick which sent the Cadets on a furious assault that finally died when time ran out at Navy's two.

Stichweh dashed 10 yards for a first-period touchdown to put Army in front 7-0 and then, with Navy out in front, 21-7, on Donnelly's three scores and three conversions by Fred Marlin, Stichweh scored on a one-yard run in the fourth period and then ran for a two-point conversion.

With 6:14 to play, Dick Heydt booted a short "onside" kick for his kickoff and Stichweh recovered it on the Navy 49. That set the red-hot Cadets on a final desperate drive, but Navy defenders, led by Capt. Tom Lynch, repelled it as time expired and 102,000 throats set up a roar.

All-America Roger Staubach, chief engineer of Navy's record that now stands at 9-1 for the season, was a constant threat with his runs and passes, but twice was intercepted and failed to bring off the big play to put the points on the scoreboard.

Pitt Edges Penn State By 22-21

PITTSBURGH (UPI)—Quarterback Fred Mazurek shook off the effects of an injury and dashed 17 yards for a touchdown early in the fourth period Saturday to lead Pitt to a 22-21 squeaker over upset-minded Penn State.

Fullback Rick Leeson, whose 35-yard field goal in the third period gave Pitt a momentary 15-14 lead, kicked the extra point which provided the victory margin. Pitt wound up its best season since 1937 with nine victories against a sole defeat.

Memory Is Important In Game At Kentucky

LEXINGTON, Ky. — North Carolina will probably have to do it from memory here Monday night because Kentucky has regained the power it forgot it had last year.

The Tar Heels play the Wildcats of Baron Adolph Rupp tomorrow in the same Memorial Coliseum where UNC Coach Dean Smith found his greatest basketball victory.

It was Monday night, Dec. 17, 1962 when the Heels came into this beautiful roundball palace fresh from their worst performance of the season—a 90-76 drubbing at Indiana. But senior guards Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet were magnificent as they led their teammates to a thrilling 68-66 win here, sending Kentucky on to what was one of its most disappointing years.

But this is another year, another Monday night (tomorrow) and another hurdle for Carolina. This time it will be even harder.

Back from a trouble-plagued season that had been billed as a great one for him is the fabulous Cotton Nash, who in two games so far appears to have climbed the All-America stairs again.

Kentucky Ace . . . Cotton Nash

Nash (6-5), from Leominster, Mass., averaged 23.4 points his sophomore year and 20.6 last campaign. In two games prior to Saturday night's contest with Northwestern (two victories—75-64 over Virginia and 107-91 over Texas Tech), the cotton-top has tallied 28 and 33 points and has picked off 31 rebounds.

With Ted Deeken (6-4), his running mate at forward, who scored 28 against Virginia, 20 against Texas Tech, Nash has given the Wildcats tremendous scoring punch up front as well as strength off the boards. Deeken, too, is a strong board man (34 in two games).

For all their point potential at the corners, the Wildcats do have problems—specifically the lack of a good "big man" and a deficiency of scoring from the guards.

Kentucky's tallest regular is 6-6 John Adams, junior center from Rising Sun, Ind. He opened in the pivot in both the Virginia and Texas Tech games but saw only limited action due to inability to score and control the boards. Nash had to move into the center slot in both contests with Adams out of the lineup.

The starting guards, Randy Embry (5-11) and Terry Mobley (6-3), showed some scoring promise in the Texas Tech game after a slow start against Virginia. Embry collected 16 points and Mobley 10 in the second win.

Kentucky's sixth man is its third leading scorer and rebounder. He is 6-4 sophomore Larry Conley, and, in playing both guard and forward as a fireman, he has scored 24 points and grabbed 16 rebounds.

Charlie Ishmael (6-5) and Tommy Kron (6-5) are other top Wildcat reserves.

Jr. Birdmen Fly, Accept Gator Berth

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. (UPI)—Terry Isaacson missed the national scoring crown but rescued the Air Force from fired-up Colorado Saturday as the Falcons closed their home football season and won a Gator Bowl bid with a 17-14 victory over the Buffaloes.

Isaacson ran for one touchdown and passed for another, in setting a team record, but fell five points short of matching the scoring mark of 84 points held by Cosmo Iacavazzi of Princeton and Dave Casinelli of Memphis State.

The Falcons immediately accepted a bid to meet North Carolina in the Gator Bowl at Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 28.

Isaacson's one-yard scoring run came with 17 seconds remaining in the third period. The score followed one earlier in the same period by Colorado's powerful fullback Noble Milton.

Following Isaacson's third-period touchdown, Milton capped a 74-yard Colorado drive by plunging over from the two.

This put Colorado ahead of the favored Falcons 14-10, and it looked as if the Buffaloes might repeat their spoiler's role of last year, when they upset the Academy, 34-10.

ME? A POET? HECK NO!

I'm an economics major hinting that I want a REMINGTON® LEKTRONIC II for Christmas.

There's a simple, sound reason why the REMINGTON LEKTRONIC II costs more: It delivers more of a shave.

There's the cordless feature. Sealed-in, rechargeable energy cells let you shave anywhere without a plug. And what shaves they are! 348 cutting edges of high-carbon steel (sharper and tougher than stainless steel) whisk whiskers off. The edges are honed on an angle. So whiskers get sliced off instead of "ploughed" up. 756 whisker gathering slots in the big shaving head feed whiskers to the cutters faster. And on top of the shaving head are the REMINGTON Roller Combs. Adjust to any skin or beard. Push skin down, pop whiskers up into the cutters.

Forget to recharge? There's a cord. Plug it in and shave anywhere. With a cord, without a cord, with the LEKTRONIC II you're never without a close, comfortable shave.

India: Best, Worst Of Man

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of dispatches from a UNC student visiting India. Miss Rhymes, a senior from Hickory, participated in the Experiment in International Living Program. Her trip was sponsored by the International Students Board here.

By MARGARET ANN RHYMES

NEW DELHI—One cannot prepare for India. One can read of the statistics of poverty, illiteracy and disease but in no way can one prepare for confronting these in human terms.

One day we stopped at one of the larger religious villages in Northern India. As we walked through the winding, mud streets, we were followed by a throng of Indians — babies covered with sores, blind men, beggars, lepers, holy men with ashes rubbed over their bodies, people nude, people in rags and dozens of cows, monkeys and dogs.

Present too was that odor which is an integral part of India, arising from a combination of open sewers (small gullies along the streets), cow dung (used for fuel), heavy incense and well-spiced Indian cooking.

Here we saw the average $70 yearly income come alive in bloated stomachs and cracked skin, the 42-year life expectance in diseased and disfigured forms and the 76 per cent illiteracy rate in beings concerned for nothing other than their next meal.

And we had difficulty in grasping this experience: that these people, too, were huban beings. It was as though we had been out of touch with the mainstream of the world all these years and suddenly here it was upon us.

For this is how almost 90 per cent of India lives and every seventh human being in the world is an Indian. Add this to China and one has one-third of mankind.

And then there is the rest of Asia and Africa.

We have described the above experience—not that this remains our overwhelming impression and has obscured our view—but to illustrate the power of India to shock—and to enthrall.

It is the latter reaction that one must feel if one is to look beyond the physical conditions to see into the spirit of these people.

The foreigner in India inevitably feels frustration over his helplessness in the midst of such large-scale suffering. But, here is where the great effort must begin toward a serious understanding of this land.

No nation could be more exciting now as India moves slowly toward the uplifting of its exterior and the modification of spirit which must accompany the change.

Once the cultural shock is absorbed, and an attempt made to understand the complexities of Hinduism as a way of life, only then can one begin to know India.

There are sixty of us, including a dozen Europeans, who have been making this attempt to know India through two months of life in Indian families.

The sixty are broken down into groups of a dozen, each going to separate cities for the homestays. Most of these Experimenters are enrolled either in their final year of college or in graduate school. About half are sponsored by their university or community.

Prior to our homestay periods, we spent one week in New Delhi, our arrival point, and two days at Agra, site of the Taj Mahal.

New Delhi was hot and humid as the city waited anxiously for the long overdue monsoon. Seventy per cent of Indian agriculture depends on the freaks of the summer rains, so the concern is understandable.

The schedule was full, including receptions given by President Radhakhrisnan and (former) Finance Minister Desai, an hour-long audience with Prime Minister Nehru and several meetings with other political figures.

The last evening in Delhi was a unique contrast to the walk through the village: a lively party at the home of an upper-crust family which found Europeans, Latin Americans, North Americans and Indians — from turbaned, bearded Sikhs to orthodox, sari-clad Hindus—all twisting to Western music.

Here one could pull down the curtain on the income of $70 per year and open it on the $70 per week existence—one of the thousands of contrasts of India.

Nehru has said: "India contains all that is disgusting and all that is noble." And this we have been discovering.

Interns Can Work While They Learn

By HUGH STEVENS

(First of four Articles)

Would you like to spend the summer working for the state of North Carolina?

If so, hurry to your typewriter and apply for one of the twenty vacancies in the N. C. Summer Internship Program in State Government.

The program, a big success for the past two years, offers outstanding students an opportunity to work in approximately fifteen state government agencies.

The 1964 program will last from June 15 through August 21, and the student interns will have intensive, coordinated discussion on governmental and related problems in North Carolina in addition to their work. The seminars and discussions will be under the supervision of a political scientist and will have state officials, leaders, and political scientists as guests and speakers.

Interns will be paid $75 per week, and all will live at one of the North Carolina State dormitories.

In order to qualify, an applicant must have completed two years of undergraduate study, and must be either a N. C. resident or duly enrolled in a North Carolina college. Graduate students are also eligible.

Application materials are available from chairmen of the Political Science, History, Economics, B.A., Education and Sociology departments, as well as the placement office. They may also be obtained upon request from the Governor's Office.

Ray Farris, UNC law student who acted as coordinator of last year's program, announced that applications should be mailed to the Governor's office by Dec. 15. Applications will be accepted after that date, however.

On the application the student gives biographical data, extra-curricular record and an essay on his career plans. An academic transcript and letters of recommendation are attached.

A committee which includes prominent political science teachers will begin making selections about January 10. Applicants last year totaled 230.

Finalists will be interviewed in Chapel Hill during the first week in February. The committee seeks students with good minds, leadership ability, and a concern for the people of North Carolina.

Selected students will go to Raleigh for an orientation period prior to the beginning of the program.

As the program is sponsored by the State, the interns make working contributions to State operations. To achieve this working contribution, agency advisors were assigned by the heads of State agencies and work schedules were arranged that would utilize the abilities of the students.

Some of the projects last year included: a study of curriculum inadequacies in Negro Colleges in North Carolina; rewriting of all prison training manuals; an analysis of how tax exempt foundations have influenced the economy of the state; and a study of cigarette taxation policies in the 50 states.

Nine different N. C. schools were represented in last year's program, with the largest number coming from UNC.

The heart of the internship program is the challenge offered by the discussion meetings. The 1963 program featured 14 luncheons and 14 evening seminars, with at least one a week. Here the story of North Carolina was told—the failures and accomplishments of the past, the problems and opportunities of the present, and the hopes and aspirations of the future. All discussions featured outstanding members of state government, political leaders, and educators.

In the course of the ten-week program, virtually every aspect of state government was covered by the student discussions. All those who participated agreed that such discussions were the most interesting and valuable part of the program.

"This is a tremendous program," Farris said last week. "I would urge all students who are interested in state affairs, regardless of their field of study, to apply for the program."

(Beginning tomorrow, the DTH will present profiles of some of the participants in the 1963 State Internship Program.)

Chain Letters Can Mean Jail

Warning: stay away from those chain letters!

They are a violation of N. C. lottery laws, and can result in up to two years imprisonment and a maximum fine of $1,000.

Buzzy Stubbs, student Attorney General, said yesterday that at least two chain letters are circulating on campus now, and strongly urged all students to avoid participation in them.

"Chain letters, as such, are not specifically a violation of the Honor Code," Stubbs said, "but in the past we have treated violations of civil law as Campus Code infractions."

One of the letters currently being circulated apparently started in Louisiana, while another came from Duke.

"Some of the letters may appear to be almost foolproof," Stubbs commented, "but in the end someone has to lose money."

He indicated that Student Government officials will take action on the letters if they become too widespread. Meanwhile he suggested that students follow a policy of "HANDS OFF!"

STANFORD TO RECRUIT HERE

Nathaniel C. Allyn, director of admissions of the Stanford Graduate School of Business, will visit UNC today to meet interested students and businessmen.

Stanford currently enrolls students from 80 different institutions. Nearly 40 per cent of those studying for their MBA have from one to five years experience in the business world.

Those who wish to see Allyn should contact J. M. Galloway, director of placement, 204 Garner Hall.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Reprints of the Symposium "Civil Rights and the South" will be on sale daily in Lenoir Hall from 11-2, at $1.50 per copy. The articles were originally printed in the North Carolina Law Review.

The articles deal not only with the legal aspects of the civil rights problem, but also with sociological and psychological aspects as well.

ALL ABOARD!

A representative from Seaboard Airline Railroad will be on campus Tuesday from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. to sell tickets for the trip to Jacksonville. The round-trip fare is $26.50. The train will leave Raleigh about 9 p.m. Thursday or Friday, Dec. 26 or 27. Several times are open for the return trip.

The ticket sales will be in the lobby of Woollen Gym.

UP Elects New Chairman Tonight

The University Party will elect a new party chairman at a business meeting tonight at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Mike Chanin, who served as party chairman for two years—the longest tenure in UP history, has submitted his resignation in order to devote more time to student government and other activities.

Because of Chanin's long term, no clear-cut favorite has been mentioned and a wide-open contest is expected.

Other business on the agenda includes discussion of proposed by-law changes and UP resolutions concerning "bull" pledges attending fraternity parties and the Student-Faculty Review Board controversy that are expected to be considered by Student Legislature.

Chanin urged all party members to attend the meeting and to give the new chairman their whole-hearted support.

We Ain't Either

Question: Who's Who at the University of North Carolina?

Answer: Nobody.

At least that's the official situation if one takes as his guide the yearbook called "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities," published yearly in Alabama.

The reason for this somewhat disappointing situation is not that Carolina does not have anybody who Is, but rather that we don't have anybody who Does. That is to say, no one at the University goes to the trouble to send in a list of students Who Are.

A DTH check of administration and student government officials yesterday revealed that UNC does not participate in the publication's yearly selection of BW- and BMOC's.

The reason for the omission, apparently, is that Tar Heels would rather be than seem—which is to say that they don't think a listing in the college Who's Who is really worth the paper it's printed on.

Random comments from a half-dozen students and administration spokesmen ranged from a docile "I'd never really thought about it," to an outraged, "I wouldn't be in the damn thing if you paid me—which they don't, as a matter of fact. You pay them."

The DTH check resulted from a report that the Wake Forest student newspaper, the Old Gold and Black, has protested the method of selecting nominees for the honor.

Y Will Give To Danville

The YMCA Human Relations Committee voted unanimously last week to give financial support to the Friends of Danville, Va. fund-raising campaign being conducted here by the campus chapter of the Student Peace Union.

The fund-raising program, which began Nov. 20, has netted about $60 so far, according to Rick Doble of the SPU.

The money is being used to pay the $4.94 poll tax needed to register a voter in Danville and to finance projects conducted by the Danville Christian Progressive Association (DCPA), Doble said.

Y committee chairman Scott Trull said that when university student governments are adopting resolutions, and giving money and students are giving up meals to save money for Danville the best the committee here could do was support the program.

Contributions can be made at the SPU office in the Y Building or sent to "Friends of Danville," Box 382, Chapel Hill.

SPEAKER BAN BACKED

Unanimous support of the Communist speaker ban law enacted by the 1963 General Assembly was given in a resolution approved by the Vance County Board of Education at its monthly meeting for December. The stand of the board went even farther also and suggested that "this law be amended to include all colleges and schools—public and private."

WINSTON-SALEM (UPI) — The student newspaper at Wake Forest College today protested the exclusion of 25 seniors from the publication "Who's Who at American Colleges and Universities" by naming them to an organization called "Who Ain't."

Charles Osolin of Broomall, Pa., editor of the Old Gold and Black, said the list was drawn as a form of "protest . . . We are pleased to recognize 25 more seniors who have made signal contributions to the life of the college during their four years here."

Osolin said the editorial board was displeased because the college filled only 25 of the 30 memberships it was allotted by "Who's Who," a student yearbook published in Tuscaloosa, Ala. Osolin himself was among the 25 nominated for the national publication.

Previous editors of the Old Gold and Black have criticized the "Who's Who" selection on grounds that its only purpose is to "line the pockets" of the publisher.

Osolin said the editorial board also protested the criteria used for selecting Wake Forest nominees for "Who's Who," claiming that "political feelings" were involved in the selections. He said the paper would recommend to the student legislature that a committee be appointet to study the methods used.

"We hope, through the 'Who Ain't' list, to bring home the need for revising the criteria for 'Who's Who,'" he explained.

None of the "Who Ain't" members were chosen solely because of their academic achievements, he said, as are some of the members of "Who's Who."

Jackson Retires As SP Chairman

Neal Jackson, Student Party chairman, announced yesterday that he will not seek re-election in the SP election next week.

"I have been some time in making this decision," Jackson said, "and I feel it is the correct one."

Jackson said the SP has made much progress over the last year.

"I am extremely proud to say that I have been associated with it during that time," he announced. "The Lawler administration has been the best that I have ever known and I shall continue to work closely with it in the legislature."

Jackson epressed his thanks to "the members of the SP who have so faithfully helped me during my tenure as chairman, especially Phil Baddour, Bob Smith, Dick Ellis, and Martin Lancaster.

"I am fully confident that there are many capable people in the party who could fill the office of chairman," he stated. "I shall be available to assist the new chairman in any capacity he desires."

Gaskin Gives Fall Lecture

James A. Gaskin, associate professor of English at the University of North Carolina, will give the traditional Fall Humanities Lecture here Thursday at 8 p.m. in Murphey Hall.

A specialist on Old English literature, Prof. Gaskin will speak on "Women in Old English Literature."

The female characters to be discussed will be those especially appearing in poetry. The best known of the characters is Wealhtheow, the Danish Queen, of the eighth century epic poem "Beowulf."

A look at the women characters will give an indication of what can be known about the role of women in the society of that literary period, according to Prof. Gaskin. The literary period dates from about 750 to the 12th century.

A native of Summerville, Ga., Prof. Gaskin received a B.A. degree from UNC in 1952. He has been an adviser in the General College at UNC, served as assistant to the Dean of the Graduate School,. and has served as president of the UNC Philological Club.

Kentucky's Speed Supreme In 100-80 Victory Over Heels

Cunningham Tops Carolina Scoring With 32 Points

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

LEXINGTON, Ky.—North Carolina lost its Big Kid and all its big hopes with 6:22 left here last night, and Kentucky went on to a romp, 100-80.

The Kid (Billy Cunningham) was forced out on a fifth foul, but not before scoring 32 points and getting 20 rebounds. The hopes (of overcoming an 11-point lead) were all gone, too, for Billy had kept the 'Heels in the game with a dazzling show that outclassed the more - publicized Cotton Nash for 24 minutes.

Two quick buckets by Charlie Ishmael at the end of the half had given Kentucky a 40-36 lead, and Carolina had kept alive from then to the 10:40 mark of the second half.

But here, up by 58-53, the Wildcats scored eight points while UNC could only counter with Cunningham's rebound goal.

Terry Mobley, a slick-shooting guard who got 22 points, cashed two jumps and two free throws, and Nash added a hook for a 66-55 lead with 9:08 left.

Cunningham, with help from Mike Cooke, kept Carolina even for the next three minutes, but when Billy's twisting drive (which was good) resulted in a charging foul, he retired, and UNC was dead.

Kentucky led at the time, 75-64, kept it for the next few minutes (88-76), but then the Wildcats scored 10 straight to put it away for good as 11,700 Memorial Coliseum fans screamed in delight. Nash and Ted Deeken split the ten in the killing string.

Nash, who played Cunningham man for man until his fourth foul with 17:02 left, wound up with 23 points, high for Kentucky. Deeken had 22, Charlie Ishmael, a sub guard who ignited a first-half rally, 17, and soph Larry Conley, 15.

For Carolina, Mike Cooke, on many long-range bombs, had 18, Ray Respess 16, and Charlie Shaffer, who also fouled out (at the 10:36 mark) added 10.

Kentucky shot 50.6 per cent (57.5 in the second half) and the Tar Heels 40.3.

In the first half, with soph Larry Conley hitting seven early points, Kentucky sped to a 20-15 lead with eight minutes gone. But, led by the rebounding of Cunningham (17 in the first half) and fantastic shooting by Cooke, UNC came roaring back and battled them on even terms through the half.

'Whoa' Says Studebaker Corp.

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (UPI) — Studebaker Corp. announced Monday it is ending its U. S. auto production 61 years after it entered the car-making business and 103 years after it made its first covered wagon.

The venerable firm said it is shutting down its U. S. automotive production and assembly lines here and moving all car production to its Hamilton, Ont., plant.

The Studebaker company itself will not die. Twelve operating divisions outside the automotive field are making money, company officials said, and they will continue.

Cancer Found In Water, Food, Air?

GENEVA (UPI) — The World Health Organization (WHO) said Monday there are inherent dangers of cancer in air, food and water as well as cigarette smoking, alcoholism and cosmetics.

'Death List' Shakes Up Europe

LONDON (UPI) European police Monday stepped up security measures after a series of threats against the lives of world leaders in the wake of the assassination of President Kennedy.

The so-called "death list" includes British Labor party leader Harold Wilson, Swedish Premier Tage Erlander and West German Chancellor Ludwig Erhard.

Tin Miners Give Bolivia '24 Hours'

LA PAZ, Bolivia (UPI)—Armed tin miners holding 17 persons, including four Americans, as hostages for the release of three jailed Communist labor leaders Monday gave the government 24 hours to meet their demands or "face the consequences."

They indicated the "consequences" could be civil war, starting with paralysis of the vital tin mining industry to bring down the government of President Victor Paz Estenssoro.

'Down We Go': Calmly

ELKTON, Md. (UPI)—"Out of control . . . down we go . . . Clipper 214 going down in flames.."

That 13-word epitaph, spoken by a pilot as calmly as if he were requesting a routine landing clearance, gave investigators their first clues Monday on the cause of a Pan American World Airways jet crash here Sunday night.

The plane, Flight 214, went down in a thunderstorm while on the last leg of a San Juan, P.R., to Philadelphia flight with a single stop in Baltimore. Several eyewitnesses told of seeing lightning strike the giant jet and said the plane exploded.

Exiles: Soviets Smuggling Rebels

MIAMI (UPI) — Cuban exiles told the Organization of American States Monday that Soviet submarines and fishing trawlers are helping to smuggle Cuban arms to pro-Castro rebels in Latin America.

In a detailed report sent to the OAS the Cuban exile revolutionary council, headed by former Cuban Premier Manuel A. De Varona, charged that "more than 100 Soviet fishing trawlers" plus an unspecified number of Soviet submarines are involved.

SATURDAY was ping pong ball day at Eastgate Shopping Center, and promptly at noon a low-flying helicopter buzzed over the parking lot dropping ping pong balls everywhere.

At once there was a mad dash on the ground, as the crowds that had gathered scrambled for the loose balls. According to Charles Alexander of the Eastgate Merchants Association, each ball had a number and the name of a member store on it. These balls could be turned in for gift certificates, cash or merchandise. Approximately 3,000 balls were dropped. This was the second annual Eastgate ping pong ball drop.

Rumors And Facts And Faculty Councils

One of the biggest problems involved in the current controversy over the removal of students from the Student-Faculty Review Board is the complexity of the situation. This is reflected in the generalized sense of frustration and confusion that seems to exist over the matter within the student body and its Student Government, and within that part of the faculty which has bothered to concern itself with the controversy.

As a result of this situation of confusion, dispassionate observers are hard-pressed to find out what the facts actually are, and as always happens in such cases, rumors and speculation are rushing in to fill the factual gap.

We have been in on the controversy since it began several weeks ago, yet we lay no claim to knowing the entire story. All we do know beyond a shadow of a doubt is this:

1. The Faculty Committee on Student Discipline has nullified a section of the Student Constitution without bothering to confer with any student, official or otherwise.

2. The Ann Carter case has many University officials worried about the strength of the University's judiciary system, in case another Ann Carter case comes along and winds up in the State courts.

3. This same decision to drop the students from the Review Board was made as early as 1961, but was not announced at that time, nor was it announced later because of the Carter Case.

4. Chancellor Aycock and the faculty members involved don't seem to be in any great haste to re-examine the actions of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline in unilaterally removing students from the Review Board, and thereby nullifying the Student Constitution. In fact, he and they seem to be in a state of great unconcern about the whole thing.

What about the rumors and speculations that have arisen to round out these few facts? We hasten to add that we do not necessarily think these rumors valid, but they are of such widespread currency they have managed to overshadow other issues, and should be aired.

Well, the first one is that Dr. Gordon Cleveland has just been a fall guy for the Chancellor. As chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, Dr. Cleveland announced the removal of students from the Review Board as nicely as any Public Relations man could want — over dinner and at length. The trouble was he was hard-pressed to justify the action, and as a result, he didn't make much sense. His reasoning was and still is faulty.

Rightly or wrongly, a sizable segment of student opinion thinks that Dr. Cleveland got railroaded into taking the blame for the decision, while it was the Chancellor or someone else in that direction who provided the impetus for the decision.

Secondly, there is some feeling that Student Body President Mike Lawler, by his reputed over-aggressiveness in dealing with the Administration and the Faculty, caused University officials to think there wasn't any reason for the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline to discuss the change with Lawler because he is too long-winded and unbending to bother negotiating with. This reputed feeling by the Administration and Faculty, many students think, grows out of last spring's controversy over the Apartment Rule, where negotiations bogged down to the point that they became worthless.

Thirdly, a surprisingly large number of students attribute the whole botched-up mess to dictatorial tendencies on the part of many faculty members, who apparently think Student Government is a fine idea but who have reservations about how much and what types of authority Student Government should have.

Adding more fuel to this lightless blaze is what happened last Friday when four student leaders appeared before the authoritative Faculty Council. The students appealed to the group to temporarily reinstate the removed students to the Review Board while a special faculty committee studies the whole controversy and makes some recommendations for resolving the matter honorably.

The students stated their case in the half-hour allotted to them, then were whisked out of the room without being given any opportunity to answer the questions that were on some faculty members' minds.

Later, it was announced that the Faculty Council had not taken any action on the students' proposals because they were not formally placed on the agenda for consideration and possible action. It was explained that this was due to a Faculty Council rule aimed at preventing the group from coming to any ill-informed, emotional conclusions. The rule says that no busness not previously presented, can be voted on in the same session at which it is presented.

The intent of this rule is fine, but it does appear to have been used in this case as one more reason for inaction by the Administration or the Faculty, thus strengthening the view that they are doing everything they can to prevent admitting that the unilateral removal of students from the judicial Review Board might have been wrong.

So here we are with the Fall semester nearly shot and nothing certain except that part of the Student Constitution has been nullified without so much as a how-do-you-do from the Faculty or the Administration.

It is still not too late to resolve the matter, however — if everyone will agree to drop the flim-flammery and use a little common sense.

Student Government has shown its willingness to try to work out the controversy without going to President Friday or the Trustees. It's past time for the Administration and the Faculty to exhibit the same type of willingness—a special meeting of the Faculty Council would be a good way to start.

Then we could all go home for Christmas and at least know where we stand.

Both Races Are Injured

Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz, in a recent discussion on technology, said that this science now had developed to the point where machines have, "on the average," ability equivalent to a high school education.

"Most of the work that has been done by people with less than a high school education can now be done more cheaply by machines, he said. "This indicates that soon most people without a high school education will not, of course, be able to find employment that will enable them to earn a living for a family. Such jobs as they can find will likely be seasonal or of a base that will give them only meager return.

Mr. Wirtz called for "declaration of war" on ignorance, from want and an economic bill of rights that starts with the right to work—in its only honest sense."

Secretary Wirtz's statement that machines already are doing jobs that require an average high school education drives to the heart of the national emergency problem of upgrading education, particularly that of the South and, more directly, that of the Negro, whose education for almost a hundred years has been even more inadequate and neglected.

Much of the deep South remains rural. It suffers from an anemia common to all agricultural areas the world over—an income less than that of the highly industrialized regions. The fact that this South, without the money necessary to establish and maintain one really first-rate school system, has kept two in varying degrees of starvation explains much about the region's attitudes, fixations and acceptances of prejudices rather than factual findings.

There are, a great many schools in each of the Southern states that are not providing enough instruction to enable their graduates to enter the state universities—especially the technical branches. When it is considered that it was not until after 1945 that the deep South states began programs of building high schools for Negro pupils, the acuteness of the regional problems becomes better understood.

The net result is that both races have suffered discrimination in education.

Dr. Henry R. Heald, president of the Ford Foundation, in a recent address at the University of Georgia, noted this predicament when he said there was no reason why the unfavorable stereotype of Southern education should not be shattered. "Sectionalism," he said, "makes no more sense in higher education than it does in interstate commerce."

Dr. Heald cited the "manpower paradox" as one reason why the South, despite its great strides, still lags behind most of the country in per capita income and its employment rate.

"This region," he said, "is at a competitive disadvantage in meeting the demand for skilled business managers, workers technicians, and engineers. Yet, at the same time, it has a large reservoir of manpower — unskilled and unproductive. The educational deficiencies of "disadvantaged" Negroes and whites are, he stated, "manifest weaknesses."

"It is wasteful," he concluded, "wherever it occurs, in a Northern city or in the urban and rural stretches of the South. We know that racial inequities bring society no profit, yet the reliably estimated cost staggers the imagination. Last year they are said to have accounted for a loss of billions of dollars in the gross national product."

The United Nations Seminar

By KELLIS PARKER

UNC students who spent the Thanksgiving vacation at the United Nations building in New York were gripped by the challenge that developed as a result of the tragic events of Friday, November 22. In its incipiency, this challenge was one of profound introspection and re-evaluation of our own lives, our nation, and the world.

The forty students were participants in the annual United Nations Seminar sponsored by the YM-YWCA. Briefings, tours, and discussions were held with officials from India, Poland, Ghana, the United States, the United Nations Secretariat, and the National Social Welfare Assembly. Although the theme of the Seminar was "the United Nations in the World Arena," most students were interested in the reaction of government officials to the great American tragedy.

As the bus rolled through Washington, we were reminded of the words of our late President: "It cannot be said too often that the Charter of the United Nations expresses well the basic precepts and standards of conduct that guide our own society. These precepts and standards are not destroyed because this nation or that, consistently, or occasionally, violates them. The indestructible principles of the Charter exert a gravitational pull which adds strength to every aspect of our world-wide diplomacy. The United Nations, under that Charter, provides a framework within which we can pursue the highest goal of American foreign policy: a world community of independent nations living together in free association and at peace with each other."

Our challenge is to attempt to cope with the ignorance and misconception that could cause Americans to be disrespectful of our ambassador to the United Nations. It was noticed that the President of Nigeria, Mr. Azikiwe, issued a statement advocating moving the United Nations building to another country. President Azikiwe, who has studied at universities in the United States, said that it was necessary to move the U.N. because the lives of all the delegates were threatened. Mr. Jed Johnson, former Field Representative of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations, now chairman of the National Social Welfare Assembly, told the group that this reaction was atypical. He added, however, that it presented Americans with a challenge. Mr. S. K. Roy, Third Consul of the Indian Mission to the United Nations, stated that the challenge confronting American youth is to attempt to teach their elders that the world is changing.

Our last day in New York was spent with Dr. Frank Porter Graham in memory of the late President Kennedy. The more we were reminded of President Kennedy's interests in peace and world solidarity, the more we wanted to do in terms of informing our communities of the facts of the United Nations. In the words of Adlai Stevenson, United States Ambassador to the United Nations, "We dare not neglect any opening that will help us advance our belief in a peaceful and equal future for all men. To seize every opportunity to break through to the reason and conscience of others is, indeed, nothing less or more than enlightened self-interest."

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Gratified

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers has been deeply gratified by the response to its organization. More and more we realize that the good people of this state are overwhelmingly in favor of measures to keep the hammer and sickle from defiling the beauties of North Carolina.

Since public sentiment is so greatly on the right side, we now dare to suggest that the current law is not adequate. Perhaps there are now no known Communists speaking at advertised public meetings on our campuses, but why are books written by these same dangerous subversives purchased with money from North Carolina taxpayers for the University libaries? It is far less likely for an inexperienced student to disagree with something he sees in print than with something he only hears.

Perhaps students need to learn about Communism in order to fight it, it is said. And this is true. But they can learn the truth from the writings of J. Edgar Hoover and Fred C. Schwarz; from the documents of the vigilant House Committee on Unamerican Activities; from the materials published by our freedom-loving friends of the American Legion — men who have fought and died to protect our liberties, who have seen the face of the enemy and returned to warn and teach us. (Is not this better than "learning" from some pale pink professor who spends his time in books rather than in the manly arts of war?)

Is it necessary for the taxpayers of this State to purchase copies of the works of such dangerous, Unamerican "writers" as Lenin, Marx, Khrushchev, and others

Is it necessary to spend good money to purchase books from behind the Iron Curtain?

Is it necessary to support financially those so-called "intellectuals" who have been exposed by our watchful Congressional committees and have taken refuge in misuse of the Fifth Amendment, which was never intended to relieve a citizen of the obligation to frequently affirm his loyalty to his country? (Ask these men if Russia has a Fifth Amendment!)

Is it necessary to purchase books which aid the Communist Conspiracy by demoralizing our youth, who are not accustomed to the necessity of resisting frequent insistences that they read such pornographic trash as Tropic of Cancer, Catcher in the Rye, or that supposedly humorous attack on all we hold dear, Catch-22? No good American Christian could have written these—but you and I, fellow taxpayers, buy such junk every day without realizing it!

What are we going to do about it

Gullible Children

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I wish to commend you for your stand in a recent editorial, "Another Stone, Another Speaker Ban." It seems quite evident that you at North Carolina are as concerned as we at U. Va. with the problem of our legislators treating us like their gullible children. Certainly few, if any, students who hear such speakers as Gus Hall or George Lincoln Rockwell will be influenced to such an extent that they would aspire to joining their "crusade." Those legislators, such as Senator Stone (North Carolina and Virginia), who favor such "gag laws" are, in my estimation, favoring a violation of the constitutional freedom of speech and are also attempting to deprive students of the opportunity to hear more about the opinions of those people whose political ideologies differ essentially from ours. If these men are trying to preserve democracy, they certainly are doing it in a strange way.

Agreed—Send Brothers Stone to Moscow, for their ideas Mr. K. would welcome them with tears and two big kisses.

Deep Frustration

Ed. note—The author of the following article is a graduate of the University and is now on a Marshall Scholarship at Oxford University, England. In the following letter to a friend in Chapel Hil, he describes his reaction to the shocking news of the President's death and the reaction of the students and Englishmen around him.

By FRED ANDERSON

President Kennedy's death has left a dark, deep trace upon the minds and hearts of the people of England. Again and again during this tragic weekend I have wished that Americans could see firsthand how the English, and all the people of Europe, are sharing with us deeply grieved and troubled hearts over the loss we are strained to bear. But the reaction here this weekend affirms that in spite of often ardent disapproval of American policy, in spite of complaints of American control of European affairs, in spite of manifold criticisms of our handling of our internal affairs, Europeans still feel a profound alliance with our cause and destiny and they were particularly involved with the fate of the man upon whom had been placed the responsibility of leading, not only our own country, but the entire Western world. He was our President, but we selected him to lead our country. I can see now from the somber, intense faces of Englishmen around me in Oxford, that he belonged in effect to them as well.

It is difficult to describe the feeling the small group of Americans in my college had when every act and word, every betrayed emotion, became a profound personal tribute to our countryman. In despair there was pride, and a realization of the great respect held here for the man. It was seven-thirty in the evening before the news reached us, but before eleven o'clock that night the Rector of our college had written a personal note of condolence to every American in the college—fourteen in all. Balliol college chapel was filled at ten the same night for prayer and tribute. Every college in Oxford has flown the British flag at half mast since Friday. Sunday afternoon Radcliffe Square, the center of the University, was filled with people who had come to remember the late President in silence. And of course there have been long, unhappy conversations in which for once the stubborn heat of political argument has been replaced by unashamed acknowledgement of what the President meant personally to people here.

I have tried to see as best I could what it is that made the Englishmen and Europeans across the channel so profoundly admire the President in particular. It seems to boil down to this, that he maintained a hopeful and even idealistic outlook for the future, an outlook and vision which he tempered with a sober and practical awareness of the means one uses in a political world to gain one's ends. This is a great tribute for any man coming from Europeans, for they among all the peoples on earth are the best-trained to know this virtue, having been betrayed by so many not possessing it during the past strife-ridden decades.

This summer Kennedy made a speech in Berlin that won him the hearts of all of Germany. It was an idealistic speech, full of spirit and optimism, yet fully admitting the grave difficulties of modern Berlin in its fight to remain free. He ended every point concerning courage and freedom with, 'I am a Berliner.' And now we can see that everyone in Germany who heard him knew that in spirit he was. He was to Europeans a man who could translate the American ideal into terms a skeptical and wary European could appreciate and understand.

And finally we come to the essence of what was so tragic to the people here in his untimely death. The Sunday edition of The Observer of London expresses it well.

"When great men of State die, it is their achievements which come to mind. The tragedy of Kennedy's death is that we have also to mourn the achievements to come. There is a feeling that the future has been betrayed."

Thus there is a deep-seated sense of frustration here, much as I know there is at home.

Around The Campus

By PETE WALES

Zeta Beta Tau has finally moved into its new house at 204 Finley Golf Course Road, and it's a beauty.

The $250,000 house features a "sunken" living room and "one of the largest bathrooms on campus." It will house 44 boys.

It is the first house to go up on the University's new fraternity court, and there are lots for six more.

The old house on West Rosemary St. is being sold by Foushee Real Estate. The ZBT's moved out over the weekend and ate their first meal in the new house Sunday night.

The contractors will put the finishing touches during the next few weeks as the boys get settled. The ZBT's will hold an open house sometime early next semester when all work is completed.

Under University rules, the new house must have a housemother. Mrs. Lottie Lang Gray will fill the post and will occupy her own apartment in the house, complete with kitchenette.

Two unusual features of the house are the intercom system to each individual room and the infrared heating lamps in the bathroom.

The bathroom stretches the width of the house and has a special drying room outside the showers where the boys may bask in the light of the infrared lamps.

Everett Residence Hall has taken the lead in the renewed fight over the Judicial Review Board.

President Paul Dickson started a petition condemning the faculty's method of action earlier this year in removing the students from the Board, and Everett men have gained 324 signatures from residents of the five halls in the lower quad.

The petition was handed over to the Student Legislature Thursday night. Legislators will carry copies of the petition to their constituents for further signatures.

"Everett will be glad to help circulate the petition further if the legislators need any help," Dickson said.

Delta Delta Delta was jumping this past weekend in honor of the pledge class.

Reports have it that the boys were flocking from as far as Boston, Mass., to the "gala" weekend.

The 19 pledges were introduced formally at a Friday night combo party. The formal banquet was Saturday night at the Holiday Inn in Durham followed by another combo party.

The Sunday social life at Alpha Delta Pi was somewhat more sedate.

The ADPi's sent out invitations to the professors of all the girls for a tea from 3 to 5 p.m. About 25 professors and wives came, according to Jacne Yeager who was in charge of the tea.

Exams are drawing nigh.

Friday To Attend D. C. Conference

Consolidated University President William Friday will attend a meeting of the Marshall Scholarship Advisory Council at the British Embassy in Washington on Dec. 12.

The council, which annually selects the John Marshall Scholars for study in England, includes a number of well-known American educators and public officials.

Friday was named to the group last year, but was unable to take part in the 1962 selections.

The meeting will be hosted by Sir David Ormsby Gore, the British Ambassador. Others in attendance will include Christian Herter, former Secretary of State; Miss Margaret Clapp, president of Wellesley College; Dr. Arthur Adams, former head of the American Council of Education; and Dr. Detley Bronk, chairman of the Rockefeller Institute.

The scholarships were named for General John Marshall, and winners may study at the English university of their choice.

Plan Rec Hall

Chapel Hill may get a downtown recreation center for its teenagers soon.

Quarters for the center have been proposed on the ground floor of the former Gordon's Five-and-Ten-Cent Store at the corner of Franklin and Columbia Streets.

Town Manager Robert Peck said the matter is being considered by the Recreation Commission and will probably be presented to the Board of Aldermen Monday along with a request for appropriation of part or all of a $1,000 contingency item in the current year's public recreation program budget.

Swimmers Shoot For Stars After Two Big Wins

"There is no question about it—this is the best start we've had since I've been here, maybe the best Carolina has ever had."

Thus spoke a very happy Pat Earey. And the friendly red head, who is now in his seventh year as head swimming coach here, has every reason to be happy. Ecstatic even.

Last week Earey took his swimming team to Yankeeland. On this road trip, the Blue Dolphins, already 1-0 after a smashing conquest of VMI in the pool season lid-lifter, were to face two of the toughest teams they would see all year. Earey knew Navy and Princeton would be rough. So did his team.

"I had never beaten either Navy or Princeton before," said Earey, "and though we knew we had possibly our best team ever this year, we really didn't anticipate a win over Navy. They were supposed to have their best team in years at Annapolis. Princeton we thought we might beat."

And beat the Tigers they did. Coming from behind in the last three events, the Dolphins splashed to a 54-41 upset. This was on Friday night. And Friday night was nothing compared to what happened at Annapolis Thursday afternoon.

In a collegiate swimming meet the final event is the 400-yard freestyle relay. The winner of this event gets seven points. The loser gets nothing more than four wet bathing suits.

Against the Midshipmen, the score was 47-41 going into this final event, and the 41 belonged to Carolina. Larry Roberts, Chip Smith, Harrison Merrill and Thompson Mann also belonged to Carolina. This quartet sank the Navy in its own water.

The four Tar Heels broke the Annapolis pool record with a time of 3:18.8 with Mann finishing up 15 feet ahead of Navy All-America Mike Collins. More important, the win meant the meet for the Dolphins. It may also have meant the whole season.

"You know these two victories mean an awful lot to this team," said Earey. "It gives us the impetus we need. They are thinking now in terms of an undefeated season. We still have some real tough ones left. In particular, Florida State, Florida and Maryland. But a team that believes in itself will push a little harder and will beat the best."

In all probability, the Blue Dolphins will go into 1964 with a 6-0 mark. They entertain the Duke Blue Devils tomorrow night in Bowman Gray Pool, and though the Devils have some top performers, their overall strength seems somewhat less than the Dolphins'.

This weekend there is another trip, this time to South Carolina for meets against Clemson (Friday night) and South Carolina (Saturday afternoon). Neither figures to come close to UNC.

After Christmas, however, there will be some stiff challenges thrown at the Heels. Coach Earey is still worried about his team's depth. He would like a stronger No. 2 man in his breast-stroke, butterfly and backstroke.

"Our relay teams are real strong and our top men in the individual events are always going to be in there close at the finish," said the coach. "We have great free-style capabilities. I just think we need improvement among our second-liners so that we don't have to rely on Mann or Merrill to swim in three events. This can take the edge off their performances."

Earey feels that the most improved swimmers on his team are junior Chip Smith in the sprints ("He's got tremendous strength, needs only confidence.") and Davis Roberts as the lead man on the free-style relay ("He's put in a lot of time and is now a cool, calm performer.").

Heels Back To Work, Oiling Anti-Aircraft

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina's football team returned to the practice field Monday afternoon and began the task of oiling its anti-aircraft weaponry.

UNC assistant coaches Emmett Cheek, Vito Ragazzo & Bob Thalman spent Saturday afternoon in the rarefied Colorado air,. watching the Air Force Academy edge Colorado and thereby become Carolina's Gator Bowl opponent.

Today Jim Hickey and his staff are in the process of a film exchange with the Falcons. Strategy sessions will also be frequent in the next few days.

Trainer John Lacey reports that both end Bob Lacey and defensive back and place-kicker Dave Braine are making good progress in their recovery from leg injuries sustained in the Duke game. Doctors feel that both will be ready for the Falcons.

The Tar Heels, who went through about a one-hour conditioning drill yesterday, will practice through December 19, then take four days off for their pre-Christmas vacation. The team will fly by chartered plane to Jacksonville on December 23 and set up headquarters at the Ponce de Leon Hotel in St. Augustine.

Hickey will have his squad work out on the practice field of St. Augustine High School. Practice plans for the Air Force have not yet been announced.

NFL Rejects AFL

NEW YORK (UPI) — Commissioner Joe Foss of the American Football League Monday challenged the rival National League to play a "world series" in 1964, but the proposal was immediately rejected by Commissioner Pete Rozelle of the NFL.

Foss's challenge was made in the form of a "Dear Pete" letter to Rozelle.

"I feel strongly that the time has arrived for the inauguration of such an annual game," Foss wrote.

"Any argument as to which team would win the initial AFL-NFL game is of secondary importance," his letter said. "The overriding fact is that the establishment of a world series of professional football is necessary to the continued progress of our game if we're to be true sportsmen and not merely businessmen in sports.

"Pro football now has attained the status where many regard it as our national sport," the letter continued. "What could be more fitting than for us to match baseball in having an annual classic between the two leagues?"

Rejects Idea

Rozelle rejected the idea promptly and tersely, although he said he had not yet received Foss's letter during the early afternoon. After the letter was read to him over the telephone by newsmen, Rozelle issued this two-paragraph statement addressed to Foss:

"I understand that you intend to write me for the purpose of suggesting a championship play-off between the National Football League and the American Football League in 1964.

"As I have said on a number of occasions recently when queried by news media concerning similar public requests made by you, we have no plans for such a game."

Rozelle would not comment further.

The AFL challenge to the NFL that the two league champions meet in a "world series" of pro football has been made informally during the past few years.

UNC Matmen Lose Opener

A strong Washington and Lee wrestling team ruined North Carolina's 1963 debut Saturday, handing the Tar Heels a 16-14 defeat.

Two UNC regulars were sidelined with weight problems. Subs were forced to fill in and both lost their matches. Even so, Carolina stayed with the host team all the way. A win by a fall in the final match would have netted a tie.

Winning matches for UNC were Russell Simmons by fall in the 137-pound division and Steve Lister, Jerry Cabe and sophomore Paul Wellstone—all by decision.

in between easy wins over Boston College and UCLA. The Falcons made it three in a row at the end of the season by toppling New Mexico and edging Colorado.

Meanwhile, over in Raleigh, the N.C. State Wolfpack has its hands full preparing for a big tough Mississippi State eleven, which will furnish its opposition in the December 21st Liberty Bowl.

The Bulldogs were the big surprise of the Southeastern Conference this fall, knocking off such powers as Auburn and LSU and tying Mississippi and Florida. The team's only two losses were heartbreaking defeats at the hands of strong Alabama and Memphis State teams.

The Wolfpack also resumed drills yesterday after a two-week lay-off. Their game at Philadelphia will share the national TV spotlight that day with the Bluebonnet Bowl in Houston. The latter affair pits Baylor against LSU.

Other bowl games are the Orange (Nebraska vs. Auburn), the Sugar (Mississippi vs. Alabama), the Cotton (Navy vs. Texas), the Rose (Illinois vs. Washington), and the Sun SMU vs. Oregon). National powers Pitt and Memphis State will be watching television on New Year's Day with the rest of the nation. Both schools were left out in the cold by bowl selection committees.

61 Jets Are Sabotaged

WILLIAMS AIR FORCE BASE, Ariz. (UPI)—61 jet training planes were discovered sabotaged at this desert Air Force base and an immediate investigation was launched, base officials said Tuesday.

Wing Commander Col. William C. Lindley Jr. said electric wires leading to the gears of the T38 supersonic trainers were cut.

He said the planes were expected to be put back into operation late Tuesday and the base's training schedule would not be seriously disrupted.

Lindley said the damage "could have had very serious and dangerous consequences had it not been discovered" in pre-flight checks Monday.

The planes carry no classified equipment and are not armed.

Federal Bureau of Investigation agents and other military security agents immediately began investigating the incident.

Workers Are Needed By UNC Campus Chest

Betty Ward of the Campus Chest is looking for men to help fill the ranks of her organization.

The Chest, which is the only official charity drive on campus, has an overabundance of pretty secretaries but very few men to provide the necessary leadership.

The Chest has a variety of activities planned for this year, including the annual carnival, an auction of valuable merchandise, and a program of related events.

The Carnival, which is the highlight of the Campus Chest drive, has netted as much as $6000 in the past, and she hopes for a large sum this year. "There is no fair in Orange County, and therefore we have had large turnouts in the past," she said. Besides the usual rides, such as the ferris wheel and the tilt-a-whirl, the residence halls, fraternities, and sororities will be asked to set up booths, and a competition will be held to determine the most original one.

The Chest's special events committee has sponsored air shows and parades in previous years to help in the pubilcity for the drive, and added money will be collected for it in door-to-door canvassing.

Cosmo Club Holds Dance

The Cosmopolitan' Club's semi-formal Christmas Ball will be held in the Naval Armory Saturday night.

Music for the Ball will be provided by the Southern Gentlemen, a 10-piece orchestra, and will consist of standard ballroom dance music with some twist and rock and roll sounds. During intermission excerpts from Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite will be played.

An executive committee of club members, headed by John Clinard, will handle all arrangements.

Dook To Inaugurate Dr. Knight As Prexy

Duke University will inaugurate its fifth, and youngest, president today.

He is Douglas Maitland Knight, 42-year-old English scholar and former president of Lawrence College in Appleton, Wis., who took over the reins of Duke on Sept. 1, succeeding Dr. Deryl Hart.

The formal inaugural convocation, which will be open to the public, is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Wednesday in Duke Indoor Stadium. B. S. Womble, Winston-Salem attorney and chairman of the University's Board of Trustees, will install Dr. Knight in the presidency.

The inauguration ceremony will have the added distinction of observing Duke University's 39th Founder's Day. It was on Dec. 11, 1924 that James B. Duke signed the historic Duke Indenture which provided for the creation of Duke University, using small, but highly regarded, Trinity College as its nucleus.

Dr. Knight brings to Duke an impressive record of accomplishments at Lawrence College and service to higher education at the national level.

Nine years ago he went to Lawrence from his English literature teaching post at Yale University, where he had taught for eight years after receiving A.B., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees there. Lawrence has gained a nationwide reputation as a spawning ground for presidents of major institutions. Dr. Knight's own predecessor there was Harvard University President Nathen M. Pusey.

DR. DOUGLAS M. KNIGHT

Dr. Knight's administration at Lawrence saw the college prepared for university status, which it expects to gain in 1964. There also was a 150 per cent increase in the book value of the endowment and a doubling of the book value of the college's phyiscal plant. A successful development campaign was waged, and faculty salaries were increased and the curriculum strengthened.

He holds four honorary degrees including the LL.D from Ripon, Knox asd Davidson Colleges, and the Litt.D. from St. Norbert College.

Viet Nam Premier Warns Newspapers

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (UPI)—An irate Premier Nguyen Ngoc Tho Tuesday accused Saigon newspapers of sensational reporting and outright fabrications and warned of a government crackdown on the local press.

The ruling military junta restored press freedom after the Nov. 2 coup which overthrew the regime of the late President Ngo Dinh Diem, who had maintained tight controls over news.

LBJ Asks Kennedy 50-Cent Piece

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Johnson asked Congress Tuesday to honor the memory of John F. Kennedy by authorizing a new 50-cent piece bearing the late President's portrait.

If approved, the new coin would replace the 15-year-old Benjamin Franklin half-dollar and would be the first of the denomination to bear a likeness of a former president.

In his message to Congress, Johnson indicated his request was prompted in part by similar appeals from "many Americans" in letters written since Kennedy's assassination on Nov. 22.

The same sort of widespread public demand was credited by a Treasury spokesman for adoption of only two other such designs, the Lincoln penny in 1909 and the Roosevelt dime in 1946.

NSA Wants Books For U. Of Algeria

The National Student Association today begins a drive to collect books for the University of Algiers.

In June of 1962, the Library and Faculty of Medicine of the University of Algiers were bombed by terrorists of the O.A.S. (Secret Army Organization) in a last wave of violence before Algeria gained its independence. The library building was gutted and over a half-million books were destroyed, included many irreplaceable manuscripts of Arabic literature.

The local drive to collect books is part of a nationwide drive conducted by N.S.A. and the World University Service, according to committee spokesmen. The drive will continue until the Christmas vacation.

"What we really need are textbooks in all disciplines," Vance Barron, a member of the committee, said yesterday. "The University of Algiers has an immediate need for textbooks, but background publications in all disciplines that would be suitable for any university collection are also needed."

"The University of North Carolina Press has already generously offered any of the books it has published," he continued. "We are also soliciting books from faculty members. We are hoping that they may have many books which are sent to them by publishers which they do not need.

"We also feel that students have an important obligation and an excellent opportunity to help their fellow students in another land at a time of great need," Barron said. "Students are pretty limited in their means, but we hope that many will be able to donate textbooks. We all know that the Book Exchange doesn't pay that much for used texts."

Because of the high cost of shipping the books overseas, it will be necessary to select the books carefully, Barron added. "We are seeking quality above quantity, but we need both. Of course many of the books donated will have to be weeded out. These will be sold and the money given to the University of Algiers."

There are two central collection points on campus—at Graham Memorial and at Y Court. To supplement these, the presidents of each living unit on campus are being requested to facilitate collection in their respective dorms, fraternities, or sororities, according to Barron.

All books donated concerning the sciences and mathematics should be up-to-date, he continued. Other kinds of books that would be useful he listed as follows: background publications on social, cultural, political, and economic affairs; atlases, dissertations, scholarly journals, dictionaries from and into French or Arabic. General books such as would be more suitable to public library are not needed, he emphasized.

By GARY BLANCHARD

Republican State Senator Charles W. Strong, denying any wrong intentions, said Tuesday he has no plans to remove his title of "Senator" from insurance advertising materials which are "blanketing the state."

In a telephone interview, Strong also said he has found "Tremendous Eastern support for my candidacy for governor," and no support for the Speaker Ban law "once I explained to the people what it's all about."

Strong, on a three-day tour of eastern North Carolina to gauge support for his candidacy for Congress or the governorship, said he does not think anyone is misinterpreting his title use to imply State endorsement of the student life insurance plan he is selling, nor should they .

The Greensboro legislator and minister said he has assured himself that no illegality or "conflict of interest" is involved in his title use.

The Valley Forge Life Insurance Company of Reading, Pa., which Strong represents, last week began bulk-mailing sales materials about the insurance plan to parents of North Carolina college and high school students.

Strong is identified several times in the material as "Senator" Strong. He said last week that this was done to eliminate confusion between him and another Charles Strong in Greensboro.

"We have checked the insurance laws," he said Tuesday, and can find nothing illegal about this. I checked with the company this morning and they felt there's no conflict of interest whatever — I'm not seeking business with the State, and the legislative session is already past."

"The comment I've had so far is just 'Forget it.' I know my intentions and motives were right and still are," he said.

Strong said his company is "blanketing the state" with mail to the parents of college students and high school juniors and seniors about the plan.

Of his tour Strong said he is finding that "the Speaker Ban 'scare' is just not there in the grass roots, once I explain to the people what it's all about — that this is an emotional piece of legislation designed to appeal to our glands rather than our minds."

The controversial law was enacted last summer without formal hearings or prior notice. Criticized as "vague and unnecessary," it forbids known Communists, advocates of violent overthrow of the U.S. or State constitution or Fifth Amendment pleaders in loyalty cases from speaking on state-supported campuses.

Cameron Ave. Becomes One-Way Street Today

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Cameron Avenue, from the Carolina Inn to Grimes dormitory at Raleigh Street will temporarily become a one-way street beginning today.

The one-way traffic situation, going west to east, was necessitated by a series of ditches being dug to accomodate new power and telephone lines.

"The new lines will replace old existing power lines which are inadequate," J. S. Bennett, director of development said.

"It will step up the line voltage three times, from 2400 volts to 7200 volts," he said.

Bennett said the one-way traffic situation will be in effect for about 30 days, but he added that much of the work will probably be done during the Christmas holidays.

"We will try to minimize traffic congestion as much as we can," Bennett said. "But it is important that everyone be aware of the one-way traffic. That way, with everybody cooperating, the situation can be handled easily and the project can be completed as soon as possible."

After the Cameron Avenue work is completed, the street will be opened again for two-way traffic. Meanwhile, the line will be moved down Raleigh Street to Woollen Gym where it will connect with the present line.

"While the project may cause some inconvenience, it will be much better for everyone concerned in the long run" Bennett said.

9 Jailed In Danville

By JOEL BULKLEY

DANVILLE, Va. — This city lived up to its reputation as a center of racial segregation Tuesday when at least nine persons were jailed and others were harrassed by police after trying to gain service at five downtown businesses.

About 25 persons participated in sit-ins at a Howard Johnson Restaurant, the Charcoal House, The Charcoalette, Virdan's Motel Restaurant and the Capital Theater Tuesday afternoon. Danville authorities refused to say how many of these were arrested.

A witness at the Howard Johnson sit-in said he saw a young Negro girl beaten and kicked by two Danville policemen when she refused to move from her seat at the soda counter.

Of the nine being held on trespass charges, only two would give their names, authorities said. Bond was set for these two at $300 apiece with trials scheduled for Dec. 13.

Authorities said many of those arrested gave their names as "Freedom Now," "Black And White Together," "Equality and Freedom Now."

Those arrested in Danville's first anti-segregation demonstration in 16 weeks were believed to include three local Negro ministers, who serve as leaders of the Danville Christian Progressive Assn. and three field workers for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee and the Congress of Racial Equality. The other three were reported to be seniors in the John M. Langston High School.

A large-scale street demonstration protesting the "Absence of an open city" was scheduled here yesterday, but only a handful of students appeared willing to participate. A parade permit for the march had been sought Monday by integration leader Rev. L. G. Campbell but was turned down because it had not been requested 30 days in advance.

Several hundred students were jailed in Danville early last summer and about 35 others reportedly were injured during civil rights demonstrations.

Pacifist Lecture Is Given Tonight

David McReynolds, 34, of the pacifist War Resisters League will speak in Carroll Hall tonight at 8 p.m. on "The Relationship Between Peace and Civil Rights."

McReynolds, a Californian, is being sponsored by the local chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and the campus chapter of Student Peace Union (SPU) for whom he is an advisor.

Since his college career at UCLA in the early 1950s, McReynolds has been a part of movements against college ROTC and Civil Defense.

He ran for Congress from New York City in 1958 on the Socialist Party ticket backed by Norman Thomas. He has been a field secretary for War Resisters League since 1960.

All students and guests are invited.

Johnson Presses For Rights Bill To Get To Vote Soon

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Johnson instructed his congressional lieutenants Tuesday to continue jogging the House and Senate for action as soon as possible on the controversial civil rights bill.

At a White House conference, he told the leadership to impress on House members and senators that the issue cannot be "ignored for another 100 years or even another 100 days.

Howard W. Smith

The legislation recommended by the late President John F. Kennedy would be aimed at ending racial discrimination in jobs, voting, schools and public accommodations. At present the bill is bottled up in the House Rules Committee headed by Rep. Howard W. Smith, D-Va.

Smith, a foe of the legislation, has promised to begin a rules committee hearing on the measure sometime in January after Congress convenes for the new session.

However, proponents of the bill have launched an effort to pry the bill from the committee and bring it up for floor action by means of a discharge petition. When the petition was formally submitted Monday, 131 members quickly signed it but there was little immediate hope the move would win the 218 signers required.

The best estimate was that the total would run to about 165 or 170 signers. Should Smith continue to stall action, however a renewed drive might send the move over the top.

Speaker John McCormack told newsmen that Johnson was "very much interested in the discharge petition."

He then read from a typewritten note: "The President urged us to impress on the House that this great issue cannot be ignored for another 100 years or even another 100 days."

Johnson in his first appearance before Congress following Kennedy's assassination, assigned top priority to the civil rights and the tax cut bill which had been advocated by his dead predecessor.

The civil rights bill is expected to win House approval when it is brought to the floor.

Intern Program Is Worth Doing

By HUGH STEVENS
(Second of four articles)

"I can think of no more valuable experience than the State Summer Internship program," Bill Aycock said.

"I don't usually get enthusiastic about something like this, but this is worth it," Gil Stallings agreed.

Aycock, a junior from Chapel Hill, and Stallings, a law student from Louisburg, were two of the twenty participants in the 1963 Internship Program in state government, and both are enthusiastic about it.

Both were employed by agencies of the N. C. government last summer for ten weeks, a period in which they worked on special government projects and attended seminars concerning every phase of North Carolina life.

"I came away tremendously impressed with abiilty and efficiency of the people who run our state," Aycock said. "I found people who are dedicated to good government, with a deep sense of responsibilty to North Carolina."
in North Carolina.

Stallings, who worked for the Public Welfare department, studied the characteristics of children placed in foster homes in North Carolina.

"These were children who, for one reason or another, had to be taken from their permanent homes temporarily," he said. "I was designated to undertake a series of statistical studies, the findings from which I presented in conferences with the agency heads."

Both Stallings and Aycock agreed that such work was not only rewarding, but educational as well.

Aycock was employed by the State Board of Education and did research on community colleges

"This is the best way I know of to get first-hand experience in the workings of the state," Aycock commented. "You can read a lot in textbooks, but nothing matches the laboratory experience of seeing the work first-hand."

"This is a unique program," Stallings said, "in that it offers participation in the dual capacity of student and employee."

The two students also agreed that the seminars were as rewarding and informative as the actual work.

"We heard leading political scientists, the heads of state agencies, state political leaders, and many others—in short, the leaders in every important aspect of North Carolina life," Stallings said.

"I personally found this the most rewarding segment of the program. I think it was the key to the whole summer."

Aycock also said he found the seminars "interesting and informative." "They were outstanding, in that we met the actual persons responsible for our state, and could ask them questions about their work."

"The discussions begun in the seminars were continued by the students when they sat down together during their free hours," he said. "I think that living with the other interns (in a dormitory of N.C. State) helped us to learn about all the agencies, as well as our own."

"It was certainly stimulating to live with the others in the program and share their experiences, questions, and insights," Stallings commented.

Both gentlemen agreed that their impressions of the state were not so much changed as solidified by participation in the program.

"Probably the greatest value of the program is getting leading students interested in being responsible, participating citizens of North Carolina," Stallings indicated. "While none of them may seek public office or state employment, they will be members of boards, committees, and action groups that will influence the future of North Carolina."

Aycock agreed, saying, "the program unquestionably builds leaders for the state. In the future, we will always come back to this experience as one which gave us a new understanding as citizens."

Both urged students interested in the state to apply for the program, whatever their future field of endeavor.

"It offers an unequaled opportunity," they said.

(Tomorrow the DTH will continue with profiles on student participants in the intern program.)

Halfway Measures Won't Quite Work

First Of Two Parts

There is no doubt in anyone's mind that the parking situation has gotten out of hand in Chapel Hill, but there seems to be doubt in everyone's mind as to what the solution might be. The town of Chapel Hill has moved to alleviate the problem problem somewhat, but it seems to us that the burden for solving the current mess falls mainly on the shoulders of the University.

What has the University done about its burden? Well, so far it has gotten around to the conclusion that a problem exists and that it probably ought to do something about it fairly soon. That is some help, but if the University were to act immediately in this area, it would only be about five years too late.

There are now more than 5,000 registered student automobiles on or around this campus, and only 2,900 parking spaces provided for student use. That leaves about 2,100 automobiles to roam the campus, many taking up the crowded parking facilities provided for the staff, which by itself throws another 2,600 cars into the morning parking derby.

So where do we go from here? Well, one of the plans currently being discussed by the University proposes we go up. Up in the form of triple-decking the Bell Tower parking lot. This seems very imaginative at first glance, but with a little scrutiny proves to be just a more bizarre measure in the stop gap approach that is being used. The two decks would provide some 800 more parking spaces for students and would cost about $2,150,000. It would be necessary to charge each student with an automobile an annual fee of $50 to help finance this project. And after blowing all that money there would still be over 1,300 student cars with no place to go. It is obvious that we could not long afford this type of expensive measure which makes us run hard to catch up to being only two or three years behind.

The other idea which is getting serious consideration is further limiting the number of students who may have cars in Chapel Hill. This measure, painful as it seems, might become absolutely necessary sometime in the future regardless of how adequate a solution to the present problem is found. Sophomores would be the first to lose the privilege, with academic criteria for juniors and seniors probably following.

But there does seem to be at least one way out which is not quite so painful, and this will be discussed in the second part of this editorial tomorrow.

The Campus Chest Needs You!

Betty Ward, the Chairman of the Campus Chest Drive this year, is looking for several hundred strong, hard working volunteers to help with this year's drive, and tomorrow afternoon is the last chance to get interviewed for the many positions that still need to be filled.

In raising the funds, the Chest will again sponsor the Campus Carnival and the annual auction at which they auction off all manner of valuable items. And while these events are fun for the whole campus, a great deal of work must go into both of them. But that's only the beginning of the work that must be done if the drive is to be a success and the volunteers just haven't come flocking down from the hills yet.

The Campus Chest is the only official charity drive on campus, and gives most of us some chance to salve a guilty conscience about all the good deeds we somehow neglected to do since the last drive. And plus that, the money collected benefits causes that usually need to be benefitted.

So far those people who feel the need to get out and do something they are sure will be constructive, this is a good time. And for those men who aren't moved by charitable instincts, there are always a raft of good looking women working on this drive, and they might need your help.

Let's Call Them What They Are

By SYDNEY J. HARRIS
Syndicated Columnist

It's an interesting peculiarity of our social order that while the term "Communist" is flung around frequently and often carelessly, its opposite number, "Fascist" is hardly used at all.

In Europe, this is not the case. People have no hesitancy in speaking of the right-wing radicals as "Fascists," for this is what they are. To speak of them as "extreme conservatives" is a foolish contradiction in terms.

And it seems quite plain to me that there are many more Fascists and Fascist sympathizers in the United States than there are Communists and their sympathizers — unless, of course, you care to adopt the Fascist line and suggest that everyone who favors staying in the UN and retaining Social Security is a Red fellow-traveler.

We seem to be so exercised about Communist influence in this country, which is negligible, both in numbers and in appeal to the American temper. Yet, year by year, one sees a Fascist spirit rising among the people, although it is called by many other and softer names, and has even achieved a certain dubious respectability in some circles.

There is no reason why there shouldn't be a Fascist movement in this country; nearly every nation has one. But it should be called by its right name, and it should be willing to accept the consequences of its position, as the Fascist parties do elsewhere.

It has no business masquerading as "Americanism" or "conservatism" or "patriotism," when its whole philosophy of man is based on a hate-filled exclusiveness that would shock and affront the conservative American patriots who founded this country.

What is distressing about this movement is the tacit or open support given to it by men who genuinely think of themselves as "conservatives," and who do not understand the implications of right-wing radicalism any more than the German industrialists understood what would happen to them when Hitler swept into power with their support.

Just as Communism always begins with an appeal to "humanity" and "equality" and ends with inhuman despotism, so does Fascism always begin with an appeal to "nationalism" and "individualism," and ends with a military collectivism far worse than the disease it purports to cure.

These twin evils are the mirror-image of one another. It would be the supreme irony if, in rejecting the blandishments of Communism, we fell hysterically into the arms of Fascism disguised (as always) as Defender of the Faith.

An Overwhelming Vote

Honors List

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Today the Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers publishes its first honors list. Hats off to these patriotic loyal public servants:

Senate President Clarence Stone.

Secretary of State Thad Eure.

Assistant A.G. Ralph Moody.

Representatives L. J. Phipps and Ike O'Hanlon.

State Senators Irvin Belk and Adam Whitely.

These men run the risk of political suicide and general unpopularity by being among the first and most forceful to speak out in favor of this measure against the creeping Communist menace. For their efforts, they have suffered the most vicious attacks on their service and their personal qualities.

Also mentioned must be distinguished news analyst Jesse Helms, long admired for his courageous stands in defense of Free Enterprise and his penetrating discussions of sometimes suppressed news items. He has devoted much of his unfortunately brief air time to educating citizens with regard to House Bill 1395 (?), the law labelled by propagandists as the "Gag Law."

Congratulations, gentlemen, on being the first to be selected—by overwhelming vote—for the Student Committee List.

Equal?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Re: "John Carswell Meets The Press" (Editorial in DTH, Sunday, December 8).

I quote: "It might interest Mr. Carswell to know that the policy of this paper in covering news is to be sure that all parties to any controversy have an equal opportunity to be represented in our coverage of that controversy."

Mr. Carswell, like any rational person who reads the DTH, knows what DTH "equal opportunity" actually is. Any comments that Mr. Carswell would have cared to make concerning the civil rights demonstration would probably have been twisted in such a manner that he himself would have difficulty recognizing them. The "famous neuroses of the owner of the Colonial Drugstore" were certainly not demonstrated when the DTH reporter was told to leave. If any neuroses were demonstrated by this act, they were the "infamous neuroses" of the DTH staff.

If the DTH would actually present "equal opportunity" news coverage, maybe students and Chapel Hillians would call it the Daily Tar Heel again, instead of the current "Damn Tar Heel."

Luxury

Editors, The Tar Heel,

As a new faculty member down from the Northeast and as yet unfamiliar with Carolina's long tradition of gracious living, I can find few tears to shed for the plight of the student with no place to park his car.

Let us admit that, except for the student who lives over a mile from campus or for the physically disabled student, the use of a car for daily commuting is a luxury. This is all the more true down here where the weather is less of a hinderance to getting about. It is downright presumptuous to expect this or any university to divert its funds to providing storage space for such luxuries. The solution to both the traffic and the parking problems is a simple one, to reduce the number of students who operate cars in Chapel Hill. The criteria for determining who may or may not have a car are a matter for the appropriate dean.

The problem of how to get across campus quickly remains nonetheless. Due to heavy auto traffic here, some of us, including some of us faculty members with the right to park in staff parking lots, have realized the difficulty and expense of commuting by car and prefer to ride bicycles. The bicycle, by the way, has been found to be the solution to the transportation problem on many campuses: Princeton, Yale, Harvard, Amherst, Michigan, Vassar, Wellesley, Smith, Swarthmore, and Oberlin, to name just a few.

Now I know that bicycles are not at present very fashionable on this campus, and I am learning that being fashionable is very important on this campus. But bicycles are practical, sufficently fast, and, best of all, economical.

Christmas Spirit:

An East German agreement to permit West Berliners to visit friends and relatives on the East side of the Berlin wall during Christmas is seen as the result of economic pressures. Trade between East and West Germany now amounts to about $220 million annually each way, a drop in the bucket to West Germany but vital for the East.

It is based entirely on barter, which the West Germans cut off at will whenever East German deliveries fall behind schedule. Recently, the West Germans indicated they might be prepared to grant the East German Communist regime long-term credits in exchange for an improvement in the lot of the East German people. Officially, the East Germans scoffed at the idea. However, the Red decision to let West Berliners visit East Berlin at Christmas may be the first down payment.

Common Market:

A showdown rapidly is approaching between France and West Germany on Common market farm price policies. In the German view this could mean the downfall of the Common Market and, at least temporarily, the dream of a united Europe. The French are insistent that German farm subsidies be cut to the same level as that paid to French farmers, and that French agricultural products receive preference within the Common Market, composed of France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg. The Germans are resisting on both counts. Chancellor Ludwig Erhard's Christian Democrats drew their strongest support from German farmers.

Johnson vs. De Gaulle:

De Gaulle can be expected to take his time about setting a date to meet with President Lyndon Johnson. Insiders say the crusty French leader wants to see first whether Johnson is likely to be as tough on such matters as nuclear sharing as the late President Kennedy was.

Negro Responsibility

To Help His Cause

The Smithfield Herald

The remarkable publisher of the Cheraw (S.C.) Chronicle, A. M. Secrest, delivered a remarkable speech the other day to South Carolina Negro school teachers assembled in Cheraw. It was a speech of a man of good will who has proved himself, on many occasions, to be in sympathy with the aspirations of Negroes for equal opportunity. It was a speech of a Southerner who is aware of the white man's responsibility to give the Negro his due, but it also was a speech of a man who understands the responsbility of the Negro in his struggle for civil rights.

What the Cheraw publisher said to Negro school teachers in South Carolina deserves an ear in North Carolina—and wherever people of good will of both races seek to work out peaceful solutions to race problems.

Mr. Secrest did not condemn the Negroes for making their protests. He did not accuse them of disturbing "good race relations." Indeed, he said that race relations "are far healthier today, in the midst of marches, sit-ins, demonstrations and mass arrests, than they were when the voices of protest and conscience were still."

But he talked to the Negro school teachers about responsibility that is a two-way street.

"The white South," he said, "thanks to the militancy of the new Negro, to nudges and reminders from the Supreme Court and the White House, and, above all, thanks to the white man's own innate sense of decency and justice, is beginning to assume its responsibilities by granting equal opportunity to all. It is now your responsibility to see to it that your students are prepared to grasp these new opportunities and are ready to meet the duties and obligations of first class citizenship as well as to enjoy its privileges."

This friend of the Negro spoke plainly—and wisely—to the Negro when he declared: "Civil rights battles may be fought in the street, at lunch counters, and theatre box offices, in the courts and polling places, but the war will be won—or lost—in the classroom."

As Mr. Secrest observed, demagogues like Barnett or Wallace are not the most dangerous enemies of Negro aspirations.

"Your most dangerous enemy," he said to the Negro school teachers, "is within . . . If you are tolerant of second-class performance within your own ranks, if you allow yourselves and your students to fall below certain standards of excellence, you will not overcome.

"Absenteeism, ignorance, sloth, immorality, school dropouts, delinquency; these are the real enemies of any people. Many white people, consciences rubbed raw by constant reminders of past and present guilt, are psychologically ready to find some scape goat for their sins of omission and commission.

"Every time there is a cutting scrape or shooting, robbery, mugging or rape; every time there's a canned heat party or some evidence of anti-social activity committed by a Negro, there are whites ready to justify their prejudices by saying, 'Well, that's a nigger for you.'

"Like the Jew in Hyman Kaplin, you've got to be 'twice as good to go half as far.' This is, however, nothing new in the American story. Every national group has had to wrestle with much the same problem."

So spoke a white Southerner who had earned his right to say these things by his own demonstration of responsibility in facing the race problems. The wisest of the Negro leaders are saying the same things to their people.

Let it be said that the Negroes are not the only Americans guilty of educational or moral failures. Many a white man fails also. And if we dare not withhold civil rights from the white race because some of its members are irresponsible, we have no justification for denying opportunity to the Negro race because many Negroes are irresponsible.

But, as we have observed in our land, public acceptance of a minority group is not based on such logic. And a minority group, indeed, must be "twice as good to go half as far." As more Negroes understand this hard reality, the task of their leaders will be easier, and the burden of the whole nation in this hour of crisis will become lighter.

Creative Jeweler Hopkins Is One Of The Best In US

By LOWRY WHITE

"Contemporary jewelry should be designed and created for the person who wants something different, not for the mass market."

This is the feeling of Charles Hopkins, creative jeweler of Chapel Hill.

He is not just an ordinary jewelry designer. He has created some very original and unusual designs for rings, pins and necklaces.

He wears a ring which has a gem "floating" in a casing of 14 carat cast gold. It is the only ring of its kind in the world, for the intense heat involved in casting would normally crack the gem. He alone knows the secret of how the ring is made.

"Gems depend on light for their beauty—the more light, the more beautiful. This is especially true of diamonds, as diamonds have no color," he says.

Using this principle, he has created an engagement ring with a gold reflector behind the diamond which shines light from behind the gem.

"When I get engaged," a young coed in Hopkins' shop remarked, "I'm going to make my husband by me that engagement ring. I'd just love to have a ring like that."

Her enthusiasm is typical of persons who enter the shop and see Hopkins' original designs.

During W.W. II, he became interested in jewelry. While traveling with the Merchant Marines in the Pacific, he picked up materials and tools in each port and devoted his spare time to jewelry.

They would make "any souvenir to send home" while waiting on the ships. Hopkins made jewelry.

After the war, he returned to UNC to study anthropology, then joined the staff at Duke for two years. In Egypt he studied the work of the gold-and silversmiths.

In 1955 he atended the Granbrook Academy of Art in Michigan.

When he opened his Chapel Hill store on Franklin Street, he was immediately swamped with orders from all over the country.

In 1957 he traveled to Taxco, Mexico, to study the methods of metalworking in the workshops of Antonio Pinada and Antonio Castillo.

He works mostly with sterling silver and 14 carat yellow gold. He has 15,000 gems in stock now, importing diamonds from Antwerp, opals from Australia and Mexico, Jade from Hong Kong, pearls from Japan.

There are less than 100 creative jewelers in the country, and he is of the best. Today he has one of the finest libraries on gems and jewelry in the country.

Hopkins' business in Chapel Hill has expanded to such great proportions that he now employs three assistants to help him with his work.

His workshop is a mass of intricate tools for making his jewelry. He has designed all the show cases in his store also. Everything in the store is created and made by Hopkins or some of his assistants.

Christmas Time Is Here Again!

By CYNTHIA LEONARD

It takes more than a cold, bleak day to dampen the holiday spirit of the children of Chapel Hill.

On this certain afternoon Franklin Street was almost deserted. The partially assembled nativity scene on the lawn of the Methodist Church looked cold and lifeless.

The gay Christmas decorations in the store windows seemed somehow tired and lacked the festive touch. Faint strains of Christmas carols coming from the "Support Your Community" both only added to the atmosphere.

The few people on the street also mirrored the day's dejection. Twenty people passed. A boy and girl walking hand in hand were the only two who smiled.

The scene in a Chapel Hill dime store was somewhat more lively. Only a few shoppers were in the store, but most of them seemed more aware of the approaching Christmas season than the people on the street.

Two middle-aged women were consulting each other at the decorations counter.

One, apparently a school teacher, said exasperatedly, "I was thinking of letting them make Christmas tree ornaments but honestly . . ."

Then she shook her head ruefully and added, "But they have so much glee—It's just wonderful."

Her companion was looking for some "simple decorations."

"I don't know whether to get this stuff or not. I know I'll be sorry if I do. I just know I'll be sorry" she said again and again.

A tired clerk looked at her watch repeatedly.

With the can of sewing machine oil, the picture hangers, notebook thread in one shopper's cart was a package of Christmas cards and some red and green ribbon.

An elderly gentleman unloaded a cart heaped with various yuletide decorations at the check-out counter. His bill was $18.50.

College girls pondered over wrapping paper.

But the store belonged to the children.

"Is he a balloon?" asked a wide-eyed little boy, pointing to a rubber reindeer.

His harried mother's only answer was to quickly pull him away from the counter. She hurried him to the front of the store to find his smaller sister gazing longingly at the candy display, a miniature Santa Claus, his pack filled with lollipops, in her hand.

While the mother was patiently explaining why they could not buy any candy, just then, a loud whistle at the back of the store located the boy who had again wandered away.

By the time the two reached him, he had abandoned the whistle to return to the reindeer which "must be a balloon, but why doesn't he pop?"

At the doll counter two 12-year-olds were making a valiant effort to hide their fascination with a "Chatty Cathy" doll.

The excitement and gleeful anticipation of the holiday season which the children radiated lifted much of the gloom from the faces of shoppers and clerks alike.

These young shoppers did little to increase the store's business, however. As one short, chubby lad at the top counter solemnly told a clerk who had inquired if she might help him, "I have to wait for Santa Claus to bring me this."

Good Browsing And Books In Bull's Head Bookshop

By MARGARET LANRY

The Bull's Head Bookshop is the "browsing room of the library."

UNC students go there regularly to ramble through area after area of attractively-covered books.

Manager Helen B. Hogan sparkles with life when she talks about her work in the shop.

The kindly grey-haired lady who trained at Simmons School of Library Science in Boston loves the people and the books she comes into contact with.

"We are interested, first of all, in having students read," she said. "We want them to read before buying books. Here we provide a comfortable place for students to sit down and read."

The Bull's Head Bookshop was established in the late 1920's by UNC Professor of English Howard Mumford Jones, and by 1930 it was a "flourishing enterprise."

Mrs. Hogan has been its manager since 1958.

"The Bull's Head is a very unusual bookshop," she said, "because of the student orientation."

Most of the inumerable books are thus ordered with the student's needs in mind.

"The reading material is slanted toward University subject matter," Mrs. Hogan said. "About 75% of the books are either on the required or suggested reading list of UNC professors."

Mrs. Hogan describes student reading interest as "extra-ordinarily high." She attributes much of this renewed college reading to the honors programs in various University departments.

"You can almost spot one of the freshman honors students," she said, "by the way he rushes from class to look at books."

The professional librarian points to the advent of "fine" paperbacks as a boost to student reading.

"The paper-bound industry," she said, "has made more scholarly and intellectual books available for student reading."

Most of the student book selections continue to be directed toward this classroom supplement.

"Students just don't have too much time for pleasure reading on the best-seller list," she explained.

Tie Season Opens For Lady Shoppers

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Christmas season is upon us and with it Christmas ties. So to the women who buy 75 per cent of men's neckties in the United States an appeal to reason and a return to the classics.

Manufacturers load the shelves each year with wild and improbable designs to the point where millons are returned the day after Christmas by unhappy males who wouldn't be caught dead in a tie that was inspired by a chintz slipcover or the aurora borealis.

This does not mean that a man must wear forever the classic paisley prints, the repps in well-ordered regimental stripes, the wool challis with its tiny spaced pattern, the small allover patterns of floral or geometric design. But if he does he will be well dressed.

If a man wants to wear some bright and vivid tie that is different let him pick it out himself. But if you feel compelled to buy someone a tie stick to the patterns where it is almost impossible to make a mistake.

Perhaps the classic of them all is the ancient madder, made with muted colorings on a heavy foulard napped to give a frosted or dusty appearance and a feel almost like suede. They come in small geometric prints or printed in small geometric designs.

The colors of the pure ancient madder — and the name comes from the madder root which in ancient days was all there was available — are green, blue, chocolate brown, a soft yellow and a terra cotta. They are muted colors and definitely not loud.

Another classic, perhaps for the older man, is a Macclesfield, named for the London suburb where French Huguenot refugees set up their own looms many years ago. You see them at weddings in a silver grey but you see them at business in neat and shiny patterns. The Spitalfield, similar, is another classic.

For the ultra-conservative man —and that includes the well-dressed college man—there are paisley's and foulards and ancient madders for wear with button down collars and natural shoulder suits. They can come in silk or wool—the more successful businessman would run to silk.

Then there is the repp, which refers to the faint diagonal rib effect of the weave and Not to the diagonal stripe in which they are usually made. They can be in solid colors, sometimes with jacquard figures woven into them. But mostly they are in stripes inspired by the old English regimental tie—and some of the authentic regimentals are sold in the United States to the horror of the English.

A tie that is fast becoming a classic are neat and conservative cravats with tiny figures woven into them for what Madison Avenue would call an "individualized" effect — golf clubs for golfers, school emblems if college memories are fresh, dividers for an architect, a caduceus for a doctor.

Bike Gift Puts Strain On Santa Claus

Santa Claus had better add a few more reindeer and a trailer to his sled to make room for the more than one million bikes he will be delivering to happy youngsters and adults this Christmas.

With over 30,000,000 bikes already in the hands of America's young and young in heart, this year's crop of Christmas bikes will bring membership in the cycling fraternity to an all-time high.

To illustrate Santa's delivery problem — if all the American made bikes he will deliver were placed bumper to bumper, they would reach from Pittsburgh, Pa. to Shrieveport, La. — about 750 miles.

If the weight is any factor in getting his sled off the frozen runway at the North Pole, Santa's cargo of sturdy middleweight and lightweight two wheelers will tip the scales at about 35,000,000 pounds—17,500 tons! Add to this several tons of lights, horns, bells, baskets, kick stands and fox tails now set for Dec. 25th delivery and the ttoal weight figure will be astronomical.

Bikes are more popular than ever before. Why? Partially because "kids is kids" and the bike is still the best way to light up a youngster's eyes on Christmas morning. Grandparents seem most cognizant of this fact, for they are the largest single group of gift-bike buyers.

Also, adults of every description — colege students, young mothers, village patriarchs, entire families have switched to bicycles as their vehicle to physical fitness.

UNC Yules—Exams To Gooseliver

Pre-Christmas activities are in full swing here this week, and the chief complaint among students is that they're much too busy going to orphan parties, buying gifts for needy families and trimming trees to study for the inevitable quizzes.

Judging from old issues of the Daily Tar Heel and the Chapel Hill Weekly, the overwhelming concern with the holiday season hasn't always dominated the University community at this season. Back in the "good old days" of the quarter system, pre-Christmas exams overshadowed holiday gaiety.

ST. MARY'S SOLICITS

By 1910, there was a little more Christmas activity. One story read, "The King's Daughters will give a charity bazaar Friday afternoon. Come and get your sweetheart a Christmas present." Another item stated that seniors at St. Mary's were getting out a Christmas edition of their publication, the Muse, and "the Business Manager will be perfectly charmed to receive subscriptions from the University boys." The final pre-holiday edition of that year, however, noted only that "Quite a number of the students are leaving the Hill today."

LAUNDRY HAS A BLOWOUT

In 1923, The Chapel Hill Weekly appeared, giving still more attention to seasonal events. The December 20 issue described a banquet given for employees of the University Laundry as follows: "G. H. Paulson had the menus written out on startched collars—just the plain article of commerce. It was a fine blowout!"

And the same paper announced that Frederick H. Koch, "chieftain" of the Carolina Playmakers had presented a reading of "The Christmas Carol." The story stated that "A candle was on the table beside the reader, to make the spirit of Dickens seem more at home."

A community Christmas festival was also held that year. In "Chapel Hill Chaff," editor Louis Graves commented on certain "cherubs" who presented a pageant at the festival. "If they grow up to be as charming as they are now," he said, " they will endanger the equilibrium of the community." Graves also described a local family reunion at which 12 were present for dinner. "This is reputed to bring on bad luck," he commented, "but it didn't spoil the Pendergraft's appetites."

WHITE ELEPHANTS AND BULLDOGS

In 1924 the University's 28 voice a capella choir presented a program of Christmas music which also entertained groups in Durham and Greensboro "as a community Christmas gift from Chapel Hill." There was a community tree on Christmas Eve and members of the Country Club had a "white elephant party" on December 27 to swap duplicate Christmas gifts.

The holiday must have been fairly dull, though. On January 8 the lead story read: "The most exciting event in this community in the Christmas holiday was a fight on the post office plaza in the late afternoon of Saturday the 27th, between the Saville bulldog and the Nathan bulldog."

UNC students of 1929 apparently realized the religious significance of the holiday, and wrote "Open Forum" letters on religious topics. A Tar Heel columnist complained, however, that these exhibited "little of the tolerance for another person's view which characterized the founder of their religion."

GOOSE LIVER FROM HARRY

That same Christmas, community and campus musical groups worked together to present "The Messiah," and sandwiches from Harry's were wrapped in Christmas paper. Cards inserted read: "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year—Goose Liver."

By 1944, although the campus was partially taken over by Naval pre-flight students, the papers were full of accounts of Christmas projects.

The administration, apparently afraid that some students would be too eager to begin their vacations, warned that "all students who have unexcused absences from classes before or after the Christmas holidays are subject to loss of membership in the student body."

The students even asked the administration for a Christmas present—they wanted the paint, put on campus buildings by Dook, cleaned off.

IT'S TIME FOR UNDERWEAR

Perhaps the most interesting items in these old papers are the seasonal ads. These are few and far between in the earliest issues, but in 1910 the A. A. Klutz firm warned, "It's time to get that UNDERWEAR. Cold weather is coming!"

In 1923 and 1924, advertisements were far more direct than those of today. Andrews Cash Store Co. said, "Get Ready! Select Your Presents before They are picked over. No gewgaws, no toys, but a well selected line." And Andrews-Henninger Co. advertised: After all, the bulk of gifts are hosiery and handkerchiefs. We have a beautiful line of these items."

$118,920 IN GRANTS

Ten scientists in the UNC School of Medicine have received fellowship awards and grants-in-aid totaling $118,920 from the American and North Carolina Heart Associations during the past year, it was announced recently by William Ivey, chairman of the state heart group's board of directors.

The grants were among 39 totaling $257,931, awarded to scientists at various medical research centers throughout the state during the past year.

Recipients of the Heart Association's research awards are Drs. Billy Baggett; Thomas U. L. Biber; Eric L. Fearrington; Carl W. Gottschalk; Herbert S. Harned, Jr.; George Johnson, Jr.; William E. Lassiter; Werner Straus; Isaac M. Taylor; and Benson Reid Wilcox, all of Chapel Hill.

Dolls And The Superdolls

What may be an uncomfortable sign of things to come was disclosed recently with the introduction of a new "super" doll that speaks seven languages, one delivered in a refined upper-class British accent.

How this polyglot plaything may affect the young and impressionable just learning to master their own tongue, no one dares say but the trend is portentious — dolls are becoming more educated, more complex, more sophisticated and alas, less cuddly.

This is a far cry indeed from the dolls of only a few years ago that would shed real tears and plainly sob "mama" when you pressed their plastic middle. The dolls of today are a hardier crew by far, especially their insides, which are rigged for a variety of digestive noises ranging from the burp to the gurgle.

Children have been hugging rag dolls for at least 4,000 years —since the time of the Pharaohs of ancient Egypt. The Egyptians also made dolls of wood, ivory, limestone, terra cotta, even bronze — many with limbs that moved up and down. One doll found by archeologists even had real hair!

Greek youngsters of 3,000 years ago fondled some of the strangest dolls ever seen—women with giraffe necks and funny little jointed legs poking out from beneath voluminous bell skirts.

The first paper dolls—actually jointed cardboard puppets — became such a rage in 18th century France that men, women and children played with them on the streets. The most elaborate models, designed by court painters, cost as much as $7500 apiece.

Dollmaking for children began as a modern industry in 1800, with manufacturers in various countries turning out dolls of china, wod, leather, even wax. In 1825, there was a major "breakthrough": a doll with eyes that moved. As early as 1862, a New York inventor patented a walking doll.

A liquid asset to the top industry appeared in 1932: the first drink-wet doll; part of the post-war baby boom was the first doll with plastic skin that felt like a real baby's. Shirley Temple was the first of the "famous people" dolls.

What's the biggest trend in dolls today? It's none other than the "fashion doll" which went over so big 600 years ago!

Thanks to the ingenuity of toymakers, these dress-up dolls lead rich full lives.

It's A Very Merry Christmas As Holiday Traditions Vary

From Daily Iowan

Cattle in the German Alps will have the gift of speech; in Italy the bees will sing; and in Czechoslovakia, St. Nicholas descends from heaven on a golden rope to reward the good children and punish the bad.

The traditions and superstitions are different all over the world, but they all signal the coming of Christmas.

Children the world over receive gifts on Christmas, but not always from an Americanized Santa Claus.

In the northern European countries, St. Nick, riding a white horse and wearing a tall red hat, brings presents to the good children.

Hungarian children believe that a heavenly angel brings a basket of presents and a decorted tree on Christmas. In Spanish legends, the three Magi pilgrimage to Bethlehem each year, leaving candy and toys for the children along the way.

In some parts of the world, the spirit of Christmas is a woman. Polish children receive their gifts from the good star, a beautiful woman who is veiled in white. This is similar to the Sicilian belief that Christmas is a lovely lady who lives in an enchanted castle all year. On Dec. 25 she travels through the towns distributing gifts.

In Province, France, Christmas gifts are collected rather than distributed. A large wicker figure, called Melchoir after one of the Magi, rides from door to door on a donkey, collecting "goodies," such as figs, candy and cakes. The collection is left at the local church, where the poor help themselves to their gifts.

In the British Isles, Christmas is a vigorous holiday, where the religious services are combined with festivities and games.

The Wassail cup, the traditional container of Christmas joy, comes from the English tradition of wassailing, or toasting the health of fruit trees. The wassailers gathered in the orchards and drank and sang such toasts as:

"Wassail the trees, that they may beare
You many a plum, and many a peare:
For more or less fruits they will bring
As you do give them wassailing."

Sometimes cider was sprinkled on the trees, but more often the celebrators found a better use for it.

The Welsh play football as part of their Christmas activities. Members of two adjoining parishes gather on each of the 12 days of the holiday and "have a go at it." The games originally were played between two rival clans.

Bells are the most well-known Christmas musical instruments except for a few nationalities.

The bagpipe provides the traditional Christmas music, not in Scotland, but in Italy. According to Italian tradition, the Virgin Mary's favorite instrument was the bagpipe.

In the last days of Advent, bagpipe palyers salute the shrines of the Virgin Mother to sooth her in the last month of her pregnancy. The players also stop at the carpenter shops in respect to St. Joseph, who was a carpenter.

The Moravians celebrate Christmas Eve musically with trumpets and trombones. The early Moravian settlers of Bethlehem, Pa., inadvertently prevented an Indian attack with their holiday music. The Indians, who were not used to the brassy noise, retreated fearfully into the forest while the unknowing celebrators played on.

The symbol of the Christmas tree has the same meaning all over the world, but in reality, it isn't always a tree. In France, evergreen branches are used to make a Christmas hoop to be hung from the kitchen ceiling. The hoop is decorated with apples, nuts and colored eggshells.

In the German countryside, a wooden pyramid is often substituted for a tree. The pyramid is adorned with colored paper, lights and green twigs. This Christmas tree, like the more sophisticated aluminum one of America, can be saved from year to year.

The Mohammedans, who have only a cultural interest in Christmas, designate the date palm as the holiday tree. Moslem legend contends that Jesus was born under a withered palm that suddenly blossomed with fruit. Mary ate the dates and was refreshed; as a result, the Moslems give dates to women in childbirth.

Trees play another large part in Christmas tradition in the form of the Yule log. The log is brought in from the forest and decorated with greens. Slavic peoples sprinkle wine on the log to create more sparks, which signify prosperity for the family.

In Russia, where Christmas celebrations are frowned upon, the peasants used to decorate their homes like stables in memory of Christ's birthplace. The floors were covered with straw and the animals were brough in to participate in the remembrance.

Gift Wraps For Bottles Makes It Easy

The trend in Christmas wrapping for 1963 seems to be toward ready-made bows and the easiest way possible of covering the container in which the gift came.

Bottles have always been difficult to wrap, but one company has marketed a product which will help bottle-givers considerably. The company is selling packages of bags of various sizes and colors suggesting that they be used for wrapping bottles, toys, novelties, or candy.

The bags are made of a strong glossy material and need only a ribbon tied around the top to complete the wrapping. Four bags with matching tags cost $1.

The new ready-made stick-on bows may render obsolete the index finger as the most important instrument in ribbon tying.

A handy complement to the ready-made bow is the fancy box that needs no wrapping. The two are likely to be the resort of the last minute gift wrapper.

To add a little cheer to a postman's day, a company is now manufacturing decorated parcel post paper which gives a green touch to the drab brown usually sent through the mail.

The decorated paper can be bought in a parcel post wrapping kit which also contains cord and labels.

For those who believe in wrapping their presents themselves but are bored with the traditional bells, Santas, and churches on gift wrappings, there is a new paper out with sayings on it.

The sayings include "I don't usually give Christmas gifts . . . I drink 'em," and "Dogs bark at me, children bite me, old ladies hit me with their umbrellas, but Santa Claus loves me."

Often people find themselves after Christmas left with reams of gift wrapping because they were being conservative while using it. However, after Christmas, the yuletide wrapping is of no value until the next December.

Some farsighted person has solved this problem. On his gift paper it says Congratulations, Happy Aniversary, Happy Birthday, Best Wishes, Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. The user need only cross out the inappropriate salutations.

Negro Christmas Is Told In Book

The poem beginning "Twas the night before Christmas . . . is probably the biggest favorite of all Christmas stories for children.

The real title of the work is "A visit from St. Nick." A new edition of this story by Clement Moore is now in the book stores.

This new book with the illustrations by Grandma Moses is certain to be a popular one.

Another book good for adults and children is "Christmas Is a Time of Giving," one of a series by Joan Walsh Anglund.

"Christmas Gift," an anthology edited by Charlemae Rollins, is a collection of poetry and stories beloved by Negroes. This newly-published book included the works of various Negro authors.

A very famous book which came out two years ago is "Baboushka and the Three Kings" by Ruth Robbins.

It is the retelling of an old Russian Christmas folktale. It gives children a sense of the vastness of Russia and of the great sweeps of snow. It also helps them realize that children in Russia celebrate Christmas much as we do.

A beautiful book for children, is "The Christ Child." This is a Christmas story from the Bible According to St. Luke. Illustrations are by Maude and Miska Petersham.

The story of two little boys who witness a miracle on Christmas Eve as a reward for their generosity is told in "Why the Chimes Rang" by Raymond MacDonald Alden.

ANOTHER DAY, ANOTHER DEAN

Dr. Alan K. Manchester, a prominent Duke University official will retire from two administrative posts on Aug. 31, 1964, to devote full time to teaching and research.

Dr. Manchester, will relinquish the posts of Dean of Trinity College and Associate Dean of Arts and Sciences, according to Dr. Douglas M. Knight, president of the University.

In announcing the retirement, Dr. Knight said a special faculty committee has been named to recommend a successor, and that the appointment of a new dean is expected by the end of the current academic year. Dr. Arlin Turner, chairman of the English Department, is committee chairman.

Sports Courier

THE BIG BROOKLYN lefthander got that wild look in his eyes at the left side of the circle Monday night. There were six and a half minutes left, UNC was down 62-74, and it was time to go to work.

He faked Ted Deeken right, drove left, leaped up. Three pumps and spins later, the ball was dropping through the hole, and referee Toby Pace was gleefully rushing to the key, blowing his whistle.

As Billy Cunningham was to say later, "I heard the whistle and thought 'good,' I'll get a foul shot. I started walking to the line. It never occurred to me he called it a charge."

It never occurred to Bryan McSweeney either, until Pace began slapping the back of his own head (the offensive foul motion). McSweeney, whom Deeken banged into as Cunningham was up in the air (behind McSweeney), immediately brought Pace's parentage up to debate. But the tall ref was not willing to take the affirmative. He called a technical on McSweeney, and right then and there the 400-mile plus DC-3 plane trip back from Lexington turned into a 4,000-mile trip.

The move by Pace toward Cunningham was his fourth one of the night to the Kid (Charlie Eckman called Billy's first), and you just had to feel something was fishy because the guy helped eliminate Charlie Shaffer (four fouls in eight minutes) as well as Cunningham (four in twelve minutes).

Meanwhile, Kentucky played clean and fair with no infractions after Cotton Nash picked up number four (17:02 left), soph Larry Conley number four (12:48) and Ted Deeken number four (7:34). None fouled out.

Before letting the grapes get too sour, I'd better refrain from intimating Pace is the best example of a "homer" since the Giants flooded their infield for the Dodger quickies. I also will not say that a veteran observer who's been around took one look at Pace before the game and knew the Tar Heels were in trouble. Seems he's not new to controversy.

And in closing the case of the mysterious night blindness, the fact that the student newspaper at Kentucky (the Kernel) placed Toby Pace on its annual superlative list of the "Worst in Their Field" does not detract any from the bad effects his performance left on the olfactory senses.

Three Charges—Now Come On

AT LEAST THREE of the four fouls called on Billy by Pace in the second half (the last three) were charging violations, and anybody who has watched The Big C play in his varsity experience here cannot remember that ever happening.

When the half ended (after UNC has come from five points back to take a six-point lead then fall behind again by four) Carolina, down by 40-36, was nevertheless in good foul position. It had one man with two fouls (Shaffer) while all the rest had only one.

Kentucky, though, had its big cheese, Nash, in trouble with three personals, and a few others had two.

Now Cotton Nash seldom gets into foul jeopardy early, and in order to understand the situation Monday, you must also understand that seldom does Cotton Nash go man-for-man with Billy Cunningham, either.

Later, Billy said nice things about Nash like "He's a tough ballplayer, a real good jumper," etc. But you got the impression that his impression wasn't all that good. In any case, the comparison of the two which a lot of people anticipated before this game, turned out to be nonexistent.

Cunningham is a hustler, a fighter, a competitor—in addition to being a great basketball player. Nash is just a good one. He is moody, a pouter, a sulker. And, if Kentucky starts to lose this season, Adolph Rupp may find himself in the same position as last year—when, as UNC saw in its game at Lexington, Nash just quit on him.

As advertised, Kentucky has given the big Cotton-top some help this season. Ted Deeken and Larry Conley, both better all-round ballplayers than their more-publicized teammate, could probably play for anybody.

These two, with Terry Mobley and Charlie Ishmael (resurrected from the bench in the UNC game), led the Wildcat assault midway through the second half which stretched a five-point margin to 11 (66-55). Carolina never got closer than nine after that, and when Cunningham left on the charge (6:22 to go), Rupp called out his wolves.

The 77-70 Crow Was Delicious

TWO NIGHTS EARLIER at Charlotte, what Coach Dean Smith has been saying all along became apparent when Mike Cooke and Shaffer showed 11,639 "This is not a one-man team."

The crow Smith serves up—to these young guys who think they know so much about basketball and don't mind writing about it—was delicious as Cooke and Shaffer got 14 and 13 and played fine floor games in the 77-70 victory over a good Indiana team.

You would have thought I had condemned Ann Margaret to see some of the cold glares from the team after the articles on Saturday. But, however naive, we always like to believe we had something to do with getting them aroused for the Hoosiers. And the stares were nothing compared to the feeling I got when Cunningham crumpled to the floor after being charged by one of the VanArsdale butchers.

It was his hip, not his knee as first expected, and the moaning and writhing Billy went through on the floor sent Smith, Ken Rosemond, etc. looking for the nearest gas.

But Cunningham got up, walked around and later came back in. Whew. More later, The Kid, accustomed to playing against basketball players, not street fighters, ran into another VanArsdale. The guy's jump shot may have been off, but he threw a nice right cross which drew blood from Billy's mouth.

Cunningham stopped play, borrowed some water from a furious Branch McCracken (Indiana coach) and went on to get 29. And he didn't even heave on the crazy flight to Lexington. But that's another story.

Our Swimming Team (Yeah!) Here Tonight

North Carolina's powerful swimming team lauches a three-meet week tonight when Duke invades Bowman Gray Pool at 8:00 Coach Pat Earey's tankers also meet Clemson and South Carolina in away races later (Friday and Saturday) as they open a quest for the ACC crown which they shared with Maryland and N.C. State last year.

The Blue Dolphins, currently 3-0 after a successful road trip (48-47 over Navy, 54-41 over Princeton), have plugged some trouble spots in the butterfly and breaststroke events where sophomores Fred Lipp and Rick Forum have been outstanding.

Lipp set a school record of 2:05. 7 in the 200-yard butterfly against Navy (breaking Vinnie Simonton's 2:09.3). Two other school marks were topped when the 400-yard medley relay team swam to a 3:46.3, and Chip Smith won the 50-free in :22.3 (breaking All-America Thompson Mann's :22.4).

"Picking up wins against two teams of the cailber of Navy and Princeton this early in the season is a pleasant surprise to me," commented Coach Pat Earey. "Lipp and Forum have filled big holes, and we are very happy to see our All-Americans Mann and Harrison Merrill get off to a fast start."

Mann and Merrill, the two M&M wonder boys, made up half of the Carolina 400-free relay team (others: Chip Smith and Davis Roberts) which puled out victories in both the big races—against Navy.

Scale Model Of The Woollen Gym Addition

Those Sweatbox Days Are Nearly Over As Woollen Gym Is Starting To Grow

UNC basketball fans who have packed into Woollen Gymnasium's 4,500 bleacher seats to watch games during the past few years only have about a year to go before going to a UNC home basketball game will be much like going to the movies.

Bids on the seven contracts for what will be the largest rigid frame structure in North Carolina will be opened here on January 8. The structure will be the auditorium addition to Woollen Gymnasium, for which the General Assembly has appropriated $1,200,000.

The Charlotte Coliseum is about the same size as the planned Woollen auditorium, but is a dome structure. Architect Donald Stewart of Chapel Hill, who designed the auditorium, said the addition to Woollen would be ready for use early in 1965, depending on delivery of steel orders.

The tremendous engineering problem of roofing a span about 300 by 200 feet has been solved by what is known in engineering circles as a compression ring above and a tension ring below. The steel compression ring, 24 feet in diameter, will support steel and concrete arms, the longest of which will be about 160 feet. The arms will be connected to steel and concrete uprights around the outer edge of the auditorium. The lower ends of the uprights will be connected by 2½-inch cables to a steel ring 16 feet in diameter under the auditorium floor. Thus, the uprights' pull on the tension ring equals the arm's push on the compression ring, supporting the roof.

The auditorium, which will contain 6,500 permanent theater-type seats in a three-quarter bowl arrangement facing the existing Woollen Gym, will displace the present east Woollen parking lot and one of the five playing fields laid out on intramural field. Entrance to the building will be from the street, and from the east side, with service entrances in the rear. If bleachers are erected on the west side of the auditorium, its total seating capacity will be near 10,000. The structure has been designed so that no spectator will be farther than 88 feet from the playing floor. There will also be a stage in the auditorium, for other functions besides basketball games, such as plays, speeches, and indoor commencement exercises.

The auditorium floor will be about eleven feet below the present east Woollen parking lot level, opening into the locker rooms underneath the present varsity basketball court. The roof will be completely closed in to provide optimum light conditions for television coverage of activities in the auditorium.

The whole auditorium will almost completely hide the present east side of Woollen Gym, connected to Woollen by expansion joints with a tolerance of about three inches.

Mr. Stewart has already received nine bids for the general contract, from one South Carolina and eight North Carolina construction companies. The other six contracts for the job are for electricity, heating and ventilation, plumbing, a sound system, elevators, and seating. Mr. Stewart started working on the plans for the building last February.

Baby Frankie-Baby Retrieved

Frank Sinatra Jr. was released by his kidnappers today and 54 hours of angush ended for Frank Sinatra and his divorced wife, Nancy.

Sinatra, Sr., paid $240,000 for the return of his son, but young Sinatra said he had talked his captors into releasing him even before the kidnappers knew their telephone orders had been followed and the money had been placed in a satchel at a veteran's hospital near the home of Mrs. Sinatra.

Pauling Urges U. S.-Soviet Nuclear Pool

OSLO (UPI)— Nobel Peace Prize winner Dr. Linus C. Pauling urged the United States and the Soviet Union Wednesday to place their nuclear weapons under United Nations control.

Pauling outlined his proposal for a system of joint national-international control of stockpiles of nuclear weapons in a lecture before the Nobel Institute.

Pauling Tuesday received the 1962 peace prize, which was not awarded until this year.

The scientist appealed to the governments of the world to institute a system under which the United States or the Soviet Union could use nuclear weapons only with the approval of the United Nations.

Harvard At It Again

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI)— Harvard University boys want girls to visit their dormitory rooms and bedrooms 15 hours more each week—even if it leads to sexual intercourse, according to a report filed Monday with the school's administration.

"If these deep emotional commitments and ties occasionally lead to sexual intercourse, surely even that is more healthy than the situation a generation ago when 'nice girls' were dated under largely artificial circumstances and sexual needs were gratified at a brothel," the report by a committee of the Harvard Council of Undergraduate Affairs said.

John Knowles Autographs Books Today

John Knowles, UNC's Writer-in-Residence, will autograph books today in the Bullshead Bookshop.

Knowles, author of the award-winning novel "A Separate Peace" and "Morning at Antibes," will be in the bookshop, located in the basement of the library, from 4-5 p.m.

The autograph party is sponsored by the bookshop and the Writer-in-Residence committee of the YMCA.

Knowles, who came to UNC this year, teaches English 34 and 35. These are creative writing courses concerned mainly with the writing of short stories. He is presently working on a fourth novel, as yet unnamed. His third is now at the publishers and will be released in the spring.

Encounter Panel Hits Fraternities

By JIM NEAL

Social fraternities were accused of having detached themselves from the purposes of the University Monday night on WUNC-TV's "Encounter."

Dr. John Clayton, moderator of the weekly panel discussion show, noted the primary functions of fraternities are social, and the purposes of the University are educational.

Dr. Clayton backed up his charge saying fraternities claim they have study halls and so forth, and claim they look for superior men.

Yet their record in the University tends to show they are only about average, he said. This tends to show they are taking superior men and turning them into average men.

Charlie Battle, president of the Interfraternity Council, countered with the argument that fraternities are social organizations, and are not set up as promoters of scholarship. He said, "Scholarship is strictly an individual matter," and any kind of extracurricular activity can detract from study time.

Clayton replied that all extracurricular activities hinder scholarship, but only fraternities claim to promote it with required study halls and the like.

In another blow to the system, Prof. Walter Spearman of the School of Journalism warned that fraternities can not survive simply as social clubs, and said he looks forward to deferred rush to help solve some of the evils of the system.

Other members of the panel were Tom Davis, graduate student in the Duke Divinity School and former secretary of the campus YMCA, and Wayne King, managing editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

Dr. Clayton later commented that the discussion generated more heat than light.

The discussion primarily cen-

Money Bills Top SL Slate Tonight

A number of appropriations bills and a resolution concerning student representation on Faculty Committees will highlight tonight's Student Legislature session.

One of the money bills would provide a new truck for the Daily Tar Heel, and another will allow for a paid intramural manager for Carr Residence Hall.

A bill sponsored by Lanny Shuff proposed a revolving TV fund for residence halls, so that old television sets may be retired and replaced on a periodic basis.

Under the system, all sets would be classified according to age and state of repair and repair systematically. New sets would be bought through the UNC Purchasing Department.

The Faculty Committee resolution, sponsored by Neal Jackson, urges "further student participation" in such groups as the Faculty Committee on Honors and the Buildings and Grounds Committee.

Bob Spearman, legislative speaker, said student leaders feel that ex-officio participation in such committees is important.

"We have made extensive efforts to have students placed on faculty committees so that their views may be heard," he said, "but so far the faculty is unwilling to include students."

The Building and Grounds committee, Spearman said, "decides on sites for new parking lots, residence halls, and other construction, but there is no student representation in the group."

"We think the student voice is important, and should be heard," he concluded.

The body will consider a resolution by Don Carson to name UNC's new 975-man residence hall "John F. Kennedy Hall."

New legislators Mike Chanin and Hugh Wilson will be formally sworn in tonight, and Spearman will report on the recent resolution calling for the creation of an ad hoc committee "to affirm the principles of Student Government."

Hall Urges Applicants

By HUGH STEVENS
(Third of four articles)

Frank Hall, a UNC junior who took part in the 1963 N. C. Summer Internship Program in state government, yesterday urged all students interested in government to apply for the 1964 program.

"The deadline for applications is this weekend," he said, "and I certainly hope no one will miss out on such a great opportunity."

Hall, an Alexandria, Va., resident, applied for the program because he was "interested in government," and wound up working last summer for the N. C. Prisons Department.

"It was even more exciting and informative than I had anticipated," he said. "I did not realize beforehand the amount or the importance of the work which we would be allowed to handle."

Hall said that he and another intern worked on such projects as a re-evaluation of the work release program in N. C. prisons, and writing a training manual for the department.

"We were treated as old-timers within the department," he said. "Our criticisms and opinions were considered and, in some places, applied to the department.

"It was one of the most interesting experiences I've ever had," Hall said. "We had students from all fields, not just Political Science or History. I don't think that the selection committee is looking just for brains, but rather for above-average students with a fresh approach who are willing to work, and who are interested in the future of North Carolina.

"One of the highlights of the summer was a trip all over the state in which we talked with department employees concerning the work release system, whereby prisoners work in the daytime and return to their cells at night.

Tickets

Of the 12,391 tickets received by the University for the Gator Bowl, less than 3,000 remain. The deadline for returning unsold tickets to the Gator Bowl is Saturday, but it appears now there will be none to return.

The report is that no tickets are available in Jacksonville.

The Athletic Office at Chapel Hill hopes to fill orders and mail all tickets late this week.

Cusick, 3 Others On Trial Today

Trial of appeals by four persons convicted on charges resulting from anti-segregation protests last summer is set for 9:30 a.m. today in Orange County Superior Court.

Pat Cusick, Christine Glover, Mrs. Peter Van Ripper, Charlie Cotton and 11 others were convicted in August in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court. Floyd McKissick, defense attorney for the Chapel Hill Committee for Open Business (COB), filed notice of appeal for twelve Negroes and three whites. They were convicted of trespassing, obstructing traffic and blocking the sidewalk during a demonstration July 19.

Following the trial it will be decided whether the appeals of the others will be heard this week or at the next term of court beginning Feb. 24.

The trial this morning was set for Wednesday but was continued until a jury could be selected. The four are being tried for sit-ins and marches held this summer. One sit-in at the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants' Bureau occurred two weeks after the COB had staged its largest protest march of nearly 500 persons.

The COB has since been replaced by Citizens United for Racial Equality and Dignity (CURED).

GASKIN TO SPEAK HERE

His subject will be "Women in Old English Literature."

Jeff Adams Is Elected As UP Head

Jeff Adams, a sophomore from Nashville, Tenn., is the new chairman of the University Party.

Adams was elected in the party meeting Tuesday night. A member of Beta Theta Pi and the wrestling team, he succeeds Mike Chanin, who resigned Nov. 20. Adams was formerly the party's Sergeant-at-Arms.

In his acceptance speech, Adams called for more party support for the programs and candidates.

"The UP is a party of action and we hope to make it even more active in student affairs," he said. "We feel that we can give better representation to the students and will make a great effort to capture more seats in legislature during the spring elections."

Two proposals were unanimously adopted by the body.

The first endorsed the actions of the President and Vice-President of the Student Body in their efforts to reinstate students on the Faculty Judicial Review Board.

The second, introduced by Bo Edwards, endorsed the efforts of the IFC in its attempts to gain social privileges for bull pledges and inactives. The proposal also endorsed the deferred rush which will start next year.

HOOTENANNY

A Hootanny Folksing will be held at Memorial Hall Friday at 8 p.m.

The Folksing will feature a bevy of regional balladeers and folksingers, including Marinda McPherson, the Rovers, Forest Covington, Carter and Margot and "The Hitchhiking Troubadour," Mike Williams.

Master of Ceremonies will be Jimmy Capps, Raleigh disk-jockey well-known for his "Our Best To You" radio program.

Tickets will be $1 a person, $1.75 a couple and all proceeds will go to the Heart Fund.

Parade Promotes Voter Registration

A torchlight parade and other plans to promote voter registration among the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Negro population were announced at a public meeting Monday night.

John B. Dunne, local organizer of the registration campaign, and Shelton Sparrow, member of the County Elections Board, discussed the coming elections and answered questions concerning the voter registration drive at a meeting at Orange Savings and Loan.

According to Mr. Dunne, the campaign will be conducted through three different communication channels in order to reach all members of the community: communication, through organization, and door-to-door.

"We hope to reach the mass of people by passing out leaflets in the churches and by giving out leaflets for children to take home from school," said Mr. Dunne. "Also we hope to have a torchlight parade, complete with a band and speakers, the night before the registration books open.

"There are also plans to use the Negro and white church organizations. We hope the Negro churches and various fraternal organizations will stress the importance and significance of voting and registering. We are also looking for volunteers to do paperwork, typing and many other odd jobs and we hope that many of the local white organizations will help us in getting the campaign organized.

"We have divided the Negro community into five major areas for door-to-door canvassing. Each area will be headed by a captain and will be divided into four sections. The sections will contain 15-20 houses and each will be headed by a chairman. We hope that every eligible voter will be personally contacted and reminded to register. Babysitting and transportation services will be provided, so there is no reason anyone can't register."

To qualify for registration, a voter must have lived in the State for one year and in his precinct for 30 days. A literacy test will be given at the discretion of the registrar. New registrants will be urged to name party affiliation at the time of registration. Voters who register as independents may not vote in the party primaries.

Racial Protests Will Continue In Danville

DANVILLE, Va.—A Negro integration leader said Wednesday anti-segregation protests would continue at downtown theaters and restaurants here despite a fair employment practices clause enacted by the City Council Tuesday night.

The Rev. L. W. Chase of the Danville Christian Progressive Association said "The Negro has made one step further in being included in the democratic process at Danville." But, he added that demonstrations would continue at facilities where nine persons were arrested Tuesday.

Chase said the council's employment amendment, approved by a 5-3 vote, was the result of meetings between the races held during the past three weeks.

"We talked over the problem of hiring practices and asked if they would spell out in writing that hiring at City Hall would be conducted on the basis of merit and not color."

The clause, which amends the city's hiring ordinance, provides that "employment and promotions shall not be refused on the basis of race, creed or color."

"We still have nothing, however, in the way of assurances that segregation of facilities will be ended," Chase said.

Big Daddy Hits Town

By DAVID KNESEL

Burl Ives fans can expect to see their folk-singing idol in the Chapel Hill-Durham area "for some time to come."

This was revealed Tuesday morning in an interview at Chez Kemp, which Ives "just wanted to look over."

Ives, who is over six feet, would stand out in any crowd. He's huge. His heavy black cardigan bluged at the buttons. His silver goatee bobbed up and down as he talked. He wore a leather cap with a visor and woolen ear flaps.

"I'm here to lose weight," he said. "I'm on this rice diet, under the care of Dr. Kempner at Duke Hospital. This diet is largely mental. If you set your mind like a clock you can do it. I'm here to go the distance. When the big boss (Kempner) says to quit, I quit."

Run For Your Lives! The Sky Is Falling!

By PETER PAN

The sky will fall late Saturday night in a late, late, late show, featuring Chicken Little and the Geminids.

The combo will be at its best from 3-6 a.m. Saturday morning, after a Friday night warm-up.

That night a meteor shower will sprinkle the sky with luminous streaks moving as fast as 45 miles per second. The sight is worth watching.

Actually, the Geminids, as the December 13 meteor shower is named, will start at about 10 p.m. the night of December 13. But because of the Earth's motion, the time between 3 and 6 a.m. is the best for watching meteors.

Meteor showers are best visible between 3 and 6 a.m. because at that time North Carolina is on the leading side of the Earth as it whirls around the sun. Consequently, Earth and meteoroids are mostly likely to converge during that time, giving the meteoroids better opportunity to become meteors, possibly even to achieve the ultimate triumph of meteoritehood.

Geminids, so named because the point in space from which it seems to originate roughly corresponds with the position of of the heaviest meteor showers the constellation Gemini, is one scheduled for 1963. Single observers have spotted as many as fifty streaks of light slicing the sky in one hour from Geminids. And (assuming the sky is clear that night), Geminids will be the better for the fact that there is no moon that night.

GUNGUS HO!

The Communications Committee will meet Thursday at 4 p.m. in the Grail Room. The Yack photo will be taken at the time. A business meeting will follow.

Discussion Features SP Meet Tuesday

Two members of a Student Party panel Tuesday night agreed that the number of class officers should be reduced. A third member felt that they should be abolished altogether.

"Class elections are simply popularity contests," said Arthur Hays, the panelist who advocated the abolition of class officers. Hays, a member of Student Legislature, said that class activities did not bring students into the mainstream of student government "where they could really be effective."

"The reduction of class officers would allow the top people to run for office and would convince people that class officers need not be figureheads," Hays concluded.

Woody Harrison, senior class vice-president, commented that class officers are the only group that can promote class unity and class identification. "Neither class activities nor the YMCA could be described as directly affecting student government, but they serve valuable purposes nonetheless for the students that participate in them," he stated.

"The office of Social Chairman serves no obvious function and could be eliminated," Harrison said. He felt, however, that at least four officers were necessary for the class cabinet to function.

Bill Aycock also favored the reduction of class officers. Aycock, sophomore class president of the class of '65, felt that class officers could be reformed by cutting down the number to two or three and by co-ordinating their activities through the inter-class cabinet.

The three panelists agreed that finances were the major problem facing the class officers. "They are just like four hungry dogs fighting over a bone that has been gnawed clean," Arthur Hays put it graphically.

Also at the meeting, SP Chairman Neal Jackson formally announced his resignation as party chairman.

TV Show Needs Live Audience

WUNC's hootenanny radio show needs a live audience.

Kent Evans, host for the program and director of special events for WUNC, feels that a great deal of favorable reaction has been generated by the Tuesday night series, but a lack of adequate publicity has caused the shortage of live spectators.

The hootenanny series was initiated this fall, and draws talented folksingers from the UNC campus and the Chapel Hill area. So far nearly 20 different performers have appeared and most of them more than once.

Jim Opton, frequently a featured performer on the show, feels that there are many talented UNC students who still haven't appeared on the air yet. "It would help the popularity of many groups in the area if they would just take time the time to come in and tape a show," he said.

Evans indicated that next semester the show might travel to individual living units to make their tapes. "This way we would be assured of getting a better crowd," he added.

See Yon Tree? Watch — Thwack!

In the initial part of this editorial yesterday, we discussed some of the proposals currently under consideration which are aimed at solving the increasingly drastic parking problem on and around campus. As we noted, the two solutions which have been advanced by the administration so far, triple-decking the Bell Tower Lot or drastically reducing the number of students permitted to keep cars in Chapel Hill, seem at best to be stop-gap measures which promises no lasting solution.

There does, however, seem to be at least one way out which is less expensive than the bell tower proposal, less painful than further limitations, and which provides a good bit more flexibility to handle the future of the University.

As mentioned by Suzy Sterling, in her DTH series on parking in Chapel Hill, behind Craige dormitory are several hundred acres of land which are for sale to the University. This land could be converted into an enormous parking lot for a fraction of the cost of putting decks on the Bell Tower lot and would provide far greater space.

Now we are aware that this area is a long way from the center of campus, and we wouldn't dare suggest such a stark idea as having Carolina Gentlemen and their ladies hoof it in each morning. But many, many students bring their cars to school to use primarily for weekend dating and trips, and find very little other use for them. These cars could be kept in this lot during the week and used whenever necessary, and would serve to encourage those who now use their cars to go from their dorm or fraternity to Lenoir for breakfast to leave then in the lot. For those who commute to school and use the lot daily, the University could provide a campus bus service running from this lot, past Craige and Ehringhaus, Victory Village and then into the middle of the campus. This service could be on a regular schedule with ten or fifteen departures from the lot during the periods of heavy traffic.

It is estimated that the cost of buying, insuring and maintaining a bus and paying a driver would be approximately $10,000 for the first year and $2,600 per semester thereafter. A nickel fare could be charged to help defray these expenses, and this would make it considerably cheaper for the students than paying the $50 dollars per year fee for the Bell Tower. It would also solve the problem of how the Craige and Ehringhaus students are to make their 8 o'clock classes on bitter winter mornings.

If the land were purchased it would only be necessary to pave that portion which is needed now, and pave more at a later date as the circumstances dictate. The automobile registration fee could be raised to $5 dollars per year, or $10 if necessary, to pay for the purchase and paving of the land.

And while we are reticent about destroying more of Chapel Hill's dwindling woodlands, it must be noted that this area is so sufficiently removed that the natural beauty of the campus and town will not be seriously impaired.

This solution is only one possibility, and others may be forthcoming, but if the problem is to be permanently laid to rest, the approach will have to be bold.

'From The Standpoint Of Lost Innocence'

Prof. Albert Coates may be gone from the Institute of Government, which he was instrumental in setting up and which he ran until retiring last year, but he is decidedly not forgotten.

Alternately damned and praised as an administrator, Coates has a reputation for being plain-spoken — often unforgettably so. The latest people to find that his reputation is well-deserved are some of UNC's law students, to whom Coates teaches Criminal Law.

Some of them are so taken with his utterances, as a matter of fact, that they are "publishing" him on a Law School bulletin board with some regularity.

Some examples:

"Speaking from the standpoint of lost innocence . . ."

"I know my limits, and when it comes to punch it's unlimited. But my God, that spike has been punched."

"My footsteps were so soft, they wouldn't crush the dew drops . . ."

"Why, that's a watered down degree of temporary insanity."

Too bad Prof. Coates isn't available for instruction to instructors. His point-making prose could be used to wonderful advantage in such courses as "Latin & Levity," "Physics and The Scientific Pun," or "Modern Civilization Made Interesting."

This Season of Sweetness And Light

The Chapel Hill Weekly

If anyone had reason to doubt that the milk of human kindness courses smoothly in Terry Sanford, the Governor's panegyric last week to State Senate President Clarence Stone should lay that reason to eternal rest.

Senator Stone, you might recall, was against Terry for Governor in 1960. As Senate President, Stone introduced the first sour note in Terry's last Legislature by barring newsmen from the Senate floor, a sour note that echoed throughout the 1963 General Assembly.

Shortly after the session was under way, it was clear to one and all that Senate President Stone regarded the 1963 Legislature as his and Tom White's show, not Terry's.

Under Sir Clarence's leadership, the Senate set a modern record for stalling. One of Governor Sanford's major pieces of legislation, Senate redistricting, gathered dust throughout the regular session, with much credit due to Senator Stone. When the Governor finally got Senate redistricting in a special session, it came saddled with the potentially crippling Little Federal Plan, again with much credit to Senator Stone.

Once the Upper Chamber had finally untracked itself, the 1963 session ended with President Stone gravelling the Senate into submission and the Gag Law onto the books.

Last week, with the dust all settled and the spirit of Thanksgiving and Christmas a-throb, Governor Sanford praised Senator Stone for his legislative support of community colleges, educational TV, mental health, highway safety, school improvements and "many other constructive programs" to the lasting benefit of North Carolina.

Governor Sanford said Senator Stone had been treated unfairly by the press in that newspaper criticism had not been evenly leavened with praise.

The Governor failed to mention that Senator Stone's heavy-handed authority had drawn from his fellow Senators some searing criticism that would never have been allowed to appear in any North Carolina newspaper. Governor Sanford also failed to mention that several of his own lieutenants had been somewhat less than charmed by Sir Clarence's rough-riding. He also neglected to give Senator Stone proper credit for the Gag Law. Most glaring of all was the Governor's failure to mention that unrelenting unfairness had been the Senate President's longest suit.

Well, we must remember that this is Christmastime and Governor Sanford's eulogy, if not a study in cool and calm reason, is certainly in keeping with the season. As they say around the Mansion, good will everybody.

Later Than You Think

By RALPH McGILL

The Atlanta Constitution

"The American dream begins in a classroom. . . ."

The quotation is from Adlai Stevenson. Today, one of the nation's major concerns is how to give the disadvantaged Negro and white American a seat in that classroom and a share in that dream.

A long time ago James Madison said, "Popular government without popular education is a prologue to a farce or a tragedy."

History has supported him. It has added "QED" to the Stevenson line delineating the birthplace of the American dream, which continually has renewed itself.

Totalitarianism, so far, has come only to those countries and peoples who have not known popular education. Germany, with a strong school system, so regimented it that all "popular" educational qualities were wrung out of it by the ruthless Prussian control.

Popular, free education has enabled us to maintain free, popular government.

Now, we are faced with a time of pleasant truth. Urban population increases, as the pull of industrial and service - industries jobs takes people from the machine-farms, have placed a great burden on school plant, teachers and administration.

As Adlai Stevenson said in his paper on education, James Madison had benefited from the struggle between Jefferson and Hamilton. There are still a few "Hamiltons" among us. That vain, strong and brilliant man believed the possession of education and the right to vote and hold office should belong to a privileged few . . . a selective elite.

Jefferson's idea prevailed. Today the overwhelming majority of Americans, regardless of political party, believe the American dream means every young American should have the opportunity of the kind and amount of education which will enable each to develop his fullest potential.

The American dream never meant that because a boy or a girl lived in a state or region with poor schools and was the child of parents unable to afford a distant school of good standing, he or she should be deprived of the opportunity to develop.

Educational opportunity should not be a matter of geography or parental income.

It is true that the education which was good enough to make grandpa a useful contributing citizen of the United States a half century ago is not good enough to make grandson Johnny an equally capable citizen of 1963. What it takes to make a skilled worker, doctor, farmer, teacher or politician is a great deal more in the way of education and training than formerly.

In the 18 years from 1945 to 1963 we have boosted our defense spending to fantastic heights because of new weapons and space experiments, and our educational expenditures are far short in comparative gains.

We cannot, and should not, and must not, reduce military spending for national security. But we see already that to keep military security scientifically in the fore, we must have more education. There is a shortage of engineers, physicists, chemists, and so on in military plants.

There is a grievous lack of teachers and physical plants from the elementary grades through college. Today, it has been said, we don't even have enough poor teachers.

There is no blinking the fact we must have intelligent, well-conceived federal aid.

"In education—it is later than you think."

Are We All So Guilty?

By CLYDE WILSON

John Kennedy was a young man and a good man. His death was a tragedy.

Every conservative political opponent of his of any stature in the United States has said so sincerely. They have also said, as decent and rational men should, that the President died at the hands of a madman, and although he was apparently a madman of the Left, the act was the deed of an individual and no segment of the political spectrum can be charged with collective guilt.

In contrast, the dead President's body was hardly cold before some of his supposed political friends had begun to exploit the tragedy in an attempt to make a political point.

Men in high position, including Chief Justice Warren, and prominent TV commentators and politicians, tell us that there are many Americans who are guilty, that there is a "climate of hatred and extremism" in our country.

The implication is that any American who disagreed with Kennedy was a hater and extremist and shares guilt for his death. Especially are they trying to make it seem that conservative opponents of the late President, who are powerful in the region where the murder took place, are somehow guilty.

Syndicated columnist Ralph McGill, for instance, treated the nation to a series of lectures on hate and extremism. One of the foremost hatemongers in the United States, McGill has had for years as his only pretense to political analysis the repetition of the charge that any American to the right of Nelson Rockefeller is "a kook, a nut, a fanatic, a fascist, a John Bircher, a Ku Kluxer, a White Citizens Council members" or some combination of the above.

A letter writer in the "Greensboro Daily News" ascribes the murder to "Wallace, Barnett and Walker as surely as if they had pulled the trigger."

The Associated Press reports that Senator Goldwater is "shocked and stunned" by the accusatory hate mail he has received since the assassination.

There is something seriously wrong with the thought processes of men who, because a President is murdered by a pro-Communist fanatic, undertake to scream charges or aim insinuations at a conservative senator.

It may be that there is a climate of hatred and extremism in America. If so, the haters and extremists should be properly identified and held up to the scorn of decent people.

Perhaps the men who have been asserting that any American who opposes the welfare state is a callous reactionary and a neofascist, or that any Southerner who opposes integration is a monster beyond the pale of humanity, or that the people of Dallas, because they do not share the prevailing political philosophy of New York and Boston, are condoners of murder — perhaps the men who have been saying these things are guilty of hate and extremism, as well as the tiny, ridiculous minority who say Eisenhower is a Communist.

Such men are editing some of our most respectable newspapers, teaching political science at some of our best universities, commenting on nation-wide television and holding some of the highest positions in our government.

The implication they are trying to establish now is not only an unconscionable exploitation of national tragedy and a flat repudiation of the truth, it is also a betrayal of John Kennedy, a broad-minded man who loved a good fight and an honest opponent.

And before we Americans heed the cries that we are all guilty, let's ask ourselves: What other people in the world are so generous that they would take up a collection for the accused assassin's foreign wife?

The Facts Of Life

(From The Wall Street Journal)

"It's a pretty well-known fact," said the Radcliffe sophomore matter-of-factly, "that sex goes on in every college."

Well, at the risk of disillusioning the young lady about her staid elders, the fact of the matter is that she's got her tenses mixed. Sex not only goes on now; it has always went. It's only youthfulness that makes the young think they have discovered something new.

Still, it's not only her tenses that are mixed. Nor, regrettably, only the young who are mixed up. For the young lady's remark was intended not simply as an observation but as an argument for more permissive rules on dating in college bedrooms. And it's an argument rather widely accepted these days by the authorities of a number of colleges, including the presidents of Harvard and Radcliffe.

Some of these authorities, moreover, aren't particularly distured by the scandals that have erupted in such places as Harvard. Said the president of next-door Radcliffe, in a tone implying that this settled the matter, "The situation does not seem any different from that in previous years."

What is displayed here, then, both by the young and their elders, is an argument that goes something like this: Young people will do certain things—whether they have to do with drinking or dating or anything else—whether the authorities approve or not. Moreover, the young people who choose to will find ways and places of doing those things whatever the rules. Therefore, the thing to do is to be "realistic" and do away with stuffy rules.

As for the particular case of the dating rules, it seems to us that any thoughtful parent might offer a reply. Every parent knows he cannot really control his children's behavior when they are away from home. Yet no good parent would therefore encourage their sons or daughters to date in the bedroom.

In short, there is a vast difference between recognizing human frailty and in lending to it the seeming sanction of authority. The wisdom of the decalogue is not repealed because some adults commit adultry.

It is this distinction, or so it seems to us, that has been lost in so many ways by those whose duty it is to teach. The effects of a generation of permissiveness are still being felt.

Sometimes this permissiveness has begun in the home. Quite often it has begun in the elementary school where pupils have been permitted to wander about at will, where even discipline in learning was eschewed because it might repress the growing child. It has followed right on through much of the educational process where, even in some high schools, the student need not attend classes unless he choses.

The effects of this ripple everywhere. In a relatively trivial form, we have a new dictionary that will not say any usage is "right" or "wrong" but all is permissive. The usages of manners, too, we are told by some arbiters of etiquette, are often but rituals not necessarily to be observed.

Not at all so trivially—and perhaps not unconnected with the scandals at Harvard—the drugstore shelves are laden with other books that make thoughtful men uneasy because no authority any longer dares say what is pornography and what is not.

Recently some adults were shocked when a group of young people tore up a house after a young people's party. Yet in all the deploring comments it never occurred to anyone to ask, where were the chaperones? The very word would have brought the young people to anger and made the adults quail. These young people were all of 18 and 19 years old. Who was to tell them what to do or not to do?

All this is not intended as a jeremiad against society. We have lately had some experience with young folk of college age and we've been impressed with the makings of the next generation. Indeed, one of the things that has impressed us is that much of their familiar rebellion is part of a restless search for guides to live by. As for adults, we suspect that in every age there have been only a few to raise up standards, to abide by them and to seek to pass them on.

What is troubling, rather, is that those few now in a position where their duty is to instruct seem to have abdicated. The lexicographer afraid of applying his authority to grammar and a college president who retreats behind moral permissiveness are equally shirking their responsibilities.

It is all very well to say—which is true—that young people must evolve their own rules of right living and right actions, for unless they have them within then all outward rules are futile. But if teachers teach that everything which is done is somehow thereby acceptable, who will raise up the standards to which the young may repair?

A Letter

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Some reader with an unbelievably dirty mind has suggested that the name of our organization spells out an obscenity in some foreign tongue. If this is true, we were certainly unaware of it, since the American language has always been good enough for us. Moreover, the custom of designating organizations merely by their initials originated in the socialistic Roosevelt era and we do not subscribe to it.

We ask our supporters to disregard completely this childish attempt to degrade our efforts. If this is the only ground on which the pseudo-liberals are able to attack us, we feel even firmer in our conviction that right is on our side.

Not Great But Certainly Good

By BILL BYRUM

JOY IN THE MORNING, by Betty Smith, Harper and Row, $4.95, 1963.

"And many an older person, passing them on the street, sighed and smiled and thought how wonderful it must be to be young and not have a care in the world." Carl Brown and Annie McGairy could have been any two people born anywhere at any time. Instead, they are two young lovers who marry and seek happiness in a world of overwhelming odds, in 1927.

Both are from New York; he is twenty, she eighteen. Carl is studying law in a midwestern university, but Annie, less fortunate, has had to quit school and begin working at fourteen following her father's death.

After their marriage, they move into a small apartment and soon have trouble finding enough money to live on. Just when their funds are at their lowest, and Carl's academic outlook seems its dimmest, things improve. The Dean of the Law School helps Carl find a more suitable job, and is responsible for their moving into a caretaker's cottage at the local high school. Then, the inevitable happens: Annie becomes pregnant. More pressure is placed on Carl, but with help from friends, he is able to manage.

Perhaps the largest part of the novel is Annie's personal struggle to find acceptance in a new world. Though she feels alienated in Carl's collegiate world, she strives to become a part of it. She enjoys reading and writing and has been standing daily in the school's halls listening to a comparative literature lecture. The Dean soon discovers this and fulfills a dream by making it possible for her to audit the course. Now that she is a part of something, happiness becomes for her "a lump of something wonderful too big to hold."

Their story is a struggle in which love becomes the compelling and sustaining force for the two. The simpler things: an enjoyable book, a walk together at night, become their most valuable assets. Though it is not all joy, they meet the challenges together and find happiness in this mode of living.

The book's literary achievements are numerous. Miss Smith, the authoress of three other books, writes with the brevity and conciseness of a journalist. Well - chosen words combined with short sentences convey meaning with uncanny simplicity. The work is most largely dialogue. This conversation - like feature makes it more readily identifiable for the reader, who becomes associated with one or the other of the characters.

The novel becomes humanly warm and informative, but the reader never feels as though he is being beaten over the head with one particular point. Though not a "great" book, this is a "good" one.

tered around pledging practices and the kind of boys the fraternities look for.

Clayton brought up the claim that fraternities judge prospective members on superficialities, such as the way they talk and dress.

Davis wondered if fraternities don't tend to defeat the purposes of the University in their membership criteria. He said they tend to be homogenous groups rather than cosmopolitan, which seemed to him "antithetical to the purposes of the University."

King said because of the "socially acceptable" clause in many fraternity charters," one man could control the entire national structure" of a fraternity.

This clause restricts local chapters from pledging persons who would be "socially unacceptable" to another chapter.

Spearman explained that when such a short time is alloted for rush, fraternities have to judge rushees by whatever criteria they can. The most obvious are dress and manner of speech, he said.

On the subject of what type of man the fraternities look for, Battle said they look for people who contribute to the social relationship, "people you enjoy being with."

Clayton asked what happens to the good boy with "rough edges."

Spearman said, "He's going to get left out, and both the person and the system may be losers for it." He admitted too many bids are based on the answer to the question, "Is he sharp?"

It is unfair to judge fraternities in isolation from society as a whole, Davis said, pointing out that what we see in fraternity life is often a reflection of the morals of the society at large.

rice bowl," which Ives held up proudly.

"Been here since last Monday," he said. "This is a beautiful campus. I remember the time I sang here about ten years ago. There were people in the trees outside the auditorium. Wonderful audience.

He strolled easily through the aisles, poking a stubby finger at albums.

"I'm happy to see you have my records," he told Kemp.

His latest, "A Funny Way of Laughing," was playing, and he began to twist.

"Good way to lose weight," he said. "But no fun without a partner."

His smooth distinct tenor voice matched the one on the record.

Ives, perhaps best known in movies for his role as "Big Daddy" in "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," has no screen plans "for a long time."

"I'm unemployed for the moment," he said.

He has no folksinging plans either. "It's hard to sing when you're on a diet," he said.

They talked banana trees. Ives was impressed with Kemp's banana tree in the Oriental Room. He said has two homes in the Bahamas with "banana trees all over."

According to Kemp, he will be back in Chapel Hill in two or three days.

"It was truly fascinating to talk with these people and find out about their work," he said. "It was just one of the many ways in which we discover how "average" citizens contribute to the life of this state.

"This was not a propaganda program to recruit state employees," Hall continued, "but rather it showed us how everyone, no matter what his position, can perform a service to North Carolina.

"After working in Raleigh, you can't help but be impressed with our state government," he concluded.

Hall pointed out that everyone, no matter what his field of study, is eligible for the program.

"I would certainly urge everyone to apply for this program," he said. "Those who are selected will find it quite an experience."

Applications for the internships are now available in departmental offices on campus, and should be completed as soon as possible.

Frosh Split Road Meets; Records Fall

By PERRY McCARTY

On the recent sojourn to the north, Carolina's Baby Dolphins posted a 59-36 win over the Navy freshmen and were defeated by Princeton 64-31. Coach Pat Earey remarked that the Princeton score does not reveal the narrow margin involved as many places were decided only by a touch.

Four new freshman records were established in the Navy meet. The medley relay team of Jack Hayden, Bob Bottomly, Tom Adams, and Jay Scattergood covered the 400 yards in 3.58.3, besting the previous record by two tenths of a second. In the final freestyle relay Scattergood, Russ Sleeper, Strud Norfleet, and Pete Worthen went 3:27.5, three seconds faster than the old mark.

In addition, Worthen set two records himself in the freestyle sprints, :22 seconds for the 50 and :49.7 in the 100. The old standards were :22.6 and :50.5.

Allen McDonald was a double winner in the 200 and 500-yard freestyle races. Hayden won both the 200 backstroke and the individual medley and Butch Aydelette showed up very well in the diving.

In the Princeton meet, UNC's Baby Dolphins coud manage only three first places. Worthen again took both the freestyle sprints, while McDonald won the 500 free. Scattergood, Jim Bernuth Bottomly, Hayden, and Adams again swam very well.

Coach Earey has a strong group of second line freshmen who "should come along nicely as the season progresses." These include Fred Tygart (breaststroke), John Trull (butterfly), Ed Wight (individual medley), Sleeper (distance freestyle), and Roy Staley (backstroke).

Swimmers Top Duke; Merrill Leads Splash

They glided rather than rushed past Duke here last night. It was North Carolina's swimmers making their first home appearance since the triumphant road trip, and the Blue Dolphins made the most of it with a 63-31 romp in which they took eight of the 11 events.

Harrison Merrill, the powerful All-American junior, led the way with two wins (the 100- and 200-yard freestyle) in the times of :49.4 and 1:51.7.

Duke, which was not expected to give Coach Pat Earey's splashers too much trouble, didn't. The Blue Devils won just three races, the 50-yard freestyle (Jerry Hitchcock), the 200-yard individual medley (Ray Goodner), and the 400 freestyle relay (Hitchcock, Goodner, Dave Carraway and Jimmy King).

Carolina came on strong after splitting the first four events with the visitors. (The first two wins for UNC, coming in the 400-yard medley relay and Merrill's 200-free win).

After those four, the Dolphins won six straight races before dropping the final free relay. Ernie Oare (diving), Fred Lipp (a 2:07.5 i nthe 200 butterfly), Merrill's 100 free, Thompson Mann (a 2:08 in the 200 backstroke), John Sheldon (a 5:24 in the 500 free) and Frank Lea (a 2:38.5 in the 200 breaststroke) were the UNC winners.

Matmen Seek First Victory At Davidson

UNC's wrestling team expects to bounce back against Davidson after losing the opening match to Washington and Lee, 16-14.

Coach Sam Barnes told the team, "It's disappointing to lose after such a good try." Some of the starting wrestlers had weight problems.

He says the team was not as aggressive on its feet as the freshmen. But the varsity did manage to learn some moves from underneath after watching the freshman match.

Coach Barnes complimented both teams for getting down to their weights, eating intelligently and preparing "like a top-notch team."

Starters Jerry Cabe and Steve Lister will not be able to wrestle against Davidson because they will be working out with the football team. Jack Robinson will take Lister's place in the 177-pound division, and an elimination match will decide who will replace Cabe as the Heavyweight.

Following is the remaining lineup and the performance of each man in the first match: 123-Paul Wellston (W, 5-0 decision); 130-Ken Furr (L, fall); 137-Russell Simmons (W, fall); 147-Ray Hagerty (L, 3-5 decision); William Woodall (L, fall); Elliot Dworin (L, 2-5 decision).

Lister won a 9-5 decision and Cabe an 8-5 decision in the first match.

GATOR TICKETS

Of the 12,391 tickets received by UNC for the Gator Bowl (Sat. December 28 in Jacksonville, Fla.) less than 3,000 remain.

The deadline for returning unsold tickets to the Gator Bowl is Saturday, Dec. 14, but it appears now there will be none to return. No tickets are available in Jacksonville.

Harrier Captains Maillett, Smith

Atlantic Coast Conference champion Art Maillet and teammate Jerry Smith have been elected to co-captain the 1964 Tar Heel distance team.

Maillett, 6-2 from Flushing, N.Y., won seven of nine meets including the State and ACC Championships. Smith, from Fayetteville, N.Y., was consistent all season, taking a fifth place finish in the ACC Championship.

The two were named to replace Bob Bennett of Chevy Chase, Md. who graduates this spring. UNC's long-distance running contingent was one of the strongest athletic teams here ever this past season.

The Harriers of Coach Joe Hilton had their first unbeaten season since 1957 and won their fourth consecutive ACC Championship in the process, before finishing 21st in the post-season nationals at East Lansing, Mich.

Craige Choice As Field Cut To 32 Teams

The field in Grail-Mural Basketball has been narrowed to 32 teams, out of better than 150 entrants, and the team which appears the odds-on favorite is Craige A.

Out of the remaining teams, the boys from Craige have three; the Warts, the Gunners and the Ball Hawks. No other organization has more than one entry left.

In action this week, the Warts defeated the Discriminators of Pi Kappa Phi 3-27, for their second victory of the tourney. High man in the game was Avery Neaves, with 14 points. Dave Taylor added eight in Craige's winning cause. Lou Dunty led the Pi Kaps' scoring with eight points.

Mike McLaughlin hit for 11 points to pace the Gunners to an 18 point victory over Phi Delt 3, 32-14. The victory was also the second for the Gunners.

The Ball Hawks also had two wins, as they drubbed the DU Flukes by 28.22. Ron Funderburke, with 10 points, led all scorers.

As Volleyball is nearing the finals, several teams are in excellent position to grab the championship. Law School, of the grad league has three teams in the semifinal round and Phi Delt has two in the White semis.

In the dorm division, the front runners are Navy and Everett dorm, the one-two teams in the point race. Alexander dorm, which entered ten teams, has been eliminated.

It's About Number 17 He's Golfer, Wrestler

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Head Scout Emmett Cheek admitting he has hardly had time to sit down since returning from Colorado last weekend, sat down in his office and pulled out his chart on the Air Force.

"This is the one we've got to stop," he said, putting his finger on a circle with a No. 17 printed neatly inside it. "He passes, runs, punts, does everything. He's the guy they look to."

No. 17 is Terry Isaacson, a rugged 5-10, 175 pound senior who plays quarterback for the Falcons in the fall, is a two-time All-America wrestler during the winter months and a member of the Air Force golf team come springtime.

Right now North Carolina is more interested in what he does with the football than with a half-nelson or a ten-foot putt. For Cadet Isaacson is indeed the man the Tar Heels must stop in Jacksonville's Gator Bowl on December 28.

"He's a lot like N. C. State's Jim Rossi," said Assistant Coach Bob Thalman, volunteering a comparison. "He's every bit as quick as Rossia good scrambler. When you consider his strength too, you get some idea how hard he is to bring down."

Cheek added that from what he has seen, Isaacson, who was shifted from halfback to the signal-calling post last season, is about equal as a runner and passer.

"The Air Force runs from the wide slot most of the time," said Cheek, who watched the Falcons nip Colorado in their finale last Saturday, "But they'll run out of every kind of formation imaginable at some time or other. They'll use the unbalanced line, the spread, the shotgun . . . you name it."

Cheek called the Falcons a very fine offensiv club. He cited such scores as 69-0 over Colorado State, 34-7 over Boston College, 48-21 over UCLA and 30-8 over New Mexico.

"And their team speed is perhaps the best we've seen all year," interjected Thalman, who watched the Falcons come from behind to down the Buffaloes. "They don't have a (Sherman) Lewis or a (Jay) Wilkinson, but over-all they are plenty quick."

Coach Ben Martin's Cadets have used this quickness to offset their lack of beef. The heaviest man in the starting line-up is left tackle Gil Achter who tips the scales at a something-less-than-whopping 216.

"They are an extremely well-conditioned club, so don't let their weight fool you," said Cheek. "They come off that line real quick and have pushed around some bigger teams."

The Panther-like line is led by center Joe Rodwell (6-2, 208) who made third team All - America mainly because of his great play as a linebacker in the Birdmen's 6-2-3 defensive set-up.

Flanking him on the left side is guard Wendell Harkleroad, a 6-0, 195-pound junior. On the right side is Tom Gorges (6-0, 212), also a junior. The other tackle, in addition to Achter, is Jim Sears (6-3, 214).

The ends are John Puster (6-3 200) on the right side and Ray Lennon (6-0, 185) on the left side. However, Isaacson's favorite pass target may be Fritz Greenlee (6-3, 210) who plays behind Puster.

In addition to Isaacson in the backfield are halfbacks Dick Czarnota (6-1, 205) and Paul Wargo (5-10, 185) and fullback Steve Amdor (5-10, 185). All are rated about equal in ability and all will run either inside or outside, depending on the occasion.

Defensively, Martin rests his quarterback and fullback and sends in safetyman Parke Hinman and linebacker Dave Sicks. Wargo and Czarnota drop back with Hinman to form the "three-deep" secondary.

Cheek does not feel that the Falcons present any unusual problems for the Tar Heels.

"We've got to do what we've been doing all year—stop a great quarterback."

And that's exactly what UNC has in mind. The Heels hope to add Mr. Terry Isaacson to a list which already includes names like Shiner and Rakestraw and Glacken and Mira.

UNC's Smith Is Video Star

Dean Smith, UNC head basketball coach, is being featured in a weekly television show throughout the season on Sunday evenings.

Originating station is WGHP, High Point, and Charlie Harville serves as moderator. Harville's first show with Smith was last week at 3 p.m. But for the remainder of the regular season, the time schedule will be 6:30-7 p.m.

Smith, beginning his third season as head of the Tar Heel cagers, is president of the Atlantic Coast Conference Basketball Coaches Association. He is a graduate of the University of Kansas, where he played under famed Dr. Phog Allen.

Last year, UNC was 15-6 under Smith's tuteledge. It will be an active TV season for the coach in action as well as having his own show. Three Carolina home games—with Wake Forest, Duke and VPI— will be screened to a regional audience from Woollen Gym during the regular season.

WEINSTEIN LECTURES

The Rosa B. Weinstein Memorial Lectures will be delivered this year by Rabbi Eugene B. Borowitz, professor of education at the New York School of Hebrew Union College — Jewish Institute of Religion.

"Faith and Reason" is the theme of the talks, which will be delivered Sunday and Monday, Dec. 15 and 16, at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall.

QB Ray Farris Pushes Program

By HUGH STEVENS
(Last of four articles)

It's no problem to talk to Ray Farris about the N. C. Summer Internship Program in State Government.

The former UNC star quarterback spent last summer calling signals for the program, and he is extremely enthusiastic about it.

"The future of North Carolina will be no better than its future leaders," he said over a cup of Pine Room coffee.

"The program is a long-term investment made by the state—not money, but time and effort by state leaders and political scientists."

Farris spoke in glowing terms of the seminars for state interns, which he called "the heart of the program."

"The cooperation from the state leaders was nothing short of excellent," he said. "We had speakers from all over the state come and tell the interns that they are vital to the future of N. C."

More than 30 people from every area of state government met with the 1963 interns.

'For example, we heard Sam Ragan, executive editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, who spoke to us on political leadership in the state," Farris said. "Like almost every speaker, he was excellent."

He named others, including Dr. William Archie, Director of the Board of Higher Education; Dr. Dallas Herring, Chairman of the State Board of Education; Bill Babcock, Highway Commission Director; and Ed Scheidt, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles.

"Dr. Frank Porter Graham, former president of the University and now UN ambassador to Pakistan, had us spellbound with his remarks," he said, "and Tom Lambeth's speech on the great men of the state pointed out to all of us just how important one man can be."

"Perhaps the most interesting session was a three-hour discussion with Governor Sanford at the Governor's Mansion. He is a busy man, but he took time to talk about politics, State government, education—virtualy everything."

"I personally was extremely impressed that the program was

Referendum Registration Starts Dec. 21

Registration for the January 14 Statewide referendum on Legislative redistricting will begin Saturday, Dec. 21.

Registration books in Chapel Hill and Carrboro will be open at the polling places on that Saturday, and and December 28 and January 4. Challenges Day will be Saturday, January 11, and the referendum will be on Tuesday, January 14.

In the referendum, voters will decide whether to amend the State Constitution to increase the Senate from 50 members to 70 and reduce House membership from 120 members to 100.

The referendum will be the same as a general election, permitting absentee ballots. Applications for absentee ballets must be submitted in writing to Sam T. Latta, chairman of the Orange County Board of Elections, Hillsboro.

Any resident of Chapel Hill Township eligible to vote in the Chapel Hill School Board election last spring is eligible to vote in the referendum without re-registering, unless he has changed his precinct since the School Board election.

New residents of Chapel Hill can find out their precinct, registrar, and polling place by calling Elections Board secretary Clyde Carter, 933-2137.

Knowles May Not Return

By JIM NEAL

John Knowles shot the literary bull in the Bull's Head Bookshop yesterday afternoon, and a constantly changing group of students stood around and ate it up.

Knowles, Carolina's Writer-in-Residence, was at the bookshop in the library basement to autograph his two novels. The affair was sponsored by the bookshop and the Writer-in-Residence Committee of the YMCA.

"We really should have had some entertainment," Knowles said. "Like a folksinger or two."

The students laughed. Some appeared to be from his classes.

During an infrequent lull in the conversation, Knowles was asked if he felt backed into a corner. He was standing beside a chair in a corner of the room.

"No, I don't." Looking around, he said, "Well, I'm protected from the rear, anyway."

The circle of students backed away to give him some breathing room as another fan came forward with a book for him to autograph.

"I think you should all be home writing, scribble, scribble, rather than standing around in a book shop," he grinned around the room.

A student asked whether he will be here next year.

"No, I'll be writing. I don't think I'll be teaching again. They're planning to make a movie of 'A Separate Peace,' and I may do some work on that. I think it may make a good small black-and-white movie. I just hope they don't try to make it a big, technicolor monstrosity out of it."

After signing a few more books, Knowles went on about movies.

"Either don't sell your book at all, or sell it completely," he said. "Don't try to hang on to it."

In the course of conversation, Knowles said "A Separate Peace" has been translated into a number of languages, including German, Italian and Swedish.

He says he can't imagine anyone going into writing, as hard as it is, unless they get great personal satisfaction from it.

Hootenanny Tonight!

Does your heart tingle when you hear the G-strings twang?

The G-strings will be twanging in Memorial Hall tonight and it's all for the heart.

A hootenanny featuring some of the best-known balladeers in the state will start at 8 p.m. Tickets will go on sale at 7:15 p.m. at $1 per person and $1.75 per couple.

Proceeds will go to the North Carolina Heart Association for research, community service and education programs. The Association has spent over $1 million on heart research at the UNC School of Medicine.

Leading the program will be Forrest Covington of Burlington, nationally known folk singer who did most of the organization of the performance.

Covington has been at the annual North Carolina Folk Festival here since 1948 when he was a student at UNC. He has sung with several well-known singers including Pete Seeger and Woody Guthrie.

Marinda McPherson, orginally of Philadelphia and now of Hillsboro, will join Covington at top billing.

Miss McPherson has been compared to Mahalia Jackson for her "soulful style" in singing ballads. She has a masters degree from Columbia University and has recently released an album, "Spreading Joy."

Raleigh disk jockey Jimmy Capps, well-known for his "Our Best to You" radio program, will serve as emcee.

Carter and Margot, a North Carolina couple, and "The Hitchhiking Troubadour" Mike Williams will also appear. Williams is the only out-of-stater, having no address except the open road.

Two college groups, the Rovers, an Elon College quartet, and the Kinsmen, a UNC trio, close out the program.

80 Per Cent Rule May Return Today

By PETE WALES

The 80 per cent rule, once the scourge of UNC's fraternities, may come back to haunt them today.

The IFC officers will meet again this afternoon with the Faculty Committee on Fraternities and Sororities to discuss their recent repeal of the bull pledge social rule and the possible return of the 80 per cent rule.

The faculty committee indicated their displeasure with the repeal of the bull pledge rule at a meeting before Thanksgiving and again last Monday. They are considering a reinstatement of the 80 per cent rule which they feel the bull pledge rule was replacing.

The IFC decided in Monday's meeting to stand on the repeal of the rule.

A resolution was introduced last night in Student Legislature by Mike Chanin (UP) and Bo Edwards (UP) backing the IFC's action and their right to act on this problem.

The bull pledge rule was originally passed by the IFC last spring. It restricted bull pledges and academic inactives (members with less than a C average) from attending any social functions at any fraternity house.

The rule was designed to affect the individuals not making their grades. The faculty looks on it as a replacement for the 80 per cent rule which affects the whole house when 20 per cent of the members fail to make a C average.

According to IFC rules, bull pledges are still not allowed to eat or sleep in the house or attend meetings. The IFC feels that this rule is sufficient to deal with academic inactives.

Aycock Blasts Gag Law Again

The controversial Speaker Ban received another blast yesterday afternoon as Chancellor William B. Aycock spoke before dormitory and sorority housemothers and graduate counsellors.

"One of the reasons that this University is able to compete with other institutions for bright young instructors is the strong climate of freedom," Aycock said.

"The Speaker Ban law starts off the notion that you're going to begin diluting this freedom.

"It would probably be better if we didn't continue to operate if further limitations should be imposed."

The speech was a part of the In-Service Training Program being sponsored by the Office of the Dean of Women. The next meeting will be Jan. 16.

The Chancellor spoke of the problems facing the University with its expansion. He anticipated an enrollment next fall of 11,200, an increase of 350 over this fall.

"At the present rate of growth, we will have to increase our faculty by 35 to 40 each year.

"We are now working to stabilize this growth so that we may attain a more gradual rate of growth for the freshman class."

Chubby Does Dutch Twist

PHILADELPHIA (UPI)—Chubby Checker, 22-year-old singer and originator of the dance craze, "The Twist," announced his engagement Thursday to Catharina Lodders of Holland, holder of the Miss World, 1963, title.

Checker is a Negro. His fiance, of Haarlem, Holland, is white.

Her parents are expected to visit here over the holidays, Checker said. The bride-to-be, who will be 22 years old next month, said she planned no entertainment career but would be content to be a "wife and mother."

CHRISTMAS CAROL

Hark! Caroling voices will be heard on campus December 18 as the UNC Men's Glee Club and groups of girls from Cobb Dorm spread season's cheer.

Others are invited to join the crowd to offer dulect tones and some other kinds to the campus, should the spirit move them in that direction.

After caroling, the Glee Club and the Cobbies will be entertained in the dorm basement after dorm closing hours, by special permission of the authorities.

Cusick And Others Receive Maximum For Demonstration

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

HILLSBORO—The National Field Secretary of the Student Peace Union and three women were found guilty yesterday of trespassing in a case arising from a singing sit-in last summer at the Chapel Hill-Carrboro merchants association building.

The four were sentenced to 30 days in jail, suspended on payment of a $50 fine and court costs.

Three of the four refused the option, electing to serve the jail sentences.

Pat Cusick, 3?, a former UNC student and the lone male defendant will serve 30 days on the roads.

Two of the women, Mrs. Peter Lybrook Van Riper and Miss Pearl Cotton, a Negro, were sentenced to 30 days in Orange County jail.

The third woman, Mrs. Christine Glover, also a Negro, paid the $50 fine and $52.80 in court costs. A spokesman said Mrs. Glover's son was ill and she wanted to be with him.

Immediately following the sentence, the Chapel Hill chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality of which Cusick is a member issued a statement which said the three would serve a jail sentence "as a reminder of the continuing inhumanity tolerated with indifference in this town."

The Superior Court jury, which included three Negroes, deliberated 30 minutes before returning the guilty verdict. None of the defendants showed any emotion upon hearing the verdict.

The only two witnesses to testify were J. F. Augustine, executive secretary of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association and Chapel Hill police chief William Blake.

Augustine testified that around 1:30 p.m. on July 19, 1963, the group entered the Chamber headquarters on West Franklin Street.

He said they were singing and in general were disturbing the office work. Augustine said he told the group they were welcomed to stay if they would quit singing.

They didn't stop singing, he said.

He then told them he would give them 30 seconds to quit singing or he would ask to have them removed.

They didn't quit singing, so he asked the Chapel Hill police to remove them.

Chief Blake testified he was present at the time of the singing sit-in and that he heard Augustine ask the demonstrators to cease singing.

Solicitor Thomas D. Cooper charged that the four were simply seeking publicity by way of the sit-in demonstration.

He told the jury there was no excuse for breaking the law just to promote a cause.

Firehouse Is Town's Latest Acquisition

By RICHARD CREAL

What's yellow and brown, looks like it's built upside down, and cost $90,000?

It's the new Chapel Hill fire house which stands near the intersection of N. Columbia St. and Airport Road.

From the outside it seems delicately balanced. The attic has a larger base than the upper floor, and the upper floor has a larger base than the basement, leaving two layers of overhang around the edges. But on the inside, the building is girded with steel.

Three 150-pound fiberglass doors provide the entrance to the basement which houses three fire engines and a control room. From the control room stems the communications system consisting of an inter-com, a two-way radio, a telephone for emergency calls and one for personal calls.

Four large box-like protrusions can be seen on the front of the building along the outer wall of the upper floor. They were built to make room for the lockers of the ten firemen who sleep in the adjoining room.

The greatest advantage of the new building is "room," Fire Chief James Stewart said. "They finished building around Nov. 8. They weren't out of here one day till we moved in. The old firehouse was really cramped."

The upper floor, which contains the men's living facilities, has a kitchen, a dining-sitting room with television and easy chairs, a recreation room and a large sleeping room with bureau drawers and closets. There is a small balcony out back.

The kitchen has a General Electric range standing between a long row of wooden cabinets and the sink. There are two refrigerators and two large food cabinets, one for each of the two shifts.

"This keeps them from accusing each other of stealing the other's butter or something," Stewart explained.

The floors are prestressed concrete with a tile covering, and the light green walls are made of sheet rock with stretches of wooden paneling in various places. Circular blower fans, fastened to the ceiling, blow air down from the heating system in the attic.

"We're building our own beds," Stewart said.

33 Military Bases Will Close Soon

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara announced Thursday that in line with presidential economy orders he is closing or nearly closing 33 military bases, 26 of them in this country.

The action will, over a period of up to three and one-half years, result in a "net loss" of 8,500 civilian jobs, McNamara said.

It was evident that many other civilian workers at the bases will have to make long moves in order to keep their government jobs, although no figure was available. The government will pay for any necessary moving expenses.

Kenneth Keating

The announcement was expected but nonetheless reaction from congressmen representing the affected states was in most cases vociferous. Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R.-N.Y.) whose state stands to lose seven installations, immediaetly introduced legislation designed to halt closing of a base in an economically depressed area.

Rep. Samuel S. Stratton (D.-N.Y.) whose district is losing the Schenectady Army Depot, said the Defense Department was playing "fast and loose" with New York State and promised to turn the Pentagon "upside down" before accepting the base closings.

The closings ranged from supply bases to the sprawling 5th Army Headquarters complex in Chicago, Army Camps Chaffee, Ark., and Leroy Johnson, La., and Greenville, Miss., Air Force Base.

California is losing four installations; Texas, Alabama and Louisiana two each; and Arizona, Georgia, Illinois, Nevada, Arkansas, Mississippi, New Hampshire, North Carolina and Ohio one each.

The Defense Department said three of the bases are in areas classed by the Labor Department

Whatsover Things Are True

Censorship Hinders The Growth Of Goodness

By C. W. TARGET

Writer-in-Residence
The Colorado Collegian

As we get older, the stairs seem to get steeper, and things are never the same as when the world was young all hours of the day and we and the stars were full of it most of the shining nights—and the sensible course is to climb fewer stairs and walk more sedately in the autumn sun.

But this general steepness and lack of singing, this first slow withering of the green leaf, this private process becomes, for some a cause of public lamentation . . . hence the almost continuous rumbling of the religious underworld about the Sins of Youth, Moral Declension, Sexual Depravity, Unspeakable Vice, and whatnot.

INDIGNATION

The latest of these depressing attacks of ingrowing indignation is now hard upon us, louder in our ears than even genuine thunder upon Sinai: for Dr. Leslie Weatherhead has had a turgid letter published in The Times, one not conspicuous for original thought; and Sir Cyril Black has been gobbling again among the "sinister figures of homosexuality, marital infidelity, and violent sex crimes," and seems to be suffering from indigestion or something.

Now, in itself this pulpit rumbling and ranting is not important—both men are still happily entitled to the expression of their opinions and to the excitation of the front row of the pews—except that such opinions do serious harm to the cause of Christ, and merely confirm the unnecessary irrelevance of the Church to our "condition." (There is, of course, a sense in which the claims of the Church ought to be irrelevant—but not in this half-acre of shifting sand).

But, serious though this intellectual vandalism is, such men seem to hanker after even bigger crowbars, and to look longingly towards the bulldozer of legal compulsion to enforce the adoption of their opinions. For example, Sir Cyril Black has become the Chairman of the newly-formed Moral Law Defense Association, whose purpose is to "bring pressure" to bear on Members of Parliament to amend such legislation as the Obscene Publications Act of 1959, and, in his words, to "stamp out" the "sale of pornography" and to "elevate the tone of our literture, our films, our plays" by a "more rigid enforcement of the law."

Which, like the activities of most back-stairs pressure groups, could be dangerous for the democratic rest of us. And so it seems worth while to examine the pretentions of such an attitude, and to search among the platitudinous thickets, whether there be any lurking truth.

Being a writer, and to avoid a weariness of words, I intend to treat the censorship of books as a particular case of the general principle that a "more rigid enforcement of the law" will do any good to anybody except lawyers and the friends of Sir Cyril Black. . . . And will now dive in headfirst.

No Christian ought ever to censor any book, at any time, in any place, for any reason.

CREATIVE WORK

By "book" I imply use of every other possible word describing the free creative work of freely creative man: play, picture, poem, statue, novel, film, symphony, script, song, scenario, or whatever, "pornographic" or not—and by "censor" I imply all the possible methods of suppressing such a work; ban, expurgate, destroy, prevent, "stamp out," or in any way render unavailable to any man wanting free access.

I assert this knowing that the wickedness of man is still great in the earth, and that we live under a deluge of lies, filth, and viciousness such as the world has never been polluted with before. Not even the worst days of Imperial Rome or Victorian England could match what to us are the ordinary sights and sounds of everyday life . . . garish advertisements planned by highly-skilled psychologists to appeal to all our natural greed and selfishness, all our fears, frustrations, all our weakness, our pride, our covetousness, our feelings of insecurity, all that is evil continually within us . . . pornographic newspapers, all seven days of the week, including the one we are commanded to keep holy—newspapers filled with manufactured news, lies, misrepresentations, half-truths, gossip about the trivial doings of trivial people, reports stimulating every idle curiosity, stories pandering to every imaginable thought of diseased minds, articles catering for all our cupidity, ignorance and prejudice, and photographs so obscene as to leave little scope for further degradation of the help meet created by God for man . . . films, including so-called "Bible Epics," indulging every lust and perversion from the flagellation complex to vicarious fornication . . . television programmes so silly as to be senseless, so superficial as to be unbelievable . . . popular songs so daft as to be moronic . . . and books—millions of them—detailing every kind of criminal violence and psychopathology, glorifying war and cruelty, satisfying every unhealthy interest in man's inhumanity to man, in concentration camps, torture and every possible brutality . . . detective stories in which the crime is always murder . . . "thrillers" in which sex and sadism mix in equal proportions to produce poison . . . foul, sinful, death-centered books we could do without.

A deluge, then, which threatens to destroy whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report.

Yet I repeat, No Christian ought ever to censor any book.

SUPPRESSION

And assert this, knowing that the history of ecclesiastical Christianity can be seen as a series of repeated attempts by men such as Sir Cyril Black to suppress everything of which they did not approve, a suppression usually carried out with all the severity of secular power. I assert it knowing it to be alien to what passes for Christian "thought" today and open to its swift condemnation. And I assert it because I believe that the arguments advanced to defend censorship are unsound, that in any event censorship does not and cannot work effectively in achieving its ends, and because I believe that a positive response to the good is a more effective protection against the appeal of the bad than any attempt to suppress it.

These arguments for Censorship are ancient ones—weary horses lumbering around the shabby circus-ring of ideas.

In this place of wet sawdust the concepts of censorship and freedom are usually thought of as being in opposition—to censor implies the denial of freedom, whilst to be free implies the absence of censorship. But this apparent opposition depends upon two possible conceptions of the nature of freedom: the first, that to be free means to do as you please, right or wrong which is based on the principle that no other man's ideas are valid for you unless you accept them freely; and the second, that to be free means to do right and shun the wrong, whether you please or not, which is based on the principle that only the good man is truly free.

And arguments both for and against censorship can be drawn from each concept.

For example, if truth and the good can be known, then error and evil can be equally known, and prevented on the grounds that no free man will surrender his goodness to either. And if truth and the good have no basis except in private judgment, then censorship is as right as there are private judgments willing to support it.

Conversely, if the discovery of truth depends upon free inquiry and the free communication of the results of such inquiry, then no censorship can be good because it might be the suppression of the true before it can be known as truth. And if goodness depends upon knowledge of the truth, then censorship of the truth hinders the growth of goodness.

And whilst it is not logically so, the arguments for censorship tend to be based on the do-as-you-ought concept (or, rather on the particular set of "oughts" the would-be censors have in mind), and the arguments against tend to be based on the do-as-you-please concept.

In other words, censorship is usually proposed to prevent the degradation of whatsoever things are held to be true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report, and rejected as a danger to the freedom on which these things are held to depend.

A Gaggle of Geese And Pandemonium

This is a plea for somebody, somewhere, to do something about the spectacle of newsmen mercilessly engulfing people who, for one reason or another, find themselves at the center of public attention.

The most recent example of this abuse was the coverage of the Frank Sinatra Jr. kidnapping. Reporters were all over the place, completely undisciplined and disorganized, seeming more like a flock of rapacious vultures than the skilled craftsmen they supposedly are.

After being released unharmed and managing to get to his mother's home, young Sinatra consented to a brief news conference. He politely explained that he could not discuss the particulars of his abduction until he had conferred with the FBI.

Guess what he was asked in about thirty-five different ways? That's right, the particulars of his abduction.

It barely mattered, however, because he was not given the opportunity to answer anyway. Reporters were too busy shouting down each other's questions and staging miniature swordfights in Sinatra's face with their battery of microphones.

There might be some excuse for this confused spectacle if it were an isolated example of press irresponsibility. The trouble is, it isn't. It happens day in and day out.

Why hasn't something been done about it? For the same reason that we don't know where to send this plea, or to whom. Sure there are plenty of news groups around: The Newspaper Guild, The American Society of Newspaper Editors, and others. But none of them seem to have any inclination to suggest any corrective measures for this situation. Yet it is imperative that something be done — something positive, and soon.

What makes the situation most upsetting is the fact that no informal organization exists to make arrangements for orderly coverage of the news in cases such as young Sinatra's kidnapping.

It is not too much to ask that all of the news organizations get together and form some kind of a council whose job it would be to step in on a moment's notice and arrange for orderly coverage of events in cases of this nature.

It is quite evident that one or two experienced reporters, representing all news media, can do an infinitely better job of interviewing a person than can a goggle of 50 or more screaming people. Maybe the one man doesn't think of all the questions that the 50 could come up with, but one man gets his questions heard, and the interviewee is at least given a chance to answer outside the atmosphere of pandemonium which now characterizes these encounters.

An example of this single-representative system was provided for us in the hospital interview of Governor John Connally several days after the assassination of President Kennedy. Because of the Governor's condition, doctors allowed only one reporter in his room, and NBC newsman Martin Agronsky represented all the news media in a tasteful, orderly and interesting interview of Connally. The contrast between this and the chaotic interviews of the Dallas Police spokesman and District Attorney serve to prove the point.

We do not feel that establishing this pool system to cover certain types of stories would in any way sap the zeal or inhibit the initiative it is so necessary for a good reporter to possess. For "scoops" do not come from mass interviews of persons caught up in the events which make news, but rather from discovering those events first. No newspaper is going to beat another newspaper in disclosing the outcome of the well publicized trial of a public official but the initiative of one reporter who digs tenaciously for facts can often result in that very trial, and at the same time provide an excellent scoop for that reporter's paper.

The responsibility of the press is a function of the freedom it enjoys, and we are sure the press could now go a long way in enhancing its stature and accepting its responsibility by working out a system that would put an end to the distasteful exhibit of reporters trampling over and out-shouting each other.

Humor Comes To Durham

By NINA KING

"The Suitor": Directed by Pierre Etaix; screenplay by P. Etaix and J. C. Carriere; produced by Paul Claudon. At the Rialto through Tuesday.

Jollity being the order of the season, the Rialto Theater in Durham has seen fit to devote the next two weeks to contemporary comic masterpieces. Starting Wednesday, a double bill of Peter Sellers' classics—"The Mouse that Roared" and "I'm All Right, Jack"— will be featured. This week, the Rialto is holding the Southern premiere of Pierre Etaix's "The Suitor", the first full length film by a very clever, and very funny, little Frenchman.

The plot of "The Suitor" is slight indeed. A hollow-cheeked, intent young scientist (Etaix) suffers from his parents' desire for a daughter-in-law. Once the idea has been implanted, however, the young man becomes enchanted with it and sets forth in haphazard, but touchingly earnest, pursuit of femininity. The ridiculous mishaps which befall him in his search make up the "plot" of this charming bit of froth.

Etaix is a delight: he moves through his role with an almost deadpan face, but the merest flicker of his sad eyes or the faintest quiver of his narrow lips can express the most delicate of emotions. His form of comedy has obvious roots in the Chaplinesque tradition. It is composed largely of visual gags—ranging in quality from the most blatant pratfalls to cleverly contrived variations on the difficulties and nuances of lighting feminine cigarettes. There is something, also, of the fantastic wistfulness of Chaplin—as when the newly converted "suitor" dances in delighted expectancy through the moonlit garden, only to discover his parents watching from a balcony.

Etaix's debt to the comic geniuses of the silent film has been perhaps overstressed, however. Even more important is the influence of Jacques Tati. Tati uses the minimum of dialogue and almost no "sound effects" as such. But, also like Tati, he is able to create incredibly funny effects out of the most banal of ordinary, everyday sounds—high heels on cement pavement, clinking glasses, the scratch of a match, etc.

The supporting roles in "The Suitor" are perfectly cast. As his mildmannered, wistful father and his domineering but sentimental mother, Claude Massat and Denise Perrone strike a perfect balance between humorous exaggeration and heartwarming human-ness.

As the women in Etaix's new life, Laurence Ligneres, France Arnell and Karis Vesely are delightful to behold. Miss Vesely, as the wistful Scandanavian maid who can speak no French (even her subtitles are in Swedish) is a particularly enchanting discovery.

Freedom To Learn

(From The New York Times)

J. Edgar Hoover has told a youth group in New York that he would bar Communist spokesmen from college campuses because their ideas can "win the allegiance of American youth."

We think that the F.B.I. director underestimates the intelligence of American students and seriously narrows the concept of academic freedom. The Communists have been notoriously unsuccessful in their campus recruitment. One reason may be that when students are permitted to learn about communism, its secretive glamour is stripped away.

American college students have invited and heard many repugnant persons and ideas in recent months. Racism, radical rightism and communism have been preached — and debated openly—at major universities. "If you expect a nation to be ignorant and free," Thomas Jefferson once said, "you expect what never was and never will be." That's what academic freedom is all about.

From India:

City Of Nightmares

(Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of dispatches from a UNC student visiting India.)

By MARGARET A. RHYMES

CALCUTTA—The Black Hole of Calcutta has finally come to life as a sultry, vibrating city that teems with intrigue and humanity from all over Asia.

It was here in one of the world's most densely populated cities that our Experiment group of 12 had their first homestay with individual Indian families.

Perhaps Calcutta is a good first stop for foreigners to make in India—because here are all the startling extremes: the poverty and the wealth, the ancient and the modern, the shabby and the stately, all crowded into a unique atmosphere.

This is the city where tall, imposing buildings shudder at the unending flow of cars, ox carts, rickshaws and hand-drawn trucks.

. . . where 500 Communists were jailed after the Sino attack last year and 22,000 Chinese still suffer under an unofficial city-wide boycott.

. . . where the Victoria Memorial, fashioned on the Taj, overlooks a long maidan dotted with playing fields, stone monuments and clusters of trees.

. . . where eight out of ten families occupy one-room lodgings and eat what is called one of the world's worst balanced diets of rice and sweets.

. . . where the world's major Jute manufacture takes place and paper mills, steel plants and tanneries line the banks of the Hooghly River.

. . . where ancient Hindu temples and great museums daily attract the thousands.

. . . where the expression "the driver always gets killed" in an accident literally means mob psychology takes over.

. . . where the very proper members of the remaining British colony dine and relax in the most fashionable clubs.

. . . where thousands of cows roam the sidewalks, forage on the streets and obstruct even further the wild, wild traffic.

. . . where the splendid public buildings, parks and gardens would rival those of Washington.

. . . where the average life span for one of the city's 90,000 rickshaw pullers is around 28.

. . . where sprawling botanical gardens harbor the famous Banyan Tree, 1200 feet in circumference.

. . . where the summer's outbreak of cholera that claimed almost 500 lives were termed "mild."

. . . where the great port that handles almost half the country's imports is choking up with silt.

The problems are gigantic. With the 1947 partition, millions of Hindus fled Muslim Pakistan, poured into Calcutta and almost doubled the population overnight.

The resulting chaos in housing, sanitation and transportation has only begun to be alleviated.

Nehru has called it a "city of nightmares." And yet, as the chief industrial and commerical center, its fate is vital to India's future.

One can more easily come to grasp the rest of India after seeing the turbulence, the pestilence and the economic disruption of Calcutta that are symbols of the task that all of India faces.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Young Minds

Editors, The Tar Heel,

A few days ago, we discussed a few of the many dangerous books purchased by the taxpayers for our college and university libraries. Since that time, many friends have pointed out other dangerous writings which should not be handled lightly by immature youth, not yet sufficiently trained—in the school of experience—to have formed the proper ideas of our American Way and to be able to see the logical fallacies in them. For instance: a young person is very likely to misunderstand phrases such as "when a form of government becomes destructive to these ends (life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, it is the right of the people to abolish it (by force)." These of us who are more mature understand, of course, that the younger Thomas Jefferson was a radical revolutionary and that the end product of his labors—America—justifies his means. But a less well-educated mind is liable to interpret Jefferson's ideas as something to be applied today, when in reality his inflammatory remarks were directed toward an oppressive tyranny and certainly can never be applied to the greatest governmental form ever conceived. Perhaps it would be better if his writings were kept under lock and key; patriotic teachers can interpret them rightly for the young.

In another area: there is a crying need for a version of the Bible edited for minds in the formative stages. There are portions of books of the Old Testament fully as salacious as anything in Henry Miller, Tennessee Williams, J. D. Salinger, or Mark Twain. Moreover, phrases such as "love thine enemies"; "blessed are the peacemakers"; and "do unto others as you would have them do unto you" have been lifted from context and misused so often that it would be better for them to be taken out of harm's way. "The Devil can cite Scripture for his purpose," as the good Book says.

These are controversial opinions, but in dealing with young minds apt to form the wrong ideas one cannot be too careful.

Hilliard Goes On The Road

UNC professor, Dr. Robert L. Hilliard, will advise 50 college and university presidents on the pitfalls and profits of curriculum exchanges between various universities via television.

At a conference of the Council of Higher Educational Institutions in New York City, today, Dr. Hilliard, associate professor of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, will act as special consultant to the group explaining how to achieve the best results from inter-collegiate course exchanges.

His plans will be directed toward a student enrollment of about 300,000 students.

Included in Dr. Hilliard's visit will be an address to the presidents at the annual meeting of the Council.

Dr. Hilliard was on leave-of-absence from the University during part of the 1962-63 academic year while he served as a consultant on educational television in New York State.

He is well-known for his work in initiating inter-institutional television projects oriented around the 2500 megacycle band, which has recently been approved by the Federal Communications Commission.

His work was the subject of a front page story in the New York Times this fall.

Dr. Hilliard joined the UNC faculty in 1960 and is the author of numerous periodical articles and of two books. "Writing for Television and Radio" is the leading text of its field in the country and has been widely acclaimed by educators and stuents.

He is co-author of a monograph on "The Utilization of Television in Higher Education in New York State," soon to be published, and editor and one of the authors of "Understanding Television" which will be published next spring.

N. Columbia St. and Airport Road, it looks like it was meant for public traffic.

"A student in a little white sports car nearly ran me down a while back," Stewart said. "We could come out here on a fire call and find a traffic jam in our driveway. That'd be a heck of a note, wouldn't it?"

The firemen are a little irritated because they have so much more to clean up now than before.

"But at least we don't have to hear the policemen's key rattling all night any more," a fireman said.

Stewart said there would be an open house for the public Sunday afternoon from 2 to 4.

as economically depressed—that is, with unemployment 6 per cent or higher. They were identified as the San Diego, Calif., Naval Repair Facility; the Stockton, Calif., Navy Storage Annex and the Rome, N. Y., Army Depot.

McNamara also announced that seven bases would be closed in three foreign countries, but he did not identify the bases of the nations on the grounds the decision had not yet been communicated to the government involved.

The secretary said the action "reflects instructions given me by both President Kennedy and President Johnson to effect all economies possible without damage to the national defense."

He estimated that the closings will save an estimated $106 million a year and put the net loss of jobs at around 7,800 military and 8,500 civilian positions. Men holding the military jobs were expected to be transferred to other positions with little effect on the overall picture, since the Army includes 2.7 million personnel.

McNamara expects that the 8,500 civilians who will wind up without jobs after all the replacing and transferring is done will mostly retire, take civilian jobs, or "become housewives."

NEW CHEVELLE!

BY CHEVROLET

The kind of go—6 or V8—you'd expect from one of Chevy's great highway performers. Come on down and drive it

The kind of comfort you'd expect in a large interior. Come on down and sit in it.

The kind of fresh styling—inside and out—that makes it the year's smartest surprise. Come down and stare at it.

New Chevelle Malibu Sport Coupe

Now—Chevy spirit in a new kind of car!

We built this one to do more than just stand around looking beautiful. Held its weight down in the 3,000-pound range. Then built four lusty engines—two sixes and two V8's—with output all the way up to 220 horses*!

And if that makes you think this is one frisky car, you've got the right idea.

You've also got a roomy car here. Yet its 115-inch wheelbase keeps it highly maneuverable in traffic and very easy to park.

With its Full Coil suspension, it's got a ride that reminds you of the Jet-smooth kind the way it muffles noise and cushions bumps.

And the fine hand of Body by Fisher craftsmen shows up beneath this one's suave good looks, too.

Sound good? There's more. Like the fact that Chevelle comes in three series with eleven models—convertibles, sport coupes, sedans, wagons, even Super Sport models with front bucket seats. Like the fact that (and see if this isn't one of the nicest surprises of all) the new Chevelle comes at an easy-to-take price!

Like to hear more? The listening's wonderful at your Chevrolet dealer's—and so's the driving.

Bill Stroupe

FOR GOOD, HARD-NOSED football, last weekend failed. But the two NFL games on TV were as interesting as important, even if the scores were not close.

Out on the West Coast Los Angeles and Green Bay showed the fans some rough stuff—and Sam Huff wasn't even supposed to play until the next day. Here's how it happened:

Herb Adderley intercepted a pass for Green Bay. Red Phillips tackled Adderly out of bounds so that his face hit the dirt. Herb got up and flattened Phillips with an elbow to the jaw, and both players were ejected.

Later on in the game, Roman Gabriel threw a pass to Carroll Dale, who couldn't hang on. The ball went to Dick Bass, but he couldn't catch it either. Jesse Whittendon of the Packers wound up with it. But the play was called on a penalty. Green Bay intercepted on the next play for good.

Hearing the names of some Ram players gives the impression that Los Angeles is a farm team for the other NFL clubs. The Ram roster lists three ex-Giants, not counting Coach Harland Svare. And they have traded away Del Shofner, Rudy Bukich, Bill Wade and Zeke Bratkwswi, just to name a few stars.

The Ram offense was hurting so much, it managed to come up with a fourth and 52 situation late in the game. And it was rather pathetic to listen to the voice of the Rams, Bob Kelly after the game. He now talks about good portions of games the Rams play. Not so long ago Los Angeles used to have good seasons.

The next day, Washington gave the New York Giants quite a scare. But when the dust had cleared, it was Giant Offense 24, Giants Defense 20 and Redskins 14.

One thing that you couldn't help noticing was Bobby Mitchell's play. Most fans will recall that Washington traded to Cleveland for Mitchell only after the Secretary of the Interior (of all people) threatened to take away their new stadium. You would never guess that a team that had been so reluctant to sign a player would come to depend on him as heavily as the Redskins depend on Mitchell. But they do.

The rugged play of the Giant defense brings up the half-joking question: "Why don't the Giants just let the defense stay in?"

This question brings to mind the time when the Giants actually did this in 1961 against the Eagles. Erich Barnes went 40 plus yards for a touchdown on the first and only play he was used offensively.

A Cliffhanging Finish In The NFL

YOU CAN BET that NFL fans will stay glued to their TV sets this weekend, even if the games are played at a snail's pace. The Packers-49ers and the Giants-Steelers (which should pre-empt the Redskins in this area) will have much to do with who plays for the NFL Championship.

The league will end its season in another one of those cliff-hanger finishes that baseball envies but seldom demonstrates.

The outcome in the Eastern Conference will be decided in New York on Sunday. The Steelers must beat the Giants, who can win the title with just a tie. Strangely enough, if the Steelers win, they will finish a half-game behind the Giants. But the name of the game is percentages, and a Steeler victory would mean Pittsburgh .727, New York .714.

If the teams tie their game, it will be the second time in three years that the Giants have "tied" into the Conference crown. They tied the Cleveland Browns in the 1961 finale to nose out the Philadelphia Eagles by a half-game.

The Eastern title rests on one game, but two Western Conference games are important. Green Bay will play at San Francisco Saturday, and the Detroit Lions will invade Chicago the next day.

The Packers had a surprisingly rough first half against the Los Angeles Rams last week. And their opponent, the 49ers, rose up earlier in the season to be a giant—er, Bear killer—handing Chicago its only loss.

But the menagerie in Chicago—Bears and Lions—will probably be more evenly matched. Detroit stalled Green Bay 13-13 on Thanksgiving Day and bombed the Browns 38-10 last Sunday. Members of the Lion defense have been ailing most of the season, but should be up for Chicago. Chicago itself has the stingiest defense in the League. It gave up only 10 points to the Packers in two meetings.

But if Chicago loses and Green Bay ties, the Packers will get another crack at the Bear defense in a conference playoff.

If a playoff occurs, it will be the fourth time that a team has needed to beat another three times for a conference title. And a team has done this only once.

The Giants were that team. They beat Cleveland 6-3, 13-10, and 10-0 in 1958. Pat Summerall's club foot accounted for 17 of the Giants' points.

The Bears will not need a playoff if:

1. The Bears win,
2. The Packers lose, or
3. Both teams lose or tie.

The Packers can win the title only if the Bears lose and Green Bay wins. The most Green Bay can get from a tie is a playoff.

So that's the way it stands. Green Bay will seek a third NFL title. Or the Bears will try to make up for their 47-7 loss to the Giants in the 1956 Title Game—though they may not play the Giants this time.

And if Pittsburgh wins in the East, you can bet it will get a rough initiation into the playoff system.

Lewis, UNC's Frosh Meet Wolflets Tonite

North Carolina's coaching brass will be departing with its varsity crew for Louisiana this morning, but Dean Smith and Ken Rosemond are leaving two able hands to guide the freshmen against N. C. State tonight at Raleigh.

Donnie Walsh and Jim Hudock, former star cagers here, will coach the Tar Heel freshmen in their third engagement of the season against the Wolfets. Gametime is 8 p.m. in Carmichael Gym, behind the southwest of Reynolds Coliseum.

The Tar Babies have stirred up a lot of excitement in splitting their two starts (111-65 over Elon Jayvees, 69-71 to Clemson). And much of it has been due to the dazzling play of 6-3 Bobby Lewis, the scoring sensation from Washington.

Lewis has scored 51 and 26 points in the two games, and tales of his exploits have already been blown out of proportion as far away as Kentucky where they're saying his average is 50 plus.

Billy Freuler and guard Ian Morrison of St. Petersburg have given Lewis substantial help in the point market. Freuler hit 21 in the Elon win, 15 against Clemson while Morrison, the defensive hotshot, has scored 10 and 15. The ther Carlina starters are center Tom Gauntlett and guard Tom Parrish.

The State frosh, though losing to Wake Forest by 56-54, have won their other two contests impressively (103-74 over Edwards Military Academy and 83-50 over Norfolk Naval Air Station) and may present a large problem to UNC because of their largeness.

The Clemson frosh average better than 6-5, and the Tar Babies face the same type of team tonight. State has three men up front 6-7 or better.

The forecourt operatives are center Paul Hudson (6-11), and cornermen John Sellers (6-8) and Jerry Moore (6-7). Hudson and Moore are both averaging 11.3 points a game.

In backcourt are two six-footers, Merv Gutshall and the Wolflet's leading scorer, Eddie Biedenbach, from Pittsburgh. Biedenbach has produced at a 20.7 clip and scored 29 in the victory over EMI.

Coach Lou Pucillo employs three other men as the main bench support for his starters. They are Chip Palmer, Steve Stephenson and Jerry Simpson.

Back Of The Year? Sorry, Not Sweetan

NEW YORK (UPI) — Navy quarterback Roger Staubach, a young man already looking forward to next year, was named college football's "back of the year" for 1963 Thursday in a nationwide poll conducted by United Press International.

Staubach, the Cincinnati, Ohio junior, led Navy to a 9-1 record, second ranking in the final UPI poll and a berth in the Cotton Bowl Jan. 1, 1964, opposite top-ranked Texas.

The only word that describes Staubach's performance this year is "sensational" and the majority of the nation's sportswriters and sportscasters agree.

They gave Staubach 189 of a possible 292 votes in the annual UPI balloting. Sherman Lewis of Michigan State was a very distant second with 20 votes.

UNC Poolers Pool Talents In SC Pools

By KAYNE WING JR.

Flushed with early-season success, North Carolina's swimming team heads for southern waters today carrying the high hopes which belong with a 4-0 record.

The Blue Dolphins swim against the Clemson Tigers tonight and the South Carolina Gamecocks tomorrow afternoon, and Coach Pat Earey's pool perfectionists have every reason to believe they'll return from the Palmetto State with two more victories.

The two meets this weekend will wind up the UNC mermen's pre-Christmas splash frolics. Earlier this week the Tar Eels drowned Duke for their fourth win of the young season — a season which shows every sign of being the best in the school's aquarian history. Yea!

Everett Places Two In V-Ball

By AL KAPLAN

The dorm and fraternity intramural volleyball season is heading down the home stretch, with only the semifinal games, (slated for Monday) and the final games, (on Tuesday's agenda) left to be decided.

At this point, Everett seems to have the best chance of taking the dorm title. Everett has two teams, out of the four semifinalists, still in competition—the Rogah and the Trojans. Monday night, the Rogah takes on the Town Lodgers and the Trojans meet the winner of the Parker Playmaker-Navy Mermen game, played last night.

It is conceivable and very possible than an all Everett final might take place. If such a final game did take place, Everett would move into first place, ahead of Navy, in the total point standings. Everett now occupies the number two position, just 40 points behind the Mermen.

Phi Delt, which has so far dominated the scene in Frat Blue Murals, has one team in the frat semis. Trying to break the Delts streak of mural victories will be the boys from Chi Psi. The other semifinal tilt pits DU against Phi Kappa Sig. Phi Delt has a strong hold on first place and even a loss would not make a great difference on the standings.

The frat White semis include games between the TEP Tepids and Chi Psi-1 and the Rogues of Delta Sig versus Phi Kappa Sig. The current first place team, Phi Delt has been eliminated.

The grad league finals will be played after the Christmas vacation, because of Med School's final exams. Two Med teams have advanced to the semis, the Cleavers and Med 3. When play resumes, the Cleavers will meet Law School-1 and Med 3 is slated to play the Physics Fiends.

In the Grail Mural Tourney, four games were played Wednesday night. In the most important game, the Gunners of Craige A won their third game. Led by the scoring of Billy Taylor, the Gunners ran over the Stacy studs 24-18. Taylor was high man in the game with 14 points.

In other games, Law 2 romped over the Sigma Nu Losers 30-16. Sam Harris, of Law, paced the attack with 14 points.

The Patriots Will March Forth Again

HARMONY (UPI) — It's bunny-bopping time again and the American Legion post which annually stages the "barbaric and cruel" event says its going ahead with plans despite denunciations from animal lovers.

"Barbaric and cruel" is what the Humane Society labels the sporting event which is staged each year by North Iredell County's American Legion Post 113.

Legionnaires, armed with sticks and stones, stalk through the woods near here each year in search of the elusive cottontails, which are flushed from the brush by braying hounds. Once spotted, the rabbits are pummeled to death by the boppers.

But the bunny-bopping Legionnaires contend, as they have in the past, that it's all for a good cause and that the rabbits have a fair chance to escape the dragnet.

The rabbits are skinned and dressed, frozen and later served at the Legion's annual charity barbecue. Proceeds from the barbecue are given to Harmony and Union Grove schools for distribution among children who cannot afford school lunches.

The 1963 hunt will be held at 9:30 a.m. Saturday at the W. B. Norris farm near Olin, about 13 miles northwest of Statesville. Last year, the affair was staged on the sly because of public indignation.

The Humane Society fights each year to prevent the bunny massacre, but only in 1961 did it succeed. The Legionnaires called off the bunny bop that year because of the nationwide protest stimulated by the Humane society.

The society even tried to take their battle into Iredell Superior Court and eventually the State Supreme Court, but their efforts were in vain.

Last year, the society even managed to get National Legion Commander Dan K. Foley of Indianapolis to condemn the bunny-bop, but even his pleas fell on deaf ears.

James Yandell of Charlotte, state representative for the society, said Thursday, however, he hadn't given up. He fired off telegrams to society headquarters in Denver, Colo., to Foley and to Legion Adjutant General E. A. Blackmore. He called on them to exert their influence in an effort to stop the affair.

Meanwhile, Legion Post 113 remains firm. The bunny bop is still on.

U.S. Aircraft Shot Down In Viet Nam

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (UPI) —Two U. S. Army aircraft—a helicopter and a light plane — crashed in unrelated incidents Thursday, apparently killing eight American servicemen, it was announced today. The helicopter was reported shot down by Communist ground fire.

A military spokesman said a U. S. Army H-37 helicopter with five American soldiers aboard crashed in the Mekong River Delta about 60 miles southeast of Saigon. Four men were killed and one seriously injured.

In the other incident, the spokesman said the wreckage of a U. S. "Otter" light transport plane with four Americans and three Vietnamese aboard was found during the night 500 feet from the peak of a 7,000-foot mountain in the jungles 160 miles north of Saigon. There was no sign of survivors.

If all eight deaths are finally confirmed, they will bring the toll of American killed in action here to 126, with 80 of them this year.

The spokesman said two of the five men aboard the giant twin-engined helicopter were still alive when rescue forces arrived at the scene. One died before he could be evacuated. The other was taken to Saigon for medical treatment.

The spokesman said the helicopter pilot "lost control" and was forced to jettison wreckage of a twin-engined "Mohawk" plane which it had lifted from the ground by cables. The Mohawk had crashed Wednesday.

The military spokesman said there still was no explanation for the crash of the light transport plane, while it was on a routine flight from Ban Me Thut to the coastal city of Nha Trang. But there was some speculation that it hit the mountaintop because of bad weather.

Gator Puts A Big Bite On Our Seats

Actual distribution of Gator Bowl tickets to students, alumni and employees began yesterday at Woollen Gym, and immediately many students registered dissatisfaction with the location of their seats.

Out of the approximately 12,300 tickets alloted to the University, 7,000 are in the South Stands behind one end zone. Some 5,000 tickets for seats along the west side up to the 40-yard line have reportedly all been taken up by Educational Foundation members.

All students who bought their tickets through the University have been seated in the end zone. Vernon Crook, business manager of the athletic department, told the Daily Tar Heel yesterday he had protested the Bowl committee's allotment, but there was nothing further he could do.

"I can't believe they would stick us with seats like these," said a sophomore. "There was never any indication that we were getting anything but normal selection of seats. Erickson's gone too far this time."

"Here I am spending a $100 to make the trip down there—just to sit in the end zone and see nothing," said a junior from Pennsylvania. "I would have gladly paid more money in order to get better seats."

"Something ought to be done about this," said an irate coed. "When I get home I'll have to ask my friends how the game was. They'll see a lot more on TV than I'll ever see," muttered one student. "What do Erickson and Crook think they're doing.

"Why should students get the worst seats," asked a senior. "I've followed the team all year long and now some Jacksonville businessman will be sitting on the 50 while I'm in the end zone."

Safety Program Is Launched

A campaign to make everyone conscious of highway safety was launched yesterday by Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity and the office of the Dean of Men.

The brief but intensive campaign will feature an illustrated talk by Dr. Erle Peacock, nationally-known plastic surgeon. Peacock will speak in Carroll Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m. His topic is, "Medical Aspects of Highway Safety."

Commenting on Peacock, Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey said, "He is very qualified to speak on the subject of highway safety.

"He has spoken to many civic clubs on the subject and is also a consultant to an automobile firm on the idea of making automobiles safer."

Peacock is most renowned for his work in plastic surgery. He was featured in Life magazine several years ago for his work in repairing human tissue which had been severely damaged.

A wrecked auto will be placed in Y-Court Monday to serve as a reminder of what can result from carelessness on the highways.

Posters will be placed in dormitories and on campus to remind all drivers to "Be Careful."

"Not only must we look out for ourselves on the highway," Dean Cathey said, "But must always look out for the other fellow too, especially at this time of the year."

Cathey issued a plea for everyone to drive carefully if they are planning to go to the Gator Bowl.

"I know everyone is excited about the game," he said. "But I do want everyone to make the trip in a safe and sound condition."

He also urged students, if they could, to spend a couple of in Jacksonville rather than try to make the trip without a rest.

Textbook Co-op Plan Abandoned

By CHRIS FARRAN

Efforts for the sale of textbooks through a student cooperative have apparently been stymied, a recent Student Government Co-Op Committee report revealed.

The report quotes a memorandum issued in 1952 by W. D. Carmichael (then vice-president and comptroller of the University) stating that ". . . the Trustee's Committee on Stores felt that the University was justified in rigidly conforming to a policy of furnishing lists of textbooks solely to the Book Exchange."

Because UNC department heads were reluctant to release book lists to the committee without official approval, the committee was blocked in its efforts to establish a student co-op selling textbooks at reduced prices.

The co-op committee report says, ". . . we felt that the best course for us to follow would be affiliation with the National Student Association Book Co-op, and our correspondence with this organization indicated that there was a good possibility that such arrangements could be made.

"In addition, we found at least one suitable off-campus location available for rental at fairly reasonable rates."

In view of the Administration's policy of not releasing departmental book lists, however, the committee says, ". . . it is our feeling that further efforts in student sales of texts would be futile."

The report, however, states that "The present intention of the Co-op Committee is to continue working toward the establishment of a student co-operative which will deal in clothing and other items used by a large portion of the student body."

The committee's investigation reveals substantial profits made by University stores over the past several years, portions of which were used for athletic grants-in-aid.

The University's retail stores (Book Exchange, Scuttlebutt, Circus Room, etc.) realized a net income of $235,467 for the fiscal year 1962-63, the report said. Approximately 39 per cent ($91,832) of the total came from the sale of new and used textbooks.

The report states, "During this period the Retail Stores transferred $155,000 to the Student Aid Office, of which $30,000 was used for Grants-In-Aid. In addition, the Retail Stores, held $200,000 in reserve for 'Expansion and Improvement.'"

The Retail Stores' transfers to the Student Aid Office for 1963-64 will be $175,000, of which $40,000 will be used for grants-in-aid, according to the report.

Construction of the new Book Exchange, costing $500,000, will begin in the spring and will be paid for over a period of years with profits from the retail stores.

The committee's investigation showed that ". . . of the $247,689 to be awarded as scholarships and fellowships during 1963-64, only $115,000 is to be transferred from the retail stores, with the balance coming from various other sources."

The committee submitted its report to Don Curtis, chairman of campus affairs, and Student Body President Mike Lawler after agreeing in a recent meeting that it had been effectively blocked in its attempt to obtain departmental book lists.

It was the conclusion of the committee that such restricting of textbooks lists is "completely unwarranted" by the circumstances.

The profits of the Book X from the sale of textbooks do not appear to be essential to the continuation of any of the UNC scholarship programs, the committee said.

"On the other hand, a student textbook co-operative would be beneficial to many of the same students who are assisted through scholarship programs."

The student co-op committee was established last spring by Lawler with Bob Jones as its chairman.

Other Major Bills Passed In Big Session

By HUGH STEVENS

A busy Student Legislature fought its way through several significant issues in its regular session Thursday.

Some of the action taken:

—Approval of a resolution backing the Interfraternity Council in its stand on social privileges for bull pledges and inactives.

—Appropriation of $1,697.83 to the Daily Tar Heel for a new truck.

—Unanimous support of a resolution urging that the new 975-man living unit be named for the late President Kennedy.

—Appropriation of $2,460 for the printing of additional Yackety-Yacks.

—Unanimous support of the UNC Fencing Club in its efforts to achieve varsity status.

Mike Chanin and Bo Edwards, sponsors of the IFC resolution, asked the body to support the IFC in its presentation to the Faculty Committee on Fraternities concerning a new social status for bull pledges and inactives.

Chanin noted the contributions made to the campus by fraternities, and said he felt it was unfair to exclude certain members from social activities.

The IFC recently voted to allow inactives and bull pledges to attend social functions and pay social fees.

"The fraternity system needs our support in this matter," Edwards said. "This is a point of student self-regulation, and I believe this body supports that principle."

Neal Jackson spoke for the resolution, saying he felt that the new IFC rule was not detrimental to house scholarship.

"This body," the resolution says, "feels that the IFC has acted with responsibility in its decision."

Car Demolished; 3 Youths Unhurt

Three Chapel Hill youths escaped serious injury late Thursday night when their car went out of control and rolled over on Strowd Hill on East Franklin Street.

State Highway Patrolman B. W. Lacock said he was driving up the hill when he saw a car coming in the opposite direction at a high rate of speed. The patrolman said he was forced to the side of the road by the other vehicle.

Apparently the lights on the youth's car went out as it passed patrolman Lacock, and it lost control on the curve. "I hardly had time to turn around, and I saw those lights flipping, around," said Patrolman Lacock.

The driver, Tim Kednocker, 18, was charged with drunken driving and his case set for January 3, 1964. No other charges were made. The two other passengers were Andrew E. Julian and William T. Marx, 19.

Julian, who was in the front seat, required four stitches to close a cut on his left hip. Neither Marx nor Kednocker was injured.

The accident, which occurred about 10:50 p.m., totally wrecked the 1957 four-door Ford sedan.

MICKSUP

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Bobby Culp and Larry Ledford, BVP residents, got a real surprise when they returned to Gastonia after watching most of the Duke game Thanksgiving.

They left the game with three minutes to go. They drove back home in a radioless car, cussing all the way.

It was not until after they had made the 150-mile trek that they discovered UNC had won in the final minutes on Max Chapman's field goal.

A little earlier in the season it was Chapman who was cussing all the way to the field house. Those who were still in control of their senses at the end of the State game will remember Max lying on the ground some three inches short of the goal line.

So close, yet so far away—Max pushed the ball into the end zone and moaned. Three inches and no score. Then 42 yards away and three points. Three points which were as good as three thousand.

And now, neighbors, it's time for our weakly sing along. This is sung to the tune of "Matilda." All together now.

Alderman dorm held its annual Christmas tree-decorating party Thursday. And somehow or another Bob Samsot and I wound up over there helping to decorate.

It was a riot. Bob fell out of the tree while trying to hang up the mistletoe. He got hung in the Christmas lights and lit up like a Roman canble.

The girls thought it was very funny. Ha Ha. Actually, Alice Schmidt and friend Bennett Glass did most of the real work. They were aided in various ways by Sandra Morgan, Mike Newsom, Patty Nash, Susan Matuszak, Martha Capel, Pat Stebbins, Susan Adams and a cute little number from New Orleans named Sybil.

Sam Kelly, who lives about 10 miles from Mebane just couldn't make it for jury duty Thursday at Superior Court in Hillsboro.

"My hearing ain't what it used to be," Sam said. "The words just run together. I don't know exactly what the trouble is."

Sam was excused from jury duty.

He is 62 years old.

Well, sports fans, I got my Gator Bowl tickets yesterday. If your tickets are for the South end, then I know I won't be alone in the end zone.

I really couldn't believe the seats were in the end zone, and the fourth row up at that. It seems to me that students, who are the ones that really support the team, should receive better seats than that.

Oh, well, maybe if we peer out behind our hot dogs, and get ourselves a first-class periscope, we might be able to tell what's going on.

See you later at the Gator.

Maybe.

Experimental Residence Hall Successful — Maybe

By MARTY BRENNAMAN

The experimental housing program started this year for football players has come up with three verdicts, ranging from "very successful" to "it's too early to tell."

Head Fotball Coach Jim Hickey and two "babysitters" say the experiment has been a tremendous success while Dean of Men William G. Long says "it's still an experiment."

Since early September, the entire freshman and varsity squads have been rooming, two in each room according to their respective positions, in the spacious confines of Ehringhaus dormitory.

"Yes, the program has worked out excellently," Hickey said. "In previous years, the players have lived all over the campus. We've always been in a situation where members lived in dormitories or fraternity houses where they couldn't get to sleep. Also, parents would call for their sons, and many times we couldn't get hold of them. Now, if we need to find one of them, the fact that they are all living together makes it very convenient to locate who we need."

When asked about the dormitory itself, Hickey said, "Our idea was never to segregate the boys from the rest of the student body. We did not want a dormitory that would house just football players. Ehringhaus is so big that the players can live together and still come in contact with the rest of the student body. Furthermore, by having eating facilities right there, a tremendous amount of time is saved in this respect."

Have there been any disciplinary problems?

"As far as I know," Hickey said, "there have been none whatsoever."

Will the program be continued? "Yes, if it's permitted, the program will be carried on in the coming years. Since it was started in September, the team has developed a tremendous feeling of togetherness, more than in past years."

The "babysitters," George Boutselis and Tom Cabe, live in the dormitory with the players and act as supervisors. Their duties, as Boutselis put it, "are to see that they behave themselves as any ordinary student should."

He went on to say that "the program has been very successful. "It's contributed greatly to the over-all spirit of the team and they have all conducted themselves as true Carolina gentlemen."

Cabe echoed his sentiments by saying "It gives the boys a chance to live, work and have recreation together. As far as I'm concerned, it's one of the best things that's ever happened to Carolina football and has been one of the big contributing factors to the success of our team this year."

Dean Long, while not as liberal with praise for the experiment as the others, did seem quite optimistic.

"It's too early to say anything definite now," he said, "but if I had to say anything, I would say that the experiment has been a success.

"We have had no evaluation of it as yet. At the end of the spring semester, we will get together with the Resident Advisors, Men's Residence Council, Student Government and individuals in the dormitory and discuss it. We'd appreciate comments and criticisms to help determine whether or not it will be a lasting thing.

"All reports with respect to their conduct have been favorable. I have been much more pleased with the conduct of the football players than ever before."

INTERNSHIPS

Students interested in Congressional Internships for the summer of 1964 are invited to meet at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday in 207 Caldwell Hall.

Under the program, interns work as regular members of a Congressman's or Senator's staff for a period of ten weeks. The Political Studies Program awards each intern $500 to cover travel and living expenses.

Juniors or exceptional sophomores, as well as grad students, are eligible to apply. A "B" average is recommended, as well as sufficient course work in political science.

Application balnks and additional information may be obtained from Dr. Donald R. Matthews in the Political Science offices.

Review Board Upholds Two

The Faculty Review Board upheld a Men's Council decision suspending a student for one semester in a hearing Tuesday night.

The student had been found guilty of being an accessory after the fact on a charge of stealing a telephone from a girl's dormitory in a Men's Council case last Thursday.

At the time of his conviction the boy was serving a probation sentence given to him by the Council in a previous case. A conviction while on probation results in automatic suspension.

The student had pleaded not guilty in the Men's Council trial saying that he knew about the theft but that he had intended to see that the telephone was returned. However, when confronted by a police officer, he and two other boys did not tell of the theft.

The boy who actually stole the telephone was given a two-semester probation in the same case.

The appeal was the third heard by the Faculty Review Board since its creation earlier this fall. In the first two appeals, the Board upheld the Council's decision once and reduced a two-semester sentence to one semester in the other.

'This Is Bad News'

What Happened When Castro Heard The News

By JEAN DANIEL
The New Republic

Editor's Note: Jean Daniel, a reporter for L'Express and The New Republic, had an interview with President Kennedy just before he left Washington for Havana. He was in Cuba about three weeks when the news of the President's death was given to Fidel Castro.

It was around 1:30 in the afternoon, Cuban time. We were having lunch in the living room of the modest summer residence which Fidel Castro owns on magnificent Varadero Beach, 220 kilometers from Havana. For at least the tenth time, I was questioning the Cuban leader on details of the negotiations with Russia before the missile installations last year. The telephone rang, a secretary in guerrilla garb announced that Mr. Dorticos, President of the Cuban Republic, had an urgent communication for the Prime Minister. Fidel picked up the phone and I heard him say: "Como? Un atendato?" ("What's that? An attempted assassination?") He then turned to us to say that Kennedy has just been struck down in Dallas. Then he went back to the telephone and exclaimed in a loud voice "Herido? Muy gravemente?" ("Wounded? Very seriously?")

He came back, sat down, and repeated three times the words: "Es una mala noticia." ("This is bad news".) He remained silent for a moment, awaiting another call with further news. He remarked while we waited that there was an alarmingly sizable lunatic fringe in American society and that this deed could equally well have been the work of a madman or of a terrorist. Perhaps a Vietnamese? Or a member of the Ku Klux Klan? The second call came through: it was hoped they would be able to announce that the United States President was still alive, that there was hope of saving him. Fidel Castro's immediate reaction was: "If they can, he is already re-elected." He pronounced these words with satisfaction.

This sentence was a sequel to a conversation we had held on a previous evening and which had turned into an all-night session. To be precise, it lasted from 10 in the evening until 4 in the morning. A good part of the talk revolved about the impressions I recounted to him of an interview which President Kennedy granted me this last October 24, and about Fidel Castro's reactions to these impressions. During this nocturnal discussion, Castro had delivered himself of a relentless indictment of U.S. policy, adding that in the recent past Washington had had ample opportunity to normalize its relations with Cuba, but that instead it had tolerated a CIA program of training, equipping and organizing a counter-revolution. He had told me that he wasn't in the least fearful of his life, since danger was his national milieu, and if he were to become a victim of the United States this would simply enhance his radius of influence in Latin America as well as throughout the socialist world. He was speaking, he said, from the viewpoint of the interests of peace in both the American continents. To achieve this goal, a leader would have to arise in the United States capable of understanding the explosive realities of Latin America and of meeting them halfway. Then, suddenly, he had taken a less hostile attack: "Kennedy could still be this man. He still has the possibilty of becoming, in the eyes of history, the greatest President of the United States, the leader who may at last understand that there can be coexistence between capitalists and socialists, even in the Americas. He would then be an even greater President than Lincoln. I know, for eample, that for Khruschchev, Kennedy is man yon can talk with. I have gotten this impression from all my conversations with Khrushchev. Other leaders have assured me that to attain this goal, we must first await his re-election. Personally, I consider him responsible for everything, but I will say this: he has come to understand many things over the past few months; and then too, in the last analysis, I'm convinced that anyone else would be worse." Then Fidel had added with a broad and boyish grin: "If you see him again, you can tell him that I'm willing to declare Goldwater my friend if that will guarantee Kennedy's re-election!"

This conversation was held on November 19.

Now it was nearly 2 o'clock and we got up from the table and settled ourselves in front of a radio. Commandant Vallero, his physician, aide-de-camp, and intimate friend, was easily able to get the broadcasts from the NBC network in Miami. As the news came in, Valero would translate it for Fidel: Kennedy wounded in the head; pursuit of the assassin; murder of a policeman; finally the fatal announcement: President Kennedy is dead. Then Fidel stood up and said to me: "Everything is changed. Everything is going to change. The United States occupies such a position in world affairs that the death of a President of that country affects millions of people in every corner of the globe. The cold war, relations with Russia, Latin America, Cuba, the Negro question . . . all will have to be rethought. I'll tell you one thing: at least Kennedy was an enemy to whom we had become accustomed. This is a serious matter, an extremely serious matter."

After the quarter-hour of silence observed by all the American radio stations, we once more tuned in on Miami; the silence had only been broken by a rebroadcasting of the American national anthem. Strange indeed was the impression made, on hearing this hymn ring out in the house of Fidel Castro, in the midst of a circle of worried faces. "Now," Fidel said, "they will have to find the assassin quickly, but very quickly, otherwise, you watch and see, I know them, they will try to put the blame on us for this thing. But tell me, how many Presidents have been assassinated? Four? This is most disturbing! In Cuba, only one has been assassinated. You know, when we were hiding out oin the Sierra there were some (not in my group, in another who wanted to kill Batista. They thought they could do away with a regime by decapitating it. I have always been violently opposed to such methods. First of all from the viewpoint of political self-interest, because so far as Cuba is concerned, if Batista had been killed he would have been replaced by some military figure who would have tried to make the revolutionists pay for the martyrdom of the dictator. But I was also opposed to it on personal grounds; assassination is repellent to me."

The broadcasts were now resumed. One reporter felt he should mention the difficulty Mrs. Kennedy was having in getting rid of her bloodstained stockings. Fidel exploded: "What sort of a mind is this!" He repeated the remark several times: "What sort of mind is this? There is a difference in our civilizations after all. Are you like this in Europe? For us Latin Americans, death is a sacred matter; not only does it mark the close of hostilities, but it also imposes decency, dignity, respect. There are even street urchins who behave like kings in ehtface of death. Incidentally, this reminds me of something else: if you write all those things I told you yesterday against Kennedy's policy, don't use his name now; speak instead of the policy of the United States government."

Toward 5 o'clock, Fidel Castro declared that since there was nothing we could do to alter the tragedy, we must try to put our time to good use in spite of it. He wanted to accompany me in person on a visit to a granja de pueblo (state farm), where he had been engaging in some experiments. His present obsession is agriculture. He reads nothing but agronomical studies and reports. He dwells lyrically on the soil, fertilizers, and the possibilities which will give Cuba enough sugar cane by 1970 to achieve economic independence.

We went by car, with the radio on. The Dallas police were now hot on the trail of the assassin. He is a Russian spy, says the news commentator. Five minutes later, correction: he is a spy married to a Russian. Fidel said: "There, didn't I tell you; it'll be my turn next." But not yet. The next word was: the assassin is a Marxist deserter.Then the word came through, in effect, that the assassin was a young man who was a member of the "Fair Play for Suba Committee," that he was an admirer of Fidel Castro. Fidel declared: "If they had had proof, they would have said he was an agent, an accomplice, a hired killer. In saying simply that he is an admirer, this is just to try and make an association in people's minds between the name of Castro and the emotion awakened by the assassination. This is a publicity method, a propaganda device. It's terrible. But you know, I'm sure this will all soon blow over. There are too many competing policies in the United States for any single one to be able to impose itself universalliy for very long."

We arrived at the granja de pueblo, where the farmers welcomed Fidel. At that very moment, a speaker announced over the radio that it was now known that the assassin is a "pro-Castro Marxist." One commentator followed another; the remarks became increasingly emotional, increasingly aggressive. Fidel then ecued himself: "We shall have to give up the visit to the farm." We went on toward Matanzas from where he could telephone President Dorticos. On the way he had questions: "Who is Lyndon Johnson? What is his reputation? What were his relations with Kennedy? With Khruschchev? What was his position at the time of the attempted invasion of Suba?" Finally and most important of all: "What authority does he exercise over the CIA?" Then abruptly he looked at his watch, saw that it would be half an hour before we reached Matanzas and, practically on the spot, he dropped off to sleep.

After Matanzas, where he must have decreed a state of alert, we returned to Varadero for dinner. Quoting the words spoken to him by a woman shortly before, he said to me that it was an irony of history for the Cubans, in the situation to which they had been reduced by the blockade, to have to mourn the death of a President of the United States. "After all," he added, "there are perhaps some people in the world to whom this news is cause for rejoicing. The South Vietnamese guerrillas, for example, and also, I would imagine, Madame Nhu!"

I thought of the people of Cuba, accustomed to the sight of posters like the one depicting the Red Army with maquis superimposed in front, and the screaming captions, "Halt, Mr. Kennedy! Cuba Is Not Alone. . . ." I thought of all those who had been led to associmate their deprivations with the policies of President John F. Kennedy.

At dinner I was able to take up all my questions. What had motivated Castro to endanger the peace of the world with the missiles in Cuba? How dependent was Cuba on the Soviet Union? Is it not possible to envisage relations between Cuba and the United States along the same lines as those between Finland and the Russians? How was the transition made from the humanism of Sierra Maestra to the Marxism-Leninism of 1961? Fidel Castro, once more in top form, had an explanation for everything. Then he questioned me once more on Kennedy, and each time I eulogized the intellectual qualities of the assassinated President, I awakened the keenest interest in him.

The Cubans have lived with the United States in that cruel intimacy so familiar to me of the colonized with their colonizers. Nevertheless, it was in intimacy. In that very seductive city of Havana to which we returned in the evening, where the luminous signboards with Marxist slogans have replaced the Coca-Cola and toothpaste billboards, in the midst of Soviet exhibits and Czechoslovakian trucks, a certain American emotion vibrated in the atmosphere, compounded of resentment, of concern, of anxiety, yet also, in spite of everything, of a mysterious almost imperceptible rapprochement. After all, this American President was able to reach accord with our Russian friends during his lifetime, said a young Cuban intellectual to me as I was taking my leave. It was almost as though he were apologizing for not rejoicing at the assassination.

All Right, Who Did It? I Did!

Two reasons often given by scientists for withholding information from the press are:

1. They hesitate to take credit for themselves.
2. They must share the honor with their colleagues.

Modern scientists are strict about giving appropriate recognition to others. They are team-work operators. They shrink from personal publicity since science is so long and the work of one man is built upon the work of many others who have gone before.

That attitude deserves commendation, in a way, especially when it relates to altruism and giving proper consideration to one's fellows. But the idea can be carried too far.

However it was not always thus. Scientists of yore were plain talkers and individualists. Archimedes is an example. When he conceived the idea that a body displaces an amount of water equal to its own bulk, he got so excited he forgot the normal amenities.

It happened that the relationships of ideas occurred to him while he was in a public bath. He jumped out of the bath, and with only perhaps a towel wrapped around him, ran into the street yelling "Eureka."

Eureka doesn't mean: "My colleagues and I have made some tentative findings that upon further research may have some value in relation to physics, and pending final checks and balances, I wish to give credit to my colleagues who have worked with me in this task."

Eureka means: "I have found it."

He uses the personal pronoun "I." He doesn't say others are laboring to determine the same things. He doesn't moderate or modify or dilute his assertion with any qualms or doubts. He has found it!

It might be nice today to hear a few more "I have's . . . ," and a few less "We feel that we may possibly have . . ."

A Funny Thing Happened To The Forum

One of the more unfortunate happenings of the year has been the apparent demise of the Carolina Forum.

As yet, the Forum has produced no speakers. In the past it has been one of the most effective organizations in Student Government, bringing such diverse speakers as William F. Buckley, Norman Thomas and Malcolm X to the campus. Rarely have the speakers failed to attract a packed house.

John Ulfelder is Chairman of this year's Forum, and he has written letters to almost every conceivable person in the world (including Kenya's Kenyatta). So far, he has received no definite commitments.

Who is at fault? Ulfelder has tried to contact people. Student government has appropriated $2,045 to attract the best. But they still won't come.

Well, part of the blame must go to the general concept of the organization. The appointment of chairman is made in the spring by the new President of the Student Body. If the chairman is to get speakers for the fall, he must start work immediately, and immediately is just before exams. If the appointment were to be made at the start of the spring semester, the chairman would have adequate time to line up a good schedule. And the position is non-political enough to allow the next President to live with a chairman not of his choice.

Now to Mr. Ulfelder. It is apparent that he did not do much at the end of last year. But he had all summer, and all summer he was in Washington, D. C., working as an intern in the office of a U.S. Congressman. It is inconceivable that he didn't get any speakers during that time.

But all is not lost, as the year has a long way to go. The Forum, namely Mr. Ulfelder, can save its good name, and all will be forgiven.

A Textbook For Writers

By DONNA FAGG

The Process of Creative Writing by Pearl Hogrefe. Harper and Row: 1963. Third Edition. ($7.50). 457 pp.

This is a textbook for the beginning writer. It will hold the same fascination for the same people that the articles in the writers' magazines have. Writers, especially beginning ones, are in search of new ways to court the muse.

The text material is valuable but the illustrative selections that emphasize developing techniques is far more valuable than all the "how-to" sections. These selections serve as idea lists. As with the writers' magazines the real value is in the lists given in appendix. In this case instead of list of markets for freelancers, the writer is given idea lists.

"First, the best material for creative writing is the stuff of experience, especially inner experience, or outer experience interpreted by inner feeling . . . Second, creative writing is communication."

She freely admits that there are those people who question whether or not creative writing can be taught at all. She bolsters up fledging writers by stating, "If you are willing to use your senses around you, if you have empathy for people and things and are willing to enlarge your sympathies, and if you are willing to practice techniques of writing, you can develop enough skill to write with sincerity and a certain amount of power."

Organization is Miss Hogrefe's strong point. While she progresses from the small sensory detail to the short story, she allows for flexibility.

Epecially helpful to the beginning writer are the student selections. In examination of another's work, the student is better equipped to criticize his own efforts more objectively and freely.

Without a teacher to guide the use of the text, the most important thing for the young would-be writer to learn is Miss Hogrefe's hypothesis, "Creativity is activity."

Miss Hogrefe taught previously at the State College of Iowa and was head of the English department at Lousiana Polytechnical Institute. She is author of "Saint Thomas More Circle" and a volume of poetry, "Renewal." She has also written many articles in professional journals.

Humor For Christmas

By STEVE DENNIS

THE SECOND ADLER BOOK OF PUZZLES AND RIDDLES, by Peggy Adler, John Day, 1963, $2.50.

For little brothers, small cousins, and children down the block at home whose Christmas presents will be a problem to select, Peggy Adler's "Second Adler Book of Puzzles and Riddles" may be an easy and satisfying solution. The book's jacket says that some of the puzzles will be suitable to an eleven-year-old, but I suspect the format of the book will appeal more to a child between the ages of six and nine, even if a few of the more sophisticated puzzles may require some adult hints. All of the riddles have been rewritten for this book, but most of them are old chestnus. The hidden geography puzzles are somewhat unfair and very artificial, however. Even so, this book should provide a child with amusement and some intellectual challenge far beyond the Christmas vacation.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Ed. note — We remind those who wish to write letters-to-the-editors that we must know the identity of the writer. Otherwise the letter will not run.

Like Sex

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Realizing that this nation was founded by men and women of diverse nature, I have read with quiet understanding the letters from the Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers. By the grace of God we live in a land blessed with the freedoms granted to us by our forefathers. They too preached insidious ideas. Their voices, those of Henry, Paine, Madison, Hamilton, Jay and a host of others poured forth words contrary to the liking of the British Parliament. But were they traitors or apostles of the Devil? No. The English common law set up in the Magna Carta provided for freedom of speech. And, although America broke away from England, she did establish her government in many ways patterned on Britain. We today can and should remember history. Voltaire said, "I may not agree with what you say, Sir, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Can we who cherish freedom and liberty do any less?

I do not condemn the SCHEISS for their intentions are honorable. But it is moving in a direction far different than its supposed purpose. Hitler too, criticized books at first and then, Lincoln Steffens, the renowned Muckraker of the 1900's, reminded of his early life, said, "Let no man tell you what is good or bad art. To know and understand you must decide for yourself." Is the SCHEISS trying to tell the readers what it should read or what is good and bad in literature, in ideas, in ideologies? No, but the implication is there.

Gamaliel, the gifted teacher of the law, when asked what he thought concerning the jailing and punishment of a band led by a man called Peter, answered by saying that if it was of men it would perish, but if it was of God then no man could dare oppose it.

But we are concerned with wordly things, and our concern needs a full understanding and knowledge. Communism can be likened unto sex. Where shall we learn about it, from the toilet or gutter, or rather from those capable to teach us—not from one-sided views but from all perspectives?

Valid?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I have read the letters to The Tar Heel from the Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers with great interest. At the mention of that noble veteran ex-PFC Wintergreen, I had some question as to the validity of the organization, but today's letter leaves no doubt in my mind that the name "Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers" (SCHEISS) is well chosen.

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Although there is an abundance of feminine beauty afoot, there are few natural beauties so perfect in every respect that they can't and don't resort to beauty boosts. Artificial lashes, for example, are used more and more to elongate or enlarge eyes and to fill where natural hairs are sparse.

Artificial lashes are quite easy to cut and trim, and the real skill in their use is to subtly blend the natural and the artificial. Although the false lash adhesive is transparent when dry, it is wise to follow up with an accent of eye liner or eyebrow pencil and to finish up by blending carefully and tastefully with mascara.

Incidentally, careful and tasteful adequately describe the attention your hair receives at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon. Whether it be a shampoo, permanent or styling, our operators and stylists use their training and experience to fullest advantage at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon, 133½ East Franklin Street, Phone 942-4335. Open Friday evenings, too. Call for appointment.

At issue was the method by which proper care and use of the truck could be guaranteed. A stipulation which would have made unauthorized use an Honor Council violation was voted out.

There was little doubt that a new truck was needed.

Finance Committee Chairman Arthur Hays, in his report to the body, noted that "the old truck is in exceedingly bad shape."

"At the present time," he said, there is no window pane for the left door, no door latch, no tailgate, no spare tire, and no jack. The manifold is cracked, the battery is weak, the only forward gear is third, the shocks are worn, and the steering is loose."

The new truck, an International Harvester Scout, will be delivered to the DTH in the near future.

The Kennedy resolution, sponsored by Don Carson, passed with little effort.

Chanin said the new hall would be "a fitting and lasting memorial to a man who was interested in students and this University."

He said it did not represent an attempt to join in the rush to name everything and anything fof the late President.

The resolution will be sent to the Committee on Building and Grounds for consideration.

The Yack appropriation came as the result of a need for additional copies in the face of this year's unexpectedly high enrollment.

Martin Lancaster, who sponsored the bill, said "the Yack is confident that these 500 additional copies will be sufficient when coupled with other savings."

"We are committed to provide Yacks for 85 per cent of the students," he said. "The higher enrollment is a situation which could not be foreseen."

Jefferson, author of the Fencing Club resolution, said the club is meeting with the Athletic Association to ask for varsity status.

"The Club has a long record of excellence against top-notch competitors," he said. "They will be fine representatives of the University in a varsity capacity."

In the past, Davis indicated, the club has had to be self-supporting and its members received no official recognition.

The resolution will be conveyed to members of the Athletic Association.

In other business, Hugh Wilson and Mike Chanin were sworn in as new legislators.

Bob Spearman, legislative speaker, announced that a special session will be held Monday to help clear the calendar before Christmas vacation.

Legislators absent were Neils Devere (SP), TM IV; Judy Frieder (SP), DW IV; Harvey Kline (SP), DM VI; and Charles Lefler (SP), DM III.

'TIS THE SEASON TO BE JOLLY

If you have been reading this column—and I hope you have; I mean I genuinely hope so; I mean it does not profit me one penny whether you read this column or not; I mean I am paid every week by the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes and my emolument is not affected in any way by the number of people who read or fail to read this column—an act of generosity perfectly characteristic of the makers of Marlboro, you would say if you knew them as I do; I mean here are tobacconists gray at the temples and full of honors who approach their art as eagerly, as dewy-eyed as the youngest of practitioners; I mean the purpose of the Marlboro makers is simply to put the best of all possible filters behind the best of all possible tobaccos and then go, heads high, into the market place with their wares, confident that the inborn sense of right and wrong, of good and bad, of worthy and unworthy, which is the natural instinct of every American, will result in a modest return to themselves for their long hours and dedicated labors—not, let me hasten to add, that money is of first importance to the makers of Marlboro; all these simple men require is plain, wholesome food, plenty of Marlboros, and the knowledge that they have scattered a bit of sunshine into the lives of smokers everywhere; if, I say, you have been reading this column, you may remember that last week we started to discuss Christmas gifts.

We agreed, of course, to give cartons of Marlboro to all our friends and also to as many total strangers as possible. Today let us look into some other welcome gifts.

Do you know someone who is interested in American history? If so, he will surely appreciate a statuette of Millard Fillmore with a clock in the stomach. (Mr. Fillmore, incidentally, was the only American president with a clock in the stomach. James K. Polk had a stem-winder in his head, and William Henry Harrison chimed the quarter-hour, but only Mr. Fillmore, of all our chief executives, had a clock in the stomach. Franklin Pierce had a sweep second hand and Zachary Taylor had seventeen jewels, but, I repeat, Mr. Fillmore and Mr. Fillmore alone had a clock in the stomach. Some say that Mr. Fillmore was also the first president with power steering, but most historians assign this distinction to Chester A. Arthur. However, it has been established beyond doubt that Mr. Fillmore was the first president with a thermostat. Small wonder they called him Old Hickory!)

But I digress. To get back to welcome and unusual Christmas gifts, here's one that's sure to please—a gift certificate from the American Chiropractic Society. Accompanying each certificate is this winsome little poem:

Merry Christmas, Happy New Year,
May your spine forever shine,
Blessings on your aching back.
May your lumbar ne'er grow number,
May your backbone ne'er dislodge,
May your caudal never dawdle,
Joyeux Noel! Heureux massage!

Bayou Beckons UNC For Two Games

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

LAST SEASON, Coach John C. (Whack) Hyder and his Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets had one of the finest teams in the South, possibly the country. Last season, Hyder and Georgia Tech went to Louisiana late in the basketball year, not far from the Southeastern Conference title. Last season, Hyder and Georgia Tech got shot down twice there, by LSU (56-54) and by Tulane (77-69). Blitz went the title hopes.

"Ha, ha," UNC Coach Dean Smith chuckled this week. "This basketball is a funny game. That home court is far more important than you think. These teams can be very tough at home. We're not looking for any easy time down there."

Ha, ha, coach. We don't usually laugh after getting beat 100-80. But then Smith has to take these things in stride, and anyway, that Kentucky game was far short of any 20-point difference in the teams.

Smith had, and still has, great respect for Kentucky. But the fact that the Wildcats were, at most, only nine points better than UNC (and that is at Lexington) is one which he cannot hold back when talking about his club's second loss.

"I doubt if any team in the country could have beaten them that night at Lexington," Smith said. "Their height is only medium, that 6-3, 6-5 stuff much like ours, but they are so quick. That speed and that jumping ability is what gives them power.

"We played well enough to win, and I was even more pleased with the guys than in our game with Indiana. I look up there at the end and see that big '100' and I know we weren't that poor on defense. They got up that high at the end when we had to press after Billy left. The fast breaks and easy layups made the margin 20. I just wish Billy could have stayed in—he would have had his finest scoring night."

So you look to the past and you just know Smith wants that game back so much. But then he knows he can't dwell on it too long, for these early season games are coming thick and fast and he needs what little time he has to get ready for them, not to think about what might have been.

Smith uses that old coaching cliche in discussing the two-game road stand that starts tonight in Baton Rouge. "We just have to play these one at a time," he says. "I haven't even thought about Tulane. We prepare for them Sunday."

He hesitates to add that the Green Wave can't do much more than that to opponents this year and is probably the weakest link in the schedule. But it's LSU tonight, and it could be very, very tough.

"These first four games have not changed my first impression—that we would have a good year. If anything, I am more encouraged now. But, again, we have to bounce back this weekend from a defeat, and I'm very wary of LSU."

Smith goes on to tell why. "Anybody that goes down to Texas by just five—at Texas—is no patsy. They also didn't look too bad against Rice, another one of the top teams in the Southwest. And Lovola of New Orleans is supposed to be good this year. LSU handled them easily.

"They've got two guys we'll have to look out for. (Dick) Maile, a forward, is probably their most important man. (Sam) Chase in backcourt is a fine guard with some good moves. I haven't heard much about the big man (Bill) Wilson.

"One thing I'm thankful for—we're away from home, but it won't be like Clemson. In both the gyms we'll be in, the fans sit away from the court. Capacity's about 7,000 at LSU, 5,200 at New Orleans. That one's right near the Sugar Bowl."

Gator Ticket Situation A Farce

AFTER THEY STOPPED screaming about North Carolina's allotment of tickets to the Gator Bowl, it was time to fix blame. People shout "It's Chuck Erickson. It's got to be him. He's behind everything. String him up."

But the story is far away from Chuck Erickson, and, in this case at least, far away from the University and its business manager of athletics, Vernon Crook.

Before demanding Coach Jim Hickey and the Tar Heels immediately stop practicing and refuse their invitation to Jacksonville, it must be understood that, again, the students, for whom athletics are supposed to be run but are not, have again been . . . (again been you know what).

The Gator Bowl provided some 12,300 tickets to the University. Seven thousand of these are behind one goal line (the South Stands). In othre words, dad, we got 7,000 end zone seats.

About 5,000 seats are sideline spots on the west side up to the 40-yard line. (UNC also got a few on the east side around the five-yard line). But all of these, as far as I can tell after talking with Crook, have been given to Educational Foundation members—alumni, etc. with the coins that pay for most of the athletic program here.

And that still doesn't provide for all the people who ordered their ducats through the University. Some 1,500 more Foundation members will be sitting in the end zone or in the section on the east side—an overflow of alums from the sideline seats.

This means no students who bought their tickets through the University will be sitting along the sidelines. This is preposterous. You pay six bucks to watch a vender spill some mustard on some broad's suit. And that's about it.

Whose fault is it? The Gator Bowl has made a mockery of serving students by its ridiculous stunt of 7,000 of its 12,000 being in the end zone. This is where the biggest blame must lie.

Crook protested the allotment, but what can you do? This is an invitational affair. We've got to take it or leave it. Crook took it.

Educational Foundation orders started pouring into the athletic office immediately after the announcement of UNC's acceptance of the bid. The business manager said more than 5,000 were filled on that first Monday. And he's got to give priority to them before the students. So, away went the sideline seats.

But it seems to me Crook could have told the students the situation before the flock gathered to buy "good" seats. Some guys rushed to the ticket office, thinking the sooner they ordered, the better spots they would get. The essential difference in end zone seats in a football stadium is like the difference between taking death by knife or by poison.

And if Crook didn't know the situation before he got the tickets from the Bowl officials, that's an even bigger shame.

The assumption they were selling tickets on a priority basis was Also a sucker deal. We've gotten many complaints from guys who got their tickets on the first day—and they're ending up sitting in the first five rows of the end zone. Now, anybody knows if you're going to sit in the end zone, sit high, man, high.

That fifth row will provide a nice view of that beautiful Jacksonville sun. If it doesn't rain, which would be just too bad for the Gator Bowl committee.

Carolina Fall Sports—38-10-2

UNC's FALL SPORTS accomplishments reached all kinds of victorious proportions this past season. Varsity teams compiled a 20-5-2 record (7-0-1 in the Big Four). Football was 8-2-0, Soccer 5-3-2 and Cross Country 7-0-0 for an over-all winning percentage of .800.

Freshman teams were right behind with a .722 mark on 15-5-0. Football was 3-2, Soccer 6-2 and Cross Country 4-1.

The only blots to an otherwise perfect record for UNC teams in the Big Four were the varsity soccer team's 1-1 tie with Duke and the freshman cross-country team's 25-30 loss to Wake Forest.

LSU Tonight, Tulane Monday On Tar Heels' Big Road Trip

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The 1963 part of North Carolina's basketball season has so far come in pairs. First, the Tar Heels went against two teams from South Carolina. It was not supposed to be, but it was a split. Next, they were on the road against two relatively mid-U.S. clubs. Again, a split.

Now, UNC plays two games again with time to adequately prepare for only one of them. Luckily, that one is the tougher. And, this time, again, there's supposed to be no split.

Coach Dean Smith's still-questionable club plays tonight at Baton Rouge, La., against a fair (but, at home, tough) LSU team. Monday night, it's a poor Tulane five at New Orleans. Both games will be broadcast by Bill Currie over WRAL (1240), LSU at 8:45 (EST), Tulane at 9:00 (EST).

LSU Coach Jay McCreary said in a pre-season cry he felt he was losing 20-25 points a game by the loss of 6-6 Howard Keene and 6-6 Mike Murphy due to scholastic deficiencies. But what may hurt him more is the departure of All-AEC guard Ellis Cooper and 6-7 Maury Drummond, a strong rebounder.

The Tigers have divided four games this year, winning two home games (80-67 over Loyola of New Orleans, 66-62 over SMU) and dropping two contests on the road (87-72 to Rice, 76-65 to Texas).

The five-point loss to the Longhorns at Austin in the last start should shake up any "soft touch" ideas North Carolina may have.

Four returning lettermen have been joined on the starting team by a 6-8 junior center, Bill Wilson, who is averaging a little more than eight points for the four games.

At the forwards are Dick Maile (6-5) and Jack Belcher (6-4). Maile was the Tigs' big gun last year at 14 ppg and 10.9 rebounds. He is a husky 210-pounder and is capable of the explosive outbursts as his 33 against Alabama and 28 against Houston last year attest. He scored 22 in the Texas game last week and is averaging 19.7 for the season. Belcher is another eight-a-game man.

In backcourt, LSU starts Sam Chase (6-0), the leading scorer this campaign, and Bobby Fetter (6-2). Chase got 25 against a good Rice team, and the spurt helped boost his average to 21.2.

On the bench as the most likely replacements are Steve Cram (6-1), Norman Card (6-5) and Harry Heroman (6-6). Heroman was last year's leading frosh scorer (19.2) and is averaging around six points in his sixth-man role this season.

For UNC, which may have found itself in a 20-point loss at Kentucky last Monday, things are looking up. The Heels played two fine back-to-back games last week, and Coach Smith was even more pleased with the improvement after Kentucky than he was after the Indiana win (77-70).

Billy Cunningham, surely one of the five finest players in America, leads Carolina in scoring, and is among the nation's leaders as well, with his 28.8 average. The Kid is also at a 16.3 rebounds a game clip.

In forecourt tonight with Cunningham will probably be Ray Respess, averaging 14, and either Bob Bennett or Bryan McSweeney. Respess scored 22 against South Carolina and 16 at Kentucky, 15 of them late in the second half.

Starting guards will be co-captains Mike Cooke and Charlie Shaffer. Cooke is at 15 even a start and improving every game while Shaffer is scoring 11.5. Top Carolina reserves are Bill Galantai, Bill Brown and Ray Hassell.

Wrestlers Pound Davidson; Coach Foresees Good Year

Both the freshman and varsity wrestling teams won against Davidson Thursday night, and Coach Sam Barnes thinks his varsity "shapes up as the best team I've had here."

The freshmen won 23-18, and Coach Barnes said, "The hero of the freshmen, Roger Oxford, came from behind to win by a fall."

The varsity won 17-11 as substitutes Jack Robinson and Terry Trachtenberg won by a decision and a fall, respectively. They were replacing Steve Lister and Jerry Cabe, who could not be in the match because of football practice.

"We did pretty well substituting at those top two positions," Coach Barnes says. "As soon as we get the Gator Bowl team back—Lister and Cabe back," the lineup will be set.

The next match will be at VMI after the holidays.

Namathless Tide Faces Miami

UPI Sports Wire

Alabama presents its new look against the University of Miami Saturday and a national television audience will be able to judge for itself how much the Tide was hurt by suspending star quarterback Joe Namath.

Only two games remain on the regular college football schedule for 1963 and some bowl games already are history. Yet it may as well be September for an Alabama team which has just this one contest to get ready for its New Year's Day meeting with unbeaten Mississippi in the Sugar Bowl.

The game will be televised from Miami by CBS starting at 1:30 p.m. EST.

In the other scheduled contest Saturday, Houston plays host to Louisville in a game postponed from Nov. 23.

A Concannon Misfires On AFL Patriots

BOSTON (UPI) — Boston College quarterback Jack Concannon spurned the hometown appeal of the Boston Patriots Friday and signed a National Football League contract with the Philadelphia Eagles.

Concannon, a 6-foot-3, 200-pounder from Boston's Dorchester section, had been the first draft choice of the American Football League Patriots. He was the Eagles' second choice.

Eagle head Coach Nick Skorich said in Philadelphia that Concannon "definitely has the potential to be one of the best quarterbacks in the National Football league."

Senators To Air Districting Tiff In Debate Here

Two veteran State Senators will debate the pros and cons of the so-called "Little Federal Plan" for redistricting the State Senate, here Tuesday night.

Sen. Robert Lee Humber of Greenville, who represents Pitt County, speaks for the plan while Sen. Richard Long of Roxboro, who represents Durham, Granville and Person counties, is opposed.

Senate redistricting was one of the hottest issues of the 1963 General Assembly. Legislators were unable to see eye-to-eye on the problem during the regular session and Gov. Terry Sanford called a special session in October.

It was during this session that the Little Federal Plan was born. In order for the plan to be adopted a constitutional amendment will have to be approved by the State's voters. Both those who favor and those who oppose the plan have been marshalling their forces since October to win support to their cause at the polls.

If the amendment is adopted, membership of the House of Representatives will be dropped from its present 120 members to 100, with one representative from each county, and membership of the Senate will be increased from 50 to 70. Opponents of the measure claim it will give control of the legislature to rural Eastern counties and therefore populous Piedmont counties will not get their fair share of representation.

The debate, sponsored by the UNC Young Democratic Club, will get under way in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Humber and Long are both prominent attorneys. Humber graduated from Wake Forest College and the Wake Forest Law School. He was a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University, earned his Master of Arts degree at Harvard University, where he later taught, and studied at the University of Paris.

He had a career as a lawyer and business executive in Paris from 1930 to 1940. He was chairman of the State Art Commission from 1951 through 1961 and served in the State Senate during the 1959, 1961 and 1963 sessions.

Long graduated from Duke University and the Vanderbilt University Law School. He served on the State Utilities Commission from 1958 through 1960 and sat in the State Senate during the 1957 and 1963 sessions. He is a director of the Roxboro Cotton Mills, The Peoples Bank and the Reinforced Plastic Container Corp. in Roxboro, where he practices law.

Jr. Class, GM Hold Christmas Party Tonight

"A Christmas Get-Together" co-sponsored by the Junior Class and Graham Memorial will be held in the main lounge of GM tonight at 8 p.m.

All students are invited to come and join in free refreshments and dancing in the Rendezvous Room.

Also included will be Christmas caroling.

Judy Allen, Junior Class social chairman, said the event was being held to provide an opportunity for students to meet and "join in the Christmas spirit."

Susan Powell, Junior Class treasurer, said yesterday that the class realized a $245 profit on the Bake Sale held Dec. 2 and 3.

"It was very successful," she said, "and I want to thank all the Junior girls who donated baked goods or money for the sale."

She also expressed her appreciation to everyone who made a purchase during the sale.

Miss Powell indicated that the money will be used to finance other class projects, including a dance scheduled shortly after the Christmas vacation.

EDUCATION SENIORS

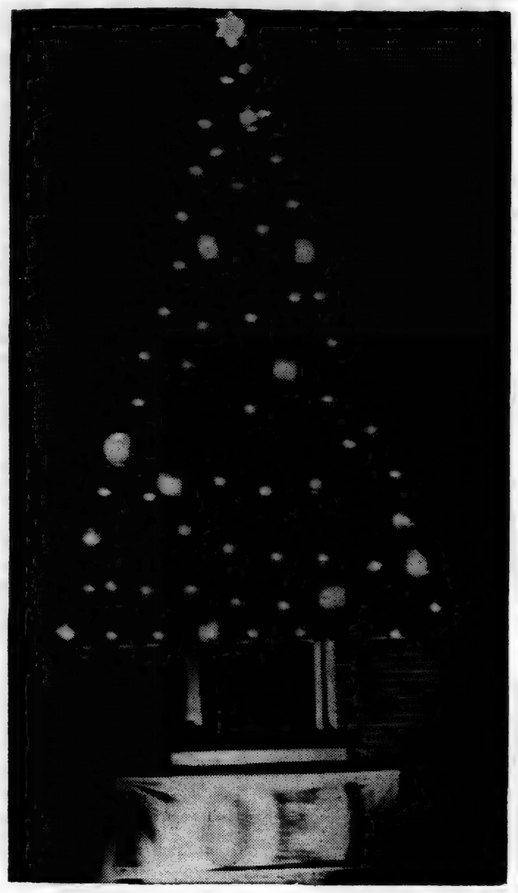
You are required to take National Teachers Examinations. Bulletins of information complete with applications may be obtained from the University Testing Service, Room 019 Peabody Hall. Applications must be mailed by January 15 to avoid late fees. In case of doubt, come to room 101 Peabody Hall.



DECORATOINS—With Christmas Vacation less than a week away, dormitories are beginning to light up each night with bright Christmas decorations. This tree, one of the first to go up, is made entirely of lights and hangs on Avery Dorm.

Students Hopping Mad Over Seating

By JOHN GREENBACKER
And HUGH STEVENS

Student opinion ranged from a slow burn to sheer outrage yesterday in light of an announcement that most student tickets for the Gator Bowl will be in the end zone.

A majority of male comments were unprintable, and coed reactions were hardly less vicious.

"I think it is the dirtiest, nastiest, most conniving, most underhanded trick possible," a Spencer Hall resident said.

Her reaction was echoed by the majority of students questioned on the matter.

"I don't mind sitting in the end zone so much as the fact that someone apparently tried to pull the wool over our eyes by not telling us about it before," a junior remarked.

"Did the University know about this beforehand?" was a typical question.

Some knocked the Gator Bowl officials.

"I think it is a poor policy on the part of the Gator Bowl," a sophomore said. "Some of us are spending $100 or more to see this game. That's a lot of money, and it's not worth it now."

Many wondered why the visiting students weren't given special consideration.

"I think the schools playing should have priority," another coed said.

"We are the host team; it's unfair to us. Is there any reason for it—are these the only seats available?"

"Are we to assume that Air Force got the end zone, too?"

The announcement has apparently changed the plans of many students.

"I've been to every game except the one at Michigan State," one junior said. "I'm not going to this one because of the seats, and there are lots more like me."

"I was going to go," said another student, "but now I'm just as happy in staying home and watching it on TV."

Some students were particularly inconvenienced by the news. "I bought a block of ten tickets so my friends could sit together," a student complained. "Two of them canceled out yesterday, and I really can't balme them."

The first action most students could do in protest was expressed by a junior. "The only way students can effectively protest the seating is to ask for refunds on the tickets."

If reaction could be summed up in one word, it was that used by an upperclassman, "Criminal!"

Women's Council Acquits 1, Finds 2 Others Guilty

Two were found guilty and one acquitted in Women's Council trials Thursday.

One woman pleaded guilty to a charge of lateness after she came in one hour and 20 minutes past the time of a late permission. She was sentenced to two week's campusment for negligence.

In the second case, a woman returned from Thanksgiving vacation two hours and forty minutes late after efforts to obtain public transportation, after her ride had broken down, failed. She was found not guilty and her situation was termed unavoidable.

The third woman was campused for three days for a mistake in signing out for vacation. She returned 23 hours late.

3 More Arrested As Race Protests Continue Here

According to a CORE spokesman, the three were arrested when they refused to leave Leo's restaurant when asked by the hostess in the presence of police.

Chief of Police William Blake was unavailable for comment.

The spokesman identified those arrested as Karen Parker, a junior in the school of journalism from Winston-Salem; James Foushee of Chapel Hill, and Rosemary Ezra, a night student in the University.

John Dunne, chairman of the local CORE chapter, said the two Negroes and one white would remain in jail without bail.

CORE also demonstrated at the Shack and Clarence's yesterday. No one was arrested at either place.

According to Lou Calhoun, a CORE member, two Negroes and two whites went to Clarence's, where the proprietor yelled at them to stop when one man came through the door, and then grabbed at him to throw him out. The demonstrator went limp, Calhoun said, and the proprietor asked a customer to help throw the demonstrator out.

Calhoun said the demonstrator suffered minor bruises when he hit the sidewalk, but will not prefer charges against the men for throwing him out.

At the Shack, Calhoun said, four more people went in and sat down in a booth. He said they ordered sodas, and when the manager asked whether they were going to carry them out to drink, replied they would stay.

The manager then asked them to leave, Calhoun said, and when they refused, he went up the street to call the police. After waiting for a few minutes, Calhoun said, the group left.

The demonstrations yesterday and Friday night were in support of three of the four persons convicted Thursday in connection with sit-ins held last summer.

Dunne Says Pines Visit Not Sit-In

By GARY BLANCHARD

One of the four persons arrested Friday night after seeking service at The Pines, a segregated Chapel Hill restaurant, said Saturday the group did not go to the restaurant to break any law but to reconcile their differences with the management.

John Dunne, 20-year-old former UNC student who gave up his Morehead Scholarship to work full-time for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), said the bi-racial group went to the restaurant only after making reservations.

Had Leroy Merritt, the manager, "asked us to leave in the presence of police," Dunne said, "we would have, as did the party which went to Brady's."

This was a reference to three integrationists who sought service at Brady's Restaurant about the same time as Dunne's group did at The Pines, but who left at police request.

After police arrived at The Pines, Dunne said, the manager asked how he could sign a warrant so that all four would be jailed.

"We left and voluntarily made an appointment to be booked at the Police Station at 8 o'clock, as the warrants hadn't been signed yet but would be by then," Dunne said.

Pines Manager Leroy Merritt declined to discuss the incident.

Dunne said his group went to the restaurant not only to eat, or talk to the manager if they couldn't, but "to let his patrons see him refusing to let a group of well-dressed, sober, intelligent and quiet people eat a meal.

"We did not go to antagonize the manager but to try to reconcile our differences."

Arrested with Dunne were David Dansby, 24, Negro head of the campus NAACP unit and a UNC Law student; David McReynolds, 34, a national field secretary of the War Resisters League, who arrived in Chapel Hill on a speaking visit last week; and an 18-year-old local Negro girl, Phyllis Timberlake.

Trial is set for Recorder's Court on Jan. 7.

LSU Creates Big Scare Before Bowing To UNC

Ticket Refund Offered

By GARY BLANCHARD

Students unhappy with their primarily end-zone tickets to the Gator Bowl game Dec. 28 can refund them at the Woollen Gym ticket office Monday between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. At the same time, the 750 remaining Bowl tickets will be on sale.

This was announced yesterday afternoon by Chuck Erickson, UNC director of athletics, following a meeting with student leaders, alumni and Athletic Department staff members at which Erickson pointed out that UNC has no control over what seats are made available to Carolina fans.

Erickson, obviously harried from trying to keep on top of the numerous Bowl arrangements being made plus his normal duties, said he understands student resentment over the location of seats but he did the best he could.

"Two allotments of tickets were available for the two schools," he explained, "4,000 in one corner of the stadium and 12,000 in the opposite corner and end zone.

"We took the larger one."

Mike Lawler, student body president, said "The rub is that Bowl games are a business venture—they are underwritten and it is to those underwriters that the better seats go.

"I think the important thing is that we have a large number of students, faculty, and alumni in Jacksonville yelling for the Tar Heels."

Erickson voiced agreement with Lawler, noting that some 22,500 seats in the 48,000 - seat stadium were sold in advance last summer.

He pointed out that no tickets have been placed on sale in Jacksonville and won't be until unused ones are returned from UNC and Air Force.

Erickson said about 7,000 of UNC's tickets are behind the end zone, with the other 5,000 stretching out to the 35 or 40 yard line.

Some tickets were blocked out for faculty members, alumni and Educational Foundation members, he added, but most were sold on a first-come, first-serve basis, with students able to buy as many as they wished.

One student pointed out that the uproar over seating might not have arisen if students had been told where the tickets were located when they went on sale.

Erickson said he regretted that this had not been done and, to alleviate any possible feeling of misrepresentation, he had arranged for disgruntled students to get refunds.

Heels Stagger To 76-71 Win

BATON ROGUE, La.—Billy Cunningham sat out some eight minutes early in the second half here last night, but came back just in time to push North Carolina to a lackluster 76-71 victory over LSU.

The Tigers, tough but not surprisingly so on their home court, had UNC on the ropes as late as three minutes left to the gun, but could get no closer than 68-67 when Bobby Fetter made two free throws off a foul by Charlie Shaffer.

But here, Carolina rung up six straight on foul shots by Ray Respess (2), Cunningham (2) and a lay-up by Billy Galantai to go into a 74-67 margin with a minute and a half left.

LSU's Dick Maile canned a jumper at the 1:25 point, and 30 seconds later John Piazza cut the Tar Heel lead to three (74-71) with a push bucket. But Shaffer's lay-up with 12 seconds remaining was the final score, and the Tigers went down by the five-point deficit.

Cunningham, plagued by his own fouls for the second straight game, got his third personal with 11 minutes left in the first half, and sat out six minutes of the period because of it. UNC led at the break, 42-35.

He committed number four just two minutes into the second period and was on the bench from then to the 11:00 mark of the half. But the Big Kid's return (UNC was up by four, 54-50) provided the impetus needed to stay with the pesky Tigers to the end.

UNC never trailed from there as Cunningham hit 27 points, despite missing seven straight free throws at one point. Respess got 18 and Shaffer 10 to account for

ND Hires Parseghian

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (UPI)—Notre Dame, never able to beat Ara Parseghian's Northwestern football teams on the field, hired him under a four-year contract as coach Saturday to try to restore the Fighting Irish to their former days of glory.

Parseghian, 40, quit with one year remaining on his contract as coach at Northwestern to take the Irish job. Wildcat Athletic Director Stu Holcomb said Northwestern willingly released Parseghian.

Parseghian, head coach at Miami of Ohio for five years where he had a 39-6-1 record, tutored the Wildcats for eight years, posting a 36-35-1 mark. In four straight years against the Irish, Parseghian won every game.

Playmaker One-Acts Tonight

The Carolina Playmakers will present three original one-act plays, products of Prof. Thomas M. Patterson's playwriting classes, tonight.

These plays, recently written by UNC students, are entirely student-produced and directed.

The plays include "The Button" by George Gray III of Gastonia, "Sydney" by Richard N. Philp of Vero Beach, Fla., and "A Matter of Distinction," by Tom Benenson of New York City.

The productions will be directed by Suzie Cordon, John Whitty, and Tom Hull, graduate students in the Department of Dramatic Art. A short discussion period will follow each play.

Curtain time is 7:30 and admission is free.

PLAYMAKERS TRYOUTS

Tryouts for the Carolina Playmaker's next major production "The Busy Martyr," will be held Monday at 4 and 7:30 p.m., in the Playmakers Theatre.

The play calls for a cast of 16 men, seven women, extras and four children.

It's All In A Night's Work

By SUZY STERLING

Decaled on the full-length mirror were the words, "I represent the Chapel Hill Police Dept."

The telephone rang.

"Yes, Police Department."

"Yes?"

"Yes, I see. Call the funeral home in Durham. They'll have an ambulance . . . welcome."

Car numbers, car numbers, car numbers, car numbers. "Can you read me," came the scratchy, half-static voice over the short-wave radio receiver.

Ring.

"No, I haven't had a report of a car being stolen in Eastgate."

"You're sure it was Eastgate?"

"No, I'm sorry."

The elderly police officer returned to the small confines of his office.

A gold lamp hung from the wall, supplementing the light of the fluorescent bar hanging from the ceiling. Paint was cracked and peeling from the two-tone smudged green walls.

The scratchy radio voice came out again in carefully spaced words. "Report to Farrington Road. A yellow light will be shining. A child has blown himself to pieces with a shot-gun."

The officer at desk duty began to thumb through a neat pile of complaint reports. On the walls memorandum notes, schedules, and duty lists were stapled. A 1961 map of Chapel Hill and surrounding area hung over the desk.

Again the phone rang.

"Police Department."

"Yes?"

"Beg pardon."

"Where?"

"What's the trouble, ? Who's calling?"

"O.K."

He rung up and proceeded to call the scratchy voice.

"Someone just called here at the desk . . . some kind of a foreign accent, couldn't understand them very well. Little trouble between dining hall and the Law School. Send someone over now."

"O.K."

The police chief came in with a large sheaf of plans. "Come here and let me explain what we're going to be doing Monday."

The two men discussed the plans in muted voices for several minutes—an old man entered the office.

"You the only one on duty?" He needed a ride to Carrboro. The Chief left with him.

The scratchy voice then spelled out the name of a car owner whose car's tires had been stolen while the car was parked in the Library Parking lot.

Pecking out the letters one by one, the officer typed out a complaint report for the stolen tires.

He leaned back in his leather-covered swivel-chair and sighed. Another Saturday night on desk duty had begun.

The Most Unfunny Joke This Year

In this rather confused and confusing period in our country's history, very few things are easily obvious, but lately it has become impossible to miss the fact that something must be done about Congress. This great body, designed as one of the cornerstones of our democratic system, has staged one of the most effective sit-in demonstrations in the nation's capital that has yet been held. It has now come to the point that our own elected representatives constitute a threat to the system they are supposed to uphold.

By what justification do we make these charges? Let us examine the record of the current session of Congress. It is one of the longest sessions, and certainly the most dreary, in history.

Of the 12 major appropriations bills, which are required by law to be passed by July 1, Congress has passed less than half. This leaves the Budget Bureau in the interesting predicament of having to design next year's budget without knowing how much money will be available. This has never happened before.

Congress has not passed one of the four major domestic bills (civil rights, tax cut, medicare and aid to education) proposed by the Administration.

Neither has it acted on the Wilderness Bill, the Domestic Youth Corps, truth-in-packaging legislation nor urban transportation and housing measures.

Much of this legislation is important to the national needs, and some of it is vital. Yet Congress, through incompetence, laziness, recalcitrance, pettiness and negativism, ignores, and even demonstrates contempt for the public needs and will.

And is it in any way conceivable that a government can function at all in a system that allows a situation to arise where a tax proposal presented by the President in the summer of 1962 will not be ready for a vote by 1964?

We would never charge that what is true of Congress as a whole is also true for all Congressmen. Many are hard-working, conscientious men who deserve our thanks, but they are apparently helpless against the old, established order. And it is distressing to admit that a majority of the members of this old order, which is responsible for the perversion of the legislative process, are our own Southern representatives.

But we must wonder if this old order's recalcitrance is the only thing wrong in our Congress.

We had Bobby Baker to make us question the moral codes of some Congressmen, but that is only the beginning. The House votes to give itself postage-free junk mail, and when the Senate doesn't immediately go along with this, a House member threatens to expose a Senator who, he claims, hired call girls.

Representative Byrnes, a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, is applauded by his fellow Representatives as he weeps his way through a defense of his 1.000% profit from stocks he owns in a mortgage insurance company, in which he has taken a personal interest.

After the 1962 election, 16 Congressmen who had lost the election, but not yet lost their seats, went to Europe on a government-paid junket, and two members of the last Congress were simultaneously found guilty of conflict of interest. The list doesn't end there.

And now comes one of the most comic spectacles of the Congressional circus yet. After howling all year for frugality in government spending, Congressmen are now hurling charges of "Economy" at the Pentagon for deciding to close 33 military bases, 26 of which are in this country. Congressmen are threatening to turn the Pentagon upside-down to find out why it has decided to stop wasting money, and especially why it won't waste any more in each Congressman's home area.

So as we see one session running into the next, legislation backed up and carried over, and almost nothing accomplished in the last year, we know that something must be done.

First should be a rule passed in both houses requiring that all Presidentially proposed legislation designated as important be acted on within a specified time. Then it is obvious that the seniority system should be closely examined and changed. The system seems fine in theory, but it just doesnt work in practice, and must be severely amended if Congress is to become an effective body again.

At the moment, it would be a national joke if it weren't so harmful.

Thanks

Editors, The Tar Heel,

On behalf of the more than two hundred foreign students and their families in our University this year, I should like to express at this Christmastide sincere thanks for the many gestures of hospitality and kindness the families of Chapel Hill have extended to these visitors in our midst from all over the world.

Especially they are grateful, they tell me, for the opportunities offered them, through the host family plan and your generous hospitality, to visit in our American homes, to get acquainted with our children, see how we live, taste our foods, and share our festivals. From my experience abroad I can tell you that these opportunities are appreciated. In the capitols of South America wherever we went we met people who had been students in Chapel Hill in former years; and their most vivid memories of this community were of the friends who entertained them, the visits and the festive occasions they shared with us in our homes here in Chapel Hill. No better way for fostering goodwill in this divided world has been found than the development of personal friendships. These people will long remember the experiences they shared with you; and because of your efforts, they will always in their hearts carry a bright and warm image of Chapel Hill.

During the coming Christmas holidays many of the foreign students will be making trips, but a few will remain here. They will be lonely, no doubt. Lenoir dining hall will be closed; and on Christmas Day, if the usual policies are followed, it may even be difficult for students in the dormitories to find places to eat.

We are concerned about this problem; and therefore, if any family in the community would be interested in sharing some of the Christmas or New Year's festivities with our students from abroad, we would like to have you let us know. If you know a foreign student, you can make your own arrangements. If you do not, but are interested in helping entertain one or more, you need only call me either at the Office of Adviser to Foreign Students or at my home, and we will try to put you in touch with a student who would enjoy being in your home.

Useless?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

As was expected, we have been attacked for our extreme position in regard to the careful selection of books to be read by young people. It is a shame that propagandists have attached such emotional content to words such as "censorship" or "book burning," guaranteed to produce immediate negative reactions just as certainly as "academic freedom"—that empty term—has been made to produce a positive one.

But, as a noted philosopher of the last century said, "Nothing can have value without being an object of utility." We are beginning to see that "academic freedom" is not an object of uitlity; that is, it is useless, it serves no practical purpose. Likewise, we must see that many books are useless: of what earthly good is some filthy novel or silly poem or drama loaded with dirty words? Of what good is a portion of another Book that has led people to more wrong conclusions than right ones?

And as to "academic freedom"—or the alternate cry of "freedom of speech": we know that with freedom must go responsibility. Or—to quote another profound thinker and political leader of the past—"It is true that liberty is precious—so precious that it must be rationed." We must always temper ideas of liberty with common sense, knowing where to set its bounds in any given situation. And it is true that where immature minds are concerned, we sometimes have to ration a smaller portion than we are able to for people whose minds, being already made up, we can trust.

Yes, our suggestions are extreme and may not be carried out soon. The goal of the most effective way by which to channel young thinkers in the right direction is a long-term one; we must pledge ourselves to work tirelessly for it.

Corrections

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The article "Y Will Give to Danville" in the Tuesday, December 10 issue of your newspaper had two errors that need to be corrected. The YMCA as a body is not giving any of its money toward the Danville cause as the article implies. Because the Y is dependent upon contributions from students, faculty, parents, and other friends for its financial resources, no part of its budget is spent on behalf of or for other programs. There is no objection, however, to members of the Human Relations Committee donating individually to the Danville effort.

The second error concerns the matter of the Student Peace Union "office in the Y Building." There is no such office. The SPU has been allowed one bookshelf in the reading room in order to display material and to maintain a "library." Under no circumstances is the room intended to serve as headquarters for the SPU, and the SPU's leadership is fully aware of this fact.

Thank you for your coverage of the Y and its activities.

Refreshing

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Perhaps the avowal of the "Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers" would have more credence attached to it if the Committee would change its name to something more innocuous, and, parenthetically, less pompous.

It is not necessary for any liberal to attack the fascist "Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers." The liberal position is of sufficient merit that it need not resort to attacks, programs, or speaker censorship.

I find the satire from the "Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers" very refreshing and look forward to its continued comments.

He Talked To The Lord

By PERRY YOUNG
United Press International
Editor's Note: Perry Young is now a student in the school of Journalism. He worked for United Press International in Raleigh last year.

"Oh, it wasn't so sudden. I walked in the woods and prayed about it. I cried until the whole front of my shirt was wet."

Harvey Rape, cafeteria owner and former staunch segregationist, lives in Durham, N. C. When the problem hit him personally, there was trouble.

"I'd never had any trouble with my wife," he said, introducing her from the opposite side of the room. "But she threatened to leave me. My whole family just disowned me. I'll you one thing, it took a lot more guts than to stand in the door with a gun and tell somebody he's not coming in."

Rape's troubles began when he decided to integrate Harvey's Cafeteria which he has owned and operated in downtown Durham for 28 years.

Downstairs, it was a fairly normal lunch hour for these days. There were not many vacant seats, but the long line of former days was gone.

Harvey's had always fed the white working people — the sales clerks, county officials and bank tellers — who feel strongest about segregation.

In the comfortable office upstairs, Mrs. Rape was counting change from the lunch receipts. She looked up with a roll of coins in her left hand and said, "You oughta tell 'em what it's done to your business."

Rape insisted that integration was not the reason he cut back his serving hours from two meals a day, six days a week with supper only on Mondays and Fridays. He blames shopping centers. "You ought to . . ." Mrs. Rape interrupted.

"No, now you just can't say that," he answered. And then Rape looked away from his wife. "Besides, it wouldn't help the cause."

It was ironic that Harvey Rape should be talking of "the cause". Negro leaders once protested his appointment to the Durham Interim Committee, which drafted a sweeping anti-segregation agreement.

Harvey's Cafeteria has been a bastion of segregation. One of the managers had warned Negro demonstrators he would shoot the first one who stepped in the door. Mrs. Rape still keeps a loaded shotgun beside her desk.

The leading Negroes felt that a new mayor, Wense Grabarek had reneged on campaign promises when he named Rape to the emergency committee last May. Rape met with the Interim Committee on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Saturday, he told a friend the issue was "like a millstone around my neck." He said he was going out alone and "talk it over with the Lord."

Rape came in Monday as a new force for integration. The agreement was signed and only two small restaurants refused to desegregate.

Rape still believes it was the only right thing to do.

"The only way it has worked has been in the public acceptance . . . and that has been improved. But there are still those I believe would eat out of stumpholes before coming down here."

What has Rape gained by that decision which left his business on a downhill grade?

"Well, some of thse people that were for me when I resisted integration have come to me and said, 'Harvey, I'm for you.' And I've got that."

City Of The New South

By RALPH McGILL

From Notes Made at Huntsville, Ala.: Looking from a window as the aircraft approached for a landing, one could see the display of missiles at the arsenal grounds, white and slender like the minarets of distant mosques. And then, as the plane descended toward the runway one saw a patch of cotton, the puffed balls plain against the dark of autumn-dried stalks and leaves.

It was a good contrast and a symbolic one. This city is, in many ways, the most realistic symbol of that "New South" about which so many prophets have written and spoken. It is a space-age city. It is a place of missiles and research. On land that just three years ago showed the remains of old cotton terraces and was no longer for farming, rises the vast complex of Redstone Arsenal, the United States Army Missile Co., and NASA.

The four-lane Parkway Drive, lined with new retail businesses and handsome motels, also runs through old cotton fields. In the 1930s the land, worn out with cotton-growing was selling for about $4 an acre. Today, the asking price is $3,000 per acre. "We've got men here," said a resident, "who have become so rich selling off land holdings that they go about complaining about taxes and the lack of opportunity in America."

Huntsville, once a sleepy, dusty town of textile mills, stately mansions of excellent architecture, and mill-town slum housing, now is an exciting, dynamic city of confidence in its future and poise in its present. It eschewed violence or incident in the segregation of its schools. It is, next to Mobile, the oldest municipality in the state, and yet no city in the South has so freed itself from the dead hand of the past.

Because this "Old South" city has now become a symbol of the New South, its population includes scientists, engineers, technicians, research experts. As a consequence, there is none, or at least little, of the hostility toward professors, intellectuals, and persons with Ph.D.'s ("Just a few years ago," said a resident, "the only Ph.D. in town was the president of the Negro college. Now we have maybe 700 more.") As a result, Huntsville not only accepts, but nods approval to Dr. Wernher von Braun, director of the space center, and the world's best-known missile man, when he says:

"It's not water, or real estate, or labor, or power or cheap taxes which brings industry, creates a good community, or a good market—it's brain power."

The truth of this conclusion being all about them, the people of Huntsville pay more and more attention to schools and education in general.

For the past seven years the city has built the equivalent of one new classroom each week . . . and the school board sensibly has made use of the wives of scientists and engineers who want to be useful.

Huntsville itself has not lagged. It merits applause. It has done a really extraordinary job in building sewer, water and gas mains, and streets and recreation centers, as well as schools.

Agriculture remains—diversified now. Despite the dominance and drama of space, Madison County (Huntsville) is the largest agricultural county in the state and derives an income of $25 million annually from that source.

Dr. von Braun's conclusion—about education and what makes a city—is one that the cities of the South might put above the doors of their Chambers of Commerce . . . the New South is there . . . for all tenants with the will to move into it.

Newspapers Don't Mirror World Image

By SUSIE LEWIS
(From the Chapel Hill Weekly)

The American people do not learn the true image of the world from newspapers, Washington Post foreign news editor Philip Foisie told an audience of students and professors here Monday night.

Mr. Foisie's speech, "Unexplored Frontiers of Journalism," was sponsored by the International Affairs Committee of the YM-YWCA.

"Something happens to the news from the time it leaves the foreign country until it is printed here which gives a distorted view."

Many areas of the world are made inaccessible to reporters by geography, politics and culture, he said.

"Another gap in foreign news is the over-reliance on the English language. We are a monolingual people. Many sources do not speak English, so the roporter must find a translator to depend on, but this always inhibits conversation.

"Our passion for the immediate is another reason for the imbalance in the news. This is called 'crisis reporting.' Reporters do not get to the scene before the blood begins to flow. This is too late.

"Using our conventional wisdom, we report things that we think people are interested in. Thus, we tend to overstress controversy and personalities.

"We have not examined our language. We use such phrases as 'left wing' and 'right wing' to try to be brief, concise and clear, but this really only distorts.

"Everyone wants to be first, so false datelines appear. Much of the material from overseas is rewritten in New York. In the process of rewriting, the writer often gets the facts wrong and paraphrases quotes inaccurately, thus completely losing the true meaning of the story.

"As far as stringers are concerned, some terrible situations have been discovered." Mr. Foisie cited three examples.

—One man worked under several different names for leading newspapers and periodicals all over the world, thus causing unanimity of opinion.

—Some stringers have been found to be employees of a foreign government.

—Sometimes the person doesn't exist at all, but is simply a name which is passed from person to person, regardless of whether these persons are actually competent reporters.

"If I'm being harsh about these things happening on other papers, then I'm being harsh about my paper, too, because we're all in this together.

"There are many newspapers in this country which are very bad, but the best ones are the best in the world."

Mr. Foisie listed some improvements which the Post hopes to make in the future.

"We want to conserve space. We want to provide the reader with all the news we can if he wants to read it, but we must tell it more simply. I believe many stories, foreign and local, could be told in one sentence.

"But when the times comes to tell a story in depth, we want to tell it even if it takes eight columns.

"There is plenty of foreign news that's never touched that we want to get. There are always men in Washington who have been abroad, as well as experts on college campuses and certain members of the AFL-CIO who are always willing to talk to reporters, and we want to tap all of these sources."

In an attempt to improve their papers, serious journalists are asking themselves two questions:

—To what level of readership would coverage be directed?

—What is the true and proper role of newspapers in the national society?

"When I was younger, I thought mine would be a simple job. It seemed to be a matter of holding up the mirror of life and putting the reflections into print, delivering it to the doorsteps and not letting publishers and advertisers tamper with the truth—thus educating the American people for their role in the democratic society.

"But now I'm not sure we can afford to think of ourselves as educators. The Post has a circulation of about 500,000, but the readership of foreign news is only three or four per cent of the circulation. It is frightful to think of this being true in Washington, where large numbers work with foreign affairs.

"There are class distinctions in readership and all levels must be served at the appropriate time. I would like to get the foreign news readership to 10 or even 15 per cent. We could if we used more pictures, wrote more simply, or, like Time magazine, told the reader what to think.

"We can generalize and popularize the news without distorting. Occasionally we try to provide something of an elemental nature, but generally we write for the upper level thinking of a mythical freshman senator who is young, serious and will soon be influential."

Turning to the Post's role in the national society, Mr. Foisie questioned the ability of any paper to stir up the great mass of the reading public.

"I do not believe it is within the power of newspapers to generate widespread local discussion for reform," Mr. Foisie said, referring to the reform that he believes is needed in the Congress.

"The times have dramatically changed the relation of the executive and legislative branches. The President now has a power far greater than the founding fathers envisioned, and Congress is envious of this power. It is my personal opinion that the legislative branch has not matured with the years as the executive and judicial branches have.

"The Secretary of State and the President spend most of time working with foreign policy—not with Cuba, or Laos, but dealing with Congress.

"Congressmen realize that there is a need for reform, but they believe it will not come until the electorate decides the changes must be made."

Mr. Foisie believes the Post or any other newspaper would be ineffectual in persuading the electorate to vote for these changes.

Pat Cusick, Mrs. Peter van Ripper, Miss Carlisle Pearl Cotton and Mrs. Christine Glover were sentenced in Orange County Superior Court to 30-day jail sentences, suspended on payment of $50 fines and $52.80 court costs.

Three of the four decided to serve the sentences. The fourth, Mrs. Glover, paid the fine rather than go to jail. She said her son was ill and she had to stay with him.

A spokesman said Citizens United for Racial Equality and Dignity (CURED) will hold a mass meeting this afternoon at 1:30 in one of the Negro churches.

UNC's other double-figure men.

For LSU, its two forwards were high men. Jack Belcher got 17 before fouling out with three minutes left, and Dick Maile added 16. Bill Wilson, the Tigs' 6-8 center scored 11 points while Sam Chase, a fine-shooting guard, was held to 10. 11 points below his average, by a good Mike Cooke defensive job.

UNC Floats Past Clemson, S. Carolina

By PERRY McCARTY

Coach Pat Earey gathered a skeleton crew of some ten of his swimmers and journeyed to Clemson and Columbia, South Carolina for a pair of weekend meets. The Dolphins returned with two rather lopsided wins—69 to 24 over Clemson and 65 to 28 over South Carolina.

At Clemson Friday night, the Tankers took first places in ten of eleven events. The hapless Tigers could manage only one five point production, and that in the diving. Clemson's 20-yard pool did not seem to disturb our boys at all.

Harrison Merrill led off the medley relay on the backstoke leg, filling in for an absent Thompson Mann. Dick Boardman, Fred Lipp, and Thad Adams finished far out in front. In the freestyle events, Chip Smith won the 50. Thad Adams was second. John Sheldon took the 200 and finished second in the 500. Adams won the 100.

Joe Lea and Mike Bissell finished one, two in the individual medley, as did Lea, again and Dick Boardman in the breaststroke. On Carolina's winning freestyle relay team were Bissell, Smith, Lipp and Roberts.

Saturday at 1 p.m., the Dolphins swam South Carolina in their home pool. Whether rejoicing at returning to a regulation pool or for some other reason quite remote, the Tankers stroked to three new pool marks. Fred Lipp captured the 200 butterfly in 2:05.6; Chip Smith won the 50 in 23.1 sec.; Davis Roberts took the 100 in 50.6 sec.; Harrison Merrill established a new standard of 5:21.0 in the 500 freestyle.

Both medley and freestyle teams again finished first. Other winners for UNC were John Sheldon in the 200 freestyle, Mike Bissell in the individual medley, Ernie Oare in the diving, Fred Lipp in the butterfly, and Dick Boardman in the breaststroke.

Coach Pat Earey's swimmers thus complete the '63 part of the current campaign with a perfect 6-0 slate.

UNC's Baby Dolphins played host to two local high school teams—Rose of Greenville and Chapel Hill—Saturday at 2 p.m. As expected, the frosh tankers completely dominated the meet capturing first places in each event en route to a 94 UNC, 40 Rose, 24 Chapel Hill victory.

Allen McDonald and Pete Worthen were double winners. Worthen bettered his record-breaking performance at Navy by shaving two-tenths of a second off his hundred time to set a new mark of 49.5 seconds. Jim Bernuth, Jack Hayden, Butch Aydalette, Tom Adams, and Bob Bottomly were other winners for the freshmen.

The Baby Dolphins now travel to Virginia where they face Staunton Military on Friday.

UNC All-America Thompson Mann

Practice Key Says Big M

By BOB NOELL

It takes something special to be an All-America. Talent isn't enough. Thompson Mann, two-time swimming All-America, has the talent and he has that special something to go with it.

His swimming accomplishments can be matched by few anywhere. "I started swimming competitively when I was eight years old," said the senior from Chesapeake, Va., in an interview this week. "From the start I specialized in the backstroke, but why this is my best event I can't say. I guess it's like a track man who is a better miler than a sprinter."

For three years Mann was named the outstanding senior swimmer in Virginia. In his first year he set a freshman intercollegiate record for the 100-yard backstroke. He holds school and conference records in the 100- and 200-yard backstrokes and the 200-yard individual medley. As a sophomore, he took two third-place finishes in the NCAA championships.

His accomplishments aren't confined to the swimming pool. A pre-med student, Mann is a member of the Golden Fleece and president of Sigma Nu.

Practice is perhaps more vital in swimming than in any other sport. "It's the only sport I know of where practice is required twice a day—before class and in the afternoon," he said. "I average better than two hours practice per day. Sometimes the work doesn't seem worth it, but it does when a meet comes up."

"This is the best team we've had in my four years here, and perhaps our best ever," he continued. "Florida, Florida State and Maryland will be tough, but we have a good chance to go undefeated." After the regular season come the Eastern, NCAA and National AAU championships, in which he will take part.

All this will culminate in the climax of Mann's career—his tryouts for the Olympic team. Then comes Med School and an end to competitive swimming. What better way to end a career than with an Olympic medal?

NCS's Trees Too Tall For Tar Babies

North Carolina State's freshman basketball team, resembling a pine tree forest, proved tough timber for UNC's Tar Babies Friday night—too tough.

The Wolflets, using 6-7 Jerry Moore and 6-8 John Sellers to best advantage, over-shadowed the Carolina frosh, 76-65. The defeat was the second in a row for the T-Babies after an opening night win over Elon Jayvees.

Moore hit for 22 points and pulled down 23 rebounds while Sellers managed a mere 20 points and 18 rebounds. Carolina's scoring ace, Bob Lewis, was held to 10 points by the defensive play of State's Eddie Biedenbach.

Ian Morrison was the top point man for the UNC frosh with 17 markers. Tom Gauntlett had 15 and Donnie Moe added 10.

The Wolflets simply possessed too much height for the shorter Tar Babies as they ran their record to 3-1. The UNC frosh play one more game before Christmas—against Wingate Junior College here Wednesday night at 6 o'clock.

Miami Rally Falls Short; Bama Wins It

MIAMI (UPI) — Alabama, its offense faltering badly, sent its fastest back 102 yards to the end zone with the opening kickoff Saturday, then scored a touchdown and field goal on Miami fumbles for a 17-12 victory over the late-surging Hurricanes.

Miami, fired by passing flash George Mira, scored twice in the final period, but a last minute drive for a third touchdown was shut off by a pass interception.

The nationally televised game was the last for Miami—and for retiring Miami Coach Andy Gustafson—and Mira just missed capturing the national passing championship.

The magical "Matador" completed 24 passes for 301 yards, enough to boost his career record to 368 completions and tie the major collegiate record of Loyola's Don Kolsterman.

Weak Tulane Is NC Opponent Monday Night In New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Tulane, with a new coach but the same old troubles, will be seeking its first victory after four losses here Monday when the Green Wave faces visiting North Carolina.

Jimmy Kerwin, the Southeastern Conference scoring leader (23.1) and a unanimous selection on its all-star team last year, has graduated and perhaps taken with him any hopes of a Tulane success this campaign.

New coach Ted Lenhardt has welcomed back four starters from a 6-16 year, and they seem to have continued where they left off last year—only this time Kerwin is not around to help out.

BOB DAVIDSON

The Wave so far has looked pitiful. In the four games, the closest it has come to victory is 26 points in a 73-47 loss to Michigan in the second game of the season. Tulane has also bowed to Toledo (96-60), Texas (95-63) and Rice (90-62).

What scoring this Deep South team has, is at least, balanced. In backcourt is the leading scorer, Dale Gott (6-1) and Denny Shoup (6-0). Gott, from Valparaiso, Ind., possesses a dangerous jump shot and is a fine ballhandler. He averaged 14.8 last year and is at 18 even this season. Shoup has scored around five points a game so far.

Davidson, a 205-pounder, had a fine junior season which produced good scoring (18.3) and rebounding (14 a game). The latter mark led his conference, and he is considered one of the class post men in the SEC. A unique turn-around jump shot is his main scoring gun. This year, the South Bend native is averaging at an 11.8 clip.

At the forwards for Lenhardt are 6-5 George Fisher and 6-3 Mike Kurtz. The two so far have combined for 13 points a contest, Fisher accounting for eight of those.

The Monday night meeting will be the second for Coach Dean Smith's cagers on the current road trip. They met LSU last night and play Georgia Wednesday in Woollen Gym for the last start before the holidays.

Student Charges Solicitor Acted Alone In Race Cases

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

A UNC graduate student yesterday charged that Chapel Hill solicitor Roy Cole acted independently in prosecuting 21 persons arrested in a July 19 sit-in at the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchant's Association.

James W. Gardner, Jr., a 33-year old graduate student in English from Chapel Hill made the charge in an open letter to the University Community.

He said Cole pressed the charges despite a request from Joe Augustine, executive secretary of the Merchant's Association, that the tresspassing charges be dropped.

Gardner also charged Cole with ignoring a request from Chapel Hill police chief W. D. Blake that the tresspassing charge be nol prossed with leave.

"Nol prossed with leave" means tabling a charge with the provision that it can be re-opened at anytime on the motion of the solicitor. It also means that any nol prossed charge could be re-opened if a person is tried in court on a new charge.

Cole declined any comment on Gardner's charge, saying "The matter is out of my hands now. Mr. Thomas D. Cooper, solicitor of Orange County Superior Court is in charge of the situation now."

"I'm not going to comment on the matter at all," he said.

In his letter written to the Daily Tar Heel, Gardner charged that Cole "independently insisted on prosecuting all charges."

Gardner said the 21 persons were tried and subsequently convicted in Chapel Hill Recorder's court "because Mr. Cole refused to honor the requests of the plaintiffs that the charges be dropped or nol prossed with leave."

Joe Augustine, executive secretary of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association, who signed the warrants against the 21 demonstrators, said he later talked with Solicitor Cole about dropping the charges.

"Mr. Cole said he would not drop the charges," Augustine declared. "He told me he would not let the judical system become a whipping post for those who wanted to break the law.

"He said he would not let a mockery be made of the courts." Augustine said Cole told him his mind was made up on the tresspassing cases and it was no use to try to change it.

"There was no sense talking to him," Augustine declared. "His mind was made up."

"Mr. Cole told me he had already decided that if a sit-in case came up, he would try it on the evidence presented. He said he would not do anything less than that."

Asked if he thought Cole was conducting a personal vendetta in refusing to drop the charges, Augustine replied, "No, I don't believe that he was.

"People in law have a definite conviction on how the judicial system should be run," Augustine said, "most of the time they are quite immovable."

But in this case, Augustine said, "his position did come as a surprise to me.

"He told me to please not send anyone else around to discuss the matter. He also told me within minutes after I walked into his office there was no use discussing the matter further.

"He decided this was what he wanted to do, so he did it," Augustine said.

Chapel Hill police chief W. D. Blake said there was an agreement between himself, the Committee for Open Business and Rev. Loren Mead, then chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Human Relations, that they would ask the trespassing charges against the 21 persons be nol prossed with leave.

"But that request had to be approved by Mr. Cole," Blake said. "We didn't suggest the charges be dropped completely. What we suggested was that they be nol prossed with leave."

Chapel Hill Mayor Sandy McClamroch said Blake and Augustine "thought it might be in order to ask that the charges be dropped or nol prossed with leave.

"That was just a suggestion," McClamroch said. "The final decision on the matter rested with Mr. Cole."

Nine More 'Picked Up' Yesterday

By JOEL BULKLEY

No apparent easing of racial tensions in Chapel Hill was in sight Monday following the arrest of 36 persons in anti-segregation protests here in the past four days.

Nine persons, including two Negro UNC students, were jailed here last night after staging a sit-in at the Pines, a segregated restaurant on the Raleigh Road. This was the second sit-in conducted there in four days.

Police identified those arrested as John Salter, 29; Virginia Erickson, 19; Joseph Tieger, 21; Quinton Baker, 21, Negro; Mary Reckford, 29; Father Clarence Parker, 80; Ben Spaulding, 19, Negro, and Walter Mitchell, 18, Negro.

One Negro juvenile, arrested for the third time in the wave of racial demonstrations, was released in the custody of her parents.

Police Chief William Blake indicated that those people in jail at court time today would be tried today, while those posting bond are scheduled to appear January 7 in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court.

The cases resulting from civil rights demonstrations are expected to be continued, Congress of Racial Equality spokesman said.

Bond was set at $175—$100 for resisting arrest and $75 for trespassing.

Some 10 persons remained in jail Monday on charges stemming from sit-ins conducted over the weekend by the local chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality.

After Sunday's sit-in CORE officials issued a statement urging the passage of a Public Accommodations Law before Christmas and urging the immediate formation of a committee to investigate inequalities in employment opportunities in Chapel Hill.

Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont said yesterday 10 of the 20 arrested Sunday were students at local schools. He identified the seven UNC students as Charles Miller, Louis Calhoun, Arthur Simons, Van Cornelius, Jo Ann Johnson, Timothy Perkins and Ronald Ross. He added that two students from North Carolina College in Durham and one from Chapel Hill's Lincoln High were among those arrested.

Some 13 Negroes and seven whites, including seven UNC students, were arrested Sunday night after a sit-in at Brady's, a segregated restaurant on the Durham Road.

Police arrested four others Friday night at the Pines and three more Saturday at Leo's, bringing the four-day total to 36 as racial demonstrations resumed after a three-month lull.

Earlier Sunday afternoon about 40 Negroes and 30 whites marched silently down Franklin Street carrying signs saying "Give Freedom for Christmas," the demonstrators stopped in front of the Town Hall and sang several songs in support of the two persons arrested Saturday who refused bond and remained in jail. No incidents or arrests were reported.

Sunday's arrests were made at Brady's when the group of demonstrators were denied service and then refused to leave. They were charged with trespassing and with resisting arrest for going limp when police tried to remove them.

Frosh Net $140; Committees Named

The Freshman Class Kickoff netted approximately $140 for the class treasury, Freshman President Jim Brame announced Wednesday.

The money will be used to finance the Freshman Weekend, a talent show, a dance, a bake sale, and other class activities, Brame said.

Reporting results of the latest Freshman Class executive meeting, Brame announced the members of the Class committees:

Publicity Committee: Steve Hockfield, chairman; Sam Selden; Judy Russell; Judy Bassett; Bob Peterson; Steve Bell; Don Lyman; Charles Evans; Bill St. George; Mike Nolan; Eva Lee Blaine; Maggie Hunt; Tim Overman; Bill Spivey; Pete Williams; Borden Hooks; Barry Smith; John Moss.

Sub-committee for DTH: Susie Warren, chairman; Dennis Sanders; Denise DeLa Houssaye; Pat Smith.

Sub-committee for Talent Show publicity: Holman Wilson, chairman; Christine Oliver; Marianne Wall; Robert Brooks; Andy Jackson; Bobbie Kahdy.

Sub-committee for Freshman Weekend: Don Bumgardner, chairman; Jack Leader; Gray Baldwin; Bryant Williams; John Pope; John Wall; Tom McAuley.

Sub-committe for Audition and Rehearsal: Mike Tonry, chairman; Bob Batson; Mark Lindsay; Bob Blue.

Sub-committee for Script: Joe McGirt, chairman; Jeff Barker; Ed Good; Judy Fleming; Sandra Burden.

Sub-committee for Program: Brooks Houghton; chairman; David Kaplan; Manton Grier; Thorton Gholson; Annette Randall.

Sub-committee for Tickets: Scotty Robertson, chairman; Page Winchester; Bob Poitras; Gwen Brannon; Gordon Brady; Alan Stephenson.

Secretariats: D. A. Humphreys and Mary Susan Kirk.

Assistant to the president: John Wilson.

All cabinet chairmen and co-chairmen and secretariats will be included in the cabinet and will meet tonight in Roland Parker I at 8 p.m.

REFUND RUSH

Bob Quincy, UNC Sports Publicity Director, said yesterday that "at least 600" persons took advantage of Athletic Director Charles Erickson's offer to refund money on Gator Bowl tickets. Erickson's offer followed last week's announcement that a majority of student tickets would be in the end zone.

SP MEET RESCHEDULED

The Student Party meeting, originally scheduled for tonight, has been postponed until Wednesday at 7 p.m., chairman Neal Jackson announced yesterday.

The reason for the change was the conflict with the debate sponsored by the YDC between N. C. Senators R. L. Humber and Richard Long over the "Little Federal Plan."

The rescheduled meeting will take place in Roland Parker 1 and 2.

DEBATE

The "Little Federal Plan" for redistricting the State Senate will be debated tonight by two State Senators at 7:30 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

The discussion is sponsored by the UNC Young Democratic Club (YDC), and will feature Sen. Robert L. Humber of Pitt County, speaking for the plan and Senator Richard G. Long, of Person County, speaking against the plan.

The "Little Federal Plan" was one of the hottest issues of the 1963 session and will be presented to the voters for endorsement at the polls.

DON'T MISS THIS!

Prof. David E. Dunn, visiting assistant professor in the Department of Geology here, will speak at the Geology Colloquium today at 4 p.m. in Room 112, New East Building.

His subject is "Tectonic Significance of the Blanco Basin Formation of Enocene Age, San Juan Mountains, Colorado."

SSL COMPULSORY MEET

A compulsory organizational meeting of all delegates and unofficial alternates to this year's State Student Legislature will be held today at 4 p.m. in Roland Parker 3 in Graham Memorial. Suggestions for bills and resolutions to be presented by the UNC delegation will be discussed.

No More Waiting — Godot Is Here

Having met astonishing success in over 20 countries, Samuel Beckett's tragicomedy "Waiting for Godot" is being presented here.

The Theatre workshop of the Carolina Playmakers will present the play Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday at 8 p.m. in the round on stage at Memorial Hall.

Admission is free, but tickets must be picked up at the Graham Memorial information desk.

In leading roles are George Gray III, as Vladimar, and Arnold Wengrow, as Estragon. Also in the cast are Ben Jones as Pozzo, Jack Allison as Lucky, and Valerie Myers as a boy. The production is under the direction of Edward Kenestrick.

STUDENT SELECTED

UNC Graduate Student William Lucas of Fayetteville is among ten students selected by the U. S. National Student Association and the Institute of International Education (IIE) for a four-week tour in Southeast Asia.

The American students will leave San Francisco on December 15 to visit Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Hong Kong. A State Department grant will finance the student tour so students can observe cultural, social and political features of the Asian countries.

Washington Intern Program Applicants Asked To Meet

By PETE WALES

Budding politicians have a chance to advance their careers this afternoon.

A meeting will be held for all students interested in the Washington summer internship offered annually by UNC's Political Studies Program at 5:30 p.m. in 207 Caldwell.

Five UNC students are sent each summer to work for ten weeks in the office of a senator or representative. They receive a $500 stipend from the Political Studies Program for travel and living expenses.

While there, they have the opportunity to visit and interview many personalities in Washington and attend seminars with various political leaders.

Applicants must be sophomores, juniors or graduate students. A "B" average is recommended as well as sufficient course work in political science.

UNC's five interns last summer were Bob Spearman, Gary Blanchard, Vance Barron, John Ulfelder and Stu Eizenstadt.

"The internship program provides an outstanding opportunity to gain a better understanding of the legislative process than can possibly be obtained through course work," said Spearman, vice-president of the student body.

"The most interesting part is the individual contact you have with your Congressman. You get an inside look as to the roles he plays with respect to his constituents, his party and his colleagues in Congress."

Gary Blanchard, editor of the DTH, was the only intern working for a North Carolina representative. He stayed on for a month after the internship ended working for a salary.

"It presents an unparalleled opportunity to see how the nation's business is handled," Blanchard said, "combined with an opportunity for interviews with leaders all over town.

Last year's group interviewed such men as Theodore Sorensen, Justice "Whizzer" White, Bobby Baker, Sen. Hubert Humphrey and Sen. Barry Goldwater.

Applications for the internship are available at today's meeting or from Dr. Donald Matthews in the Political Science offices.

NOTICE: Register To Vote At Home

UNC students eligible to vote in the state-wide constitutional referendum Jan. 14 must register to vote and apply for absentee ballots in their home counties during the Christmas vacation.

Judge C. C. Carter, Orange County Elections Board Chairman, said yesterday that students whose permanent residence is elsewhere in N. C. cannot vote in Chapel Hill.

"It is necessary for such students to apply in writing to the chairmen of their local elections boards for absentee ballots," he said.

"In the past, a member of the student's family could secure the absentee ballot for him," Carter said.

"This is the first time that students have had to apply personally."

The same procedure should be followed in registering for the spring primary elections.

Mr. Erickson & The Gator Bowl

Much hell has been raised in the past few days over the fact that most UNC students going to the Gator Bowl will find themselves watching the action from behind a goal post.

As usual, UNC Athletic Director Chuck Erickson caught most of the blame. And as usual, he didn't really deserve it. He took the best of what was available in the way of tickets, so any blame really should go to the Gator Bowl officials who made the school allotments—but the Gator Bowl is an expensive proposition and has to be run like the business operation it is.

Consequently, tickets are sold far in advance to make sure there will be enough money to underwrite the costs of the Bowl, which are considerable. To sell these tickets in advance, with no one knowing who will end up playing in the bowl, the choicest seats are served up.

So what we end up with, from the student fan's point of view, is a miserable situation about which nothing much can be done. It's hard to face these facts, but they are the facts and honesty requires that they be faced.

This, however, does not completely exonerate Erickson. He could and should have made these facts public when the tickets went on sale. We wager the tickets would have been snapped up anyway and nobody would have had any hard feelings.

As it is, a shadow has been cast over what should be an occasion of great exuberance and spirit.

But even here Erickson is not wholly to blame. He has innumerable arrangements to attend to in preparation for the game, and it appears that he just didn't think to make the seat-location information public before the tickets were sold.

Thus Erickson is revealed as his own worst enemy.

What's to be done? Let's put this ticket-hassle behind us and make the best of it. We've got a football game to win Dec. 28, and that requires we get solidly behind our excellent team. A torch rally, say, tomorrow night, would seem to be very much in order.

Make Your Voice Heard . . . Vote!

Students at Carolina are in a very funny position at election time: we are not eligible to vote here. And every year there are students who try to register here to vote in some sort of an election or other, and are mighty disappointed when they find they can't.

Voting is one of the most important rights we have in this democratic political system of ours, and the one we tend to take least seriously. Especially at this time and in this State, it is important for all eligible voters to register. Early in the new year, one of the most important amendments ever proposed for the North Carolina Constitution comes up for a vote by the people. And the passage or defeat of this amendment will color our lives, as citizens and as students, for who knows how many years. This is the proposed amendment which would change the number of representatives in the House of Representatives of the General Assembly.

Other important votes which will come up during the time we are normally in school next year are the proposed school bond issue and the gubernatorial primaries in the spring. And if you're not registered, you can't vote.

What are you, and we, to do?

Register at home during the Christmas holidays. Get your name on the books in your home county. Next, apply in writing to the chairman of your county's Board of Elections for an absentee ballot. This application must be made in writing. The ballots can be mailed to you, or you can pick them up in person, if you wish.

This is not the time to exhort you which side to take in the very important referendum, although our position is clear and well-known. But it is the time to exhort you, even beg you, to be sure to register while you are at home, so that when these important issues come up you will be able to cast your vote.

Your vote is your voice in this democratic society.

Are You Listening, Mr. Secretary?

Pentagon Wasting Money?

By LYLE C. WILSON
United Press International

The shocking waste of public money by the national Defense Department military brass continues unabated and unrebuked despite claims from time to time that national defense has saved another billion here and another billion there.

If the Pentagon were a private corporation, the stockholders would have fired the management long since. The comptroller general of the United States has been calling fouls against the Pentagon ever since the monstrous building was erected to house the consolidated armed services. The comptroller general is an arm of the U.S. Congress. The office was created to audit the expenditure of funds appropriated by the Congress. The comptroller's reports on national defense procurement consistently have revealed reckless waste of public money.

There are annually many such audits of national defense spending. These tales of what the generals and admirals do with the taxpayers' dollars are almost incredible. They belong in a believe-it-or-not museum. Here is an example, dated Nov. 29, 1963.

Toward the end of the 1962 fiscal year the Air Force discovered that it had a reserve of unexpended funds that had been appropriated for expenditure in fiscal 1962. The Air Force, of course, had asked for this money on grounds of urgent need. The facts seem to be that the Air Force did not need the money at all and was somewhat embarrassed to approach the year end with a large unexpended balance.

The Air Force had to spend the money or turn it back to the treasury. So, the Air Force spent $323,000 of its surplus funds for new furniture it did not need. The comptroller general called the expenditure largely unjustified.

"Such waste and extravagance illustrates the need," the comptroller's report said, "for a greater sense of individual responsibility for economy in government operations."

This outrageous waste of public funds is a pretty fair sample of the waste which has gone on year after year and which is reflected in reports prepared by the comptroller general. Rep. Earl Wilson, R-Ind., told the House in a recent speech that the Army had wasted about $35 million in purchases of radio equipment without competitive bidding. The Navy has achieved even more spectacular feats of flushing public funds down the drain.

The most shocking aspect of this situation is that no one is doing anything about it. Or, anyway, nothing shows on the public record at this time. You might expect the civilian management of the National Defense Department to blackball the promotion of officers who waste public money. Or, you might expect some other action to discourage such inexcusably careless administration of the public business.

If Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara or any of his civilian aides has ever read any of the comptroller's reports, there is no evidence of it. The reports go, specifically, to the speaker of the House and to the president pro tempore of the Senate. Those elderly statesmen probably don't read them either.

President Johnson should make the comptroller's reports required reading for all cabinet officers and agency chiefs. When the Air Force throws a lot of money out the window, the responsible general should be chewed out in the classic military tradition. Are you listening, Mr. Secretary.

Customs Change With Time

(Editor's Note: This is the third in a series of articles from a UNC student visiting India in the Experiment in International Living program.)

By MARGARET A. RHYMES

CALCUTTA—That we learn to live together by living together is a simple enough faith on which the Experiment in International Living has operated for the past three decades.

Here in India 60 Americans and Europeans have tested this out as sons and daughters in individual homes throughout the country.

Embracing several thousand people in 40 nations around the world each year, the Experiment stakes its effectiveness on the homestay period when students are thrown headlong into a culture rather than peering in as tourists.

With each Experimenter in a separate home and as few intra-group contacts as possible, the natural tendency of foreigners to hang together is usually avoided.

Part of the impact that Experimenters make on foreigners, we're told is that they are "missionless."

"I expected a flood of propaganda about the States," said one Indian "brother," surprized that we were here to learn, not to teach. That the Experiment is entirely free from government sponsorship is another hard point to drive home.

One of the major difficulties—at least in India — is that only one per cent of upper class families is usually able to afford an Experimenter in their homes.

While these families are certainly a part of India, they often represent a more Westernized existence, far removed from the life of the average Indian.

Of course, were we placed in a typical village home, it is doubtful that they would know just what to do with us. Cutting across the language barrier would be only one of a myriad of problems.

This factor certainly puts added pressures on the Experimenter to dig deeper into the everyday customs and to discover "the real India," as we call it.

Our own host family in Calcutta has been an exception to that equation of wealth with Westernization.

While of the upper middle class (a car, a home and several servants), our "parents" were neither orthodox Hindus nor extremely Westernized, despite their wide travels.

Both received their master's degrees from Columbia University, in the U.S.A., and spent two years traveling on the Continent from England to Russia.

Our "father" Amalendu, in his early 40's (most Indian husbands are six or seven years older than their wives), directs an industrial and technological museum, the first in India.

His wife, Radha, is a very attractive and well-read young Burmese who left her homeland during the war.

Theirs seemed to be one of the more successful of arranged marriages, a custom still strongly practiced throughout India.

The tradition certainly has its merit here, since young people have little chance for contact before marriage and open dating is rarely done.

Another reason why arranged marriages "work" (the question is moot) is that the wife is expected to do most of the adjusting if the couple is incompatible.

Divorce is extremely rare and was only legalized within the past seven years.

Of those today who oppose this custom, many are bitter over the quiet suffering they observe in "forced" arranged marriages.

However, the Indian woman is more gracefully adaptable — or resigned—to adjusting than the American female. And with her limited contacts, she doesn't have many opportunities for comparison.

Many young people have said they prefer a combination love-arranged marriage. This seems the most realistic idea. Seldom today does one find a bride setting eyes on her bridegroom for the first time on the wedding day.

Another tradition that is breaking down in this slow social transition is that of status determined by the number of sons a man has.

India is one of the few countries in the world where the government is conducting an all-out campaign for birth control. Family planning centers and billboards in dozens of languages encourage wise planning for fewer and healthier children.

The most frequent reason given for the program's failure in the rural areas, besides the lack of education, is that in isolated villages there is little other entertainment as such.

One of the unfortunate successes of this campaign, however, has been among the educated and upper classes. While the villages still increase their numbers by two per cent each year, the intellectuals and those who can afford education are decreasing in proportion to the whole society.

Our Calcutta family included two children: Urmi, a gregarious 13-year-old with a talent for classical Indian singing, and Shintu, an active six-year-old with round, horn-rimmed glasses and a decidedly British accent.

Both children attend Catholic schools, as do a high percentage of students from upper class families in all the larger cities.

None of the family, while extremely well - educated, somewhat modern and well-traveled, has lost its pride in the culture and history of India.

And this seemed a particularly wonderful quality to find in a world where more and more cultures are being white-washed with the sophistication and mechanization of the West.

Education: Too Few Ideas

By SIDNEY J. HARRIS

When Heine asked his coachman, "What are ideas?" the coachman pondered a moment and answered: "Ideas? . . . Ideas are the things they put into your head."

Even today, most people might answer as the coachman did, for our formal system of education seems to consist of things put into our heads—names and dates and battles and multiplication tables and the three principal sources of raw material in the Malayan Peninsula.

Of course, these are not ideas. Ideas are what comes out of the head. Nobody can put them there, although a good education can stimulate them, organize them, and give them a solid basis in reason.

Education, if it means anything, is a drawing out; it is not a pushing in. The human mind is not a sausage casing into which we can stuff knowledge; and, usually, the harder we try to stuff the more resistance we encounter. This is why so much formal education is a waste of time and energy.

A human being is a repository of ideas; the while trick is to get these ideas out in the open, to test them against reality, to expose them to other ideas, and thus to sharpen and toughen them.

The greatest flaw in formal education, in my opinion, is that it has little respect for ideas and too much for information. Children can get easily bored with information, when it seems to have no relevance; but they are excited and interested in ideas.

I vividly remember how the subject of zoology was ruined for me in school by teachers who were concerned only with classification and memorization of insects and such. No attempt was made to relate the subject to the other links in the great chain of life.

Nor was this merely a defect in the teachers. It was, rather, their general attitude toward learning in my day; there is some evidence that it has improved a little, but still not enough. The "dropout problem" is largely economic and social—but a part of it is also pedagogical, in that dead teaching turns students away from the classroom and toward more animated aspects of the human scene.

Every child's mind is teeming with ideas. Too often these ideas are systematically throttled or strangled in the school system, which looks only for the "right answers" that are in the back of the book. What is in the back of the head is rarely encouraged to move to the front.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Hoax!

Editors, the Tar Heel:

In case you hadn't noticed, the Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers is a hoax. It was meant to carry to its logical conclusion ANY effort to deny someone in ANY way the pain and privilege of independent thought. The letters were written as satire; we hoped that by using the usual arguments to advocate absurdities we could point out the danger inherent in these arguments. We must learn in one way or another that hating Communism and protecting freedom are NOT the same thing. Only by actively protecting the American ideal of individual liberty and human rights against all encroachments can we hope to prevail over the dangers of Communism, or of any other system which does not place the rights of man first. There is a basic similarity between all enemies of freedom: in the previous letter, we used a quotation regarding the necessity of rationing liberty. To many of you vigorous anti-Communist patriots this may have seemed sound advice; you will no doubt be embarrassed to learn that the quotation is attributed to Lenin.

The real American ideal must prevail not only over its enemies, but over its friends.

Live & Let Live

Editors, The Tar Heel:

It is disturbing to discover that the narrow-mindedness and lack of confidence in the American System and the American Student display by the Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious Subversive Speakers exists at Carolina. After their letters of earlier this week, something must be said. The rest of this letter is addressed to them.

Gentlemen, you have asked the question, "Is it necessary for the taxpayers of this State to purchase copies of the works of such dangerous, Unamerican 'writers' as Lenin, Marx, Khrushchev, and others?" and have attempted to stifle the obvious rebuttle by suggesting that students learn about communism through the writings of J. Edgar Hoover, Fred C. Schwarz, HUAC documents, and from the "materials published by our freedom-loving friends of the American Legion." To answer the question of the necessity of such "unAmerican (note the capitalization) literature. I offer two analogies: 1) In a courtroom, the jury may be completely informed as to the facts of the case through the prosecutor's oration, but it may not make a decision until the defendant has presented his side of those same facts; 2) One cannot base a criticism of Shakespeare on the opinions of other critics, cannot even agree or disagree with those opinions until one has read Shakespeare.

I ask you to live and let live. Whether I purchase "pornographic trash" is my personal decision, not to be made for me by a state legislature (you must have very dirty minds to get anything pornographic from Catcher in the Rye). It is not that I wish to purchase such literature, but I like to know that I may if I so desire. The same goes for "insidious, subversive speakers." By denying them the right to speak here, you are infringing on my right to hear them. It becomes ludicrous when politics is confused with botany, or any other subject, for that matter.

Should you gain your desired majority in this state, there is still no bill you could have passed to restrict the right of all Americans to think and decide objectively. Students today not only are, but have to be, mature enough to make their own decisions. Before you rush to hide behind your shield of "patriotism" I suggest you consider the individual rights inherent in a democratic, free society. Gentlemen, live and let live.

The Fuzzy-Wuzzy Strikes Back!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I would like to correct Mr. James Robinson. He has misunderstood everything and learned nothing from the contents of my letter of November 19. Talk about being fuzzy. Wow!

It seems to me that Robinson could improve his vocabulary to the point that his preoccupation with the word fuzzy might give way to a fresher and more expressive phrase. Words masquerading as thoughts betray a poor thinker. Constructing patently unoriginal and unimaginative poetry such as he did only tends to convince me that not only is he living in a fairy-tale political world, but indeed, he is an amateur Pangloss. And like the Voltaire character, he is indiffrent to the injustices of this world. Or seems so from his letter.

Frank Crowther, and I have sat through Maurice Natanson's philosophy of religion. A brilliant person, he is prone to alienate less sophisticated types who flare up in horror at his political views. It is true that he often exaggerates to drive home a point. Such must have been the case in his calling Goldwater a fascist. It's the same kind of rash and foolish thing as calling liberals fuzzy. In either case one merely saws off the limb one is sitting on.

"He ridiculously equates the segregationist and the opponent of the Public Accommodations Act." I advise Robinson to seriously consider taking a remedial English course or a course on how to read carefully. There is no equating of the two anywhere either emplied or expressed. However, it follows logically that all segregationists would oppose the act. It is true that one need not be a segregationist to be against it, but it sure helps. There are many integrationists who find the Public Accommodations Act an infringement on private property. Not me.

He says that the question involved in this "New Fuzzitier" legislation is not segregation but a violation of Constitutional rights. In both cases he is mistaken. I have studied the Constitution and I hope that I will never get so tragically wrong as to let the letter of the law obscure my feeling for the spirit of it. As I see it, this is the trap into which Robinson falls.

The Fifth Amendment states at the end: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." Robinson has interpreted this amendment with cobwebs on his brain. It is important to grasp what this means and doesn't mean. Not unpredictably, Robinson is proficient at the latter.

Private property is not going to be taken for public use. It is the businesses which are privately owned which already serve the public. What the U.S. Supreme Court insists is that it is high time the whole public is served, because it is morally right. But with the justness of this decree lies the common sense behind it. If a man wants to serve only a portion of the public, for instance the whites, then let him be served notice that he had better get his precious and holy private property out of public participation. If you're going to play ball, then get your uniform on. Otherwise leave the ball park.

The amendment doesn't mean that the U.S. Government has a right to make a private property owner go into public business. It does mean, and emphatically so, that if the private property owner is already doing public business, he has no constitutional assurance written in the Fifth to guarantee or justify his refusal to serve only a portion of the public, no matter what his personal reasons or prejudices.

After all kinds of mangled and monotonous dronings and miscellaneous whinings over property rights, there remains nothing more sacred or implicit to the spirit of the Constitution than its laws for inalienable human rights. No man-made document, however august or revered, can make right or just that which is irrevocably contrary to human dignity. No man or nation at any time in history has ever been able to stop the the wrongs of this earthly existence.

Robinson says, "Is the whole Constitution required reading for liberals, Mr. McInnis, or do you just fuzzy along until you reach the Fourteenth Amendment?" Well the answer to this is as simple as the questioner. I know what the Constitution says in the moral and literal context. It is to be pitied, judging from Robinson's letter, that he apparently has such a small, nearsighted comprehension or appreciation for that imperishable document.

I have a few more things to say but space will not permit it here.

—Beta Gamma Sigma Intiates Fifteen Students—

Fifteen students have been elected into the UNC chapter of Beta Gamma Sigma, national honorary society in business administration.

Election to Beta Gamma Sigma is the highest scholastic honor a student in the field of business administration can attain.

To be eligible a candidate must be in the upper ten per cent of his class as a senior and have an overall grade average above 3.0. If he is a junior, he must rank in the upper 10 per cent.

Faculty members elected to Beta Gamma Sigma must have completed three years teaching at the institution electing them and have made significant contributions to the school.

Honorary members are selected from outstanding men in business and government who have rendered extraordinary service in their fields.

New members are: John A. Boyanowski, Durham; Robert L. Carter, Saint Pauls; Robert Eagle, Chapel Hill; Ronald Gabriel, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Dan E. Gillis, Raleigh; Eric A. Goldby, Long Beach, N. Y.; E. Anne Greene, Richlands; John Haslem, Chapel Hill; Donald Loomis, Chapel Hill; Edward G. Michaels, Monroeville, Ala.; Ronald B. Moser, Charlotte; Ralph W. Pope, Rich Square; Albert E. Walser, Salisbury; David M. Williams, Long Meadow, Mass., and Robert E. Woodruff, Carrboro.

Help the needy through the Community Chest.

Goettingen Plan Blanks Available

Applications for the two annual Goettingen Scholarships are now available at the YMCA and Graham Memorial Info Desk, announced Kellis Parker, chairman of the International Students Board. All interested persons must complete and return them to the YMCA by February 15.

On the Goettingen Exchange Program, now in its ninth year, two UNC students are sent for a year at the Universitaet Goettingen in northern Germany. Full scholarship, including round-trip transportation, is provided. Students selected must return for at least one year at UNC.

Two German students are sent each year from Goettingen for a year on this campus.

The Carolinians in Goettingen have a chance to immerse themselves in German culture, university life, and academic pursuits. If the student is selective and prearranges his courses, he can receive a full year's credit for his year in Goettingen.

Each Goettingen scholar traditionally spends one or both semesters in the well-known Fridtjof Nansen International House in Goettingen, an old mansion housing 60 foreigners and 60 Germans together.

The Goettingen Scholars are selected on the basis of academic excellence, language proficiency, and character. A student of any major may apply, though he must have had at least one semester of German. Both men and women students are eligible.

Completed applications may be returned any time before February 15.

Maybe On 28th

Oh, For Warm Sun

By JOHN MONTAGUE

It may be warm in Jacksonville on December 28, but it was a little on the chilly side in Kenan Stadium Monday afternoon. The Tar Heels tried to forget about the cold as they began their first full weak of heavy drills since the Duke game.

Bundled up in long-sleeved sweatshirts under their practice uniforms, the players divided up the hour-long workout between defense and offense. All of the squad participated in the drills except Bob Lacey and Dave Braine.

Lacey did put in an appearance, taking a leisurely lap or two around the field. The All-American end is expected to be ready for the Air Force, but probably will stick to sweat-suit conditioning workouts until the team goes to Florida on December 23. The tall flankman is recovering from a twisted knee.

The outlook for Braine is not as bright. The defensive back and kicking specialist has a hairline fracture of the fibia (one of two olwer leg bones) just above the ankle. Braine is off crutches now and was an observer at practice yesterday.

"I hope to run some in the next few days, but it's up to (trainer) John Lacey," said Braine. "Maybe I'll be able to do some kicking when we get down to Jacksonville."

The team will practice today and tomorrow, and most of the players will leave for their homes Wednesday night. All players will fly to Jacksonville on Monday. It will mean Christmas away from home, but nobody is complaining.

"Only rich people get to spend the holidays in Florida," said Braine. "We're all eager to play in the bowl game."

Biggest UNC Point Output In 5 Years

NEW ORLEANS—North Carolina went on its biggest scoring spree in five years here Monday night, demolishing an obviously outclassed Tulane quint, 109-81.

It was the most prolific point production by a UNC team since the 1958 Tar Heels blasted South Carolina, 115-38 (which is a school record). In addition the rout of the winless Green Wave meant victory No. 4 for the Tar Heels on the season and a 2-0 mark on the Louisiana trip.

Charlie Shaffer came through with the biggest night of his career, hitting for 32 points to lead all scorers. The converted guard cashed in on lay-up after lay-up as the UNC cagemen showed something new—speed. The fine passing of Billy Cunningham, Mike Cooke and Billy Gallantai made the fast break go as the Greenies were caught napping on many occasions.

But it was his passing which seemed to most impress the small crowd at a school where basketball success simply is not this year. It was the fifth setback of the year for the Tulane cagers.

Both Coach Dean Smith and Tulane's head man, Ted Lenhardt, cleared their benches in the free-scoring affair which was surprisingly close for the first seven minutes. The Greenies, who never led, did tie the count at 10-10 with 13:02 left, but Bob Bennett hit a free throw, Shaffer made a three-point play and UNC waltzed to a 55-30 halftime lead.

UNC-Georgia On Television

Radio station WUNC (Channel 4) announced yesterday it would televise on Broadvision the North Carolina-Georgia basketball game Wednesday night, Dec. 18 starting at 8:00 p.m. Broadvision is the same system used last year on the basketball games with no audio portions, just video.

WUNC is also planning a telecast Monday night, Dec. 22 at 9:00 of a film revue of the highlights of North Carolina's 1963 football season. The film is to be narrated by UNC Sports Publicist Bob Quincy.

East Pro-Bowl Team Named

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—Passing wizard Y. A. Tittle of the New York Giants and rushing star Jim Brown of the Cleveland Browns headed an NFL Eastern Conference squad of 34 players announced Monday for the 14th annual all-star Pro Bowl football game Jan. 12.

The offensive squad: Ends—Del Shofner, Giants; Pete Retzlaff, Eagles; Lee Folkins, Cowboys. Tackles—Dick Schafrath, Browns; Charley Bradshaw, Steelers. Guards—Vince Promuto, Redskins; Darrell Dess, Giants; Ken Gray, Cardinals.

Centers—Bob DeMarco, Cardinals; John Morrow, Browns. Quarterbacks — Y. A. Tittle, Giants; Charley Johnson, Cardinals. Halfbacks — Tim Brown, Eagles; Don Perkins, Cowboys.

Flankers—Bobby Mitchell, Redskins; Buddy Dial, Steelers. Fullbacks—Jim Brown, Browns; John Henry Johnson, Steelers. Kicker—Sam Baker, Cowboys.

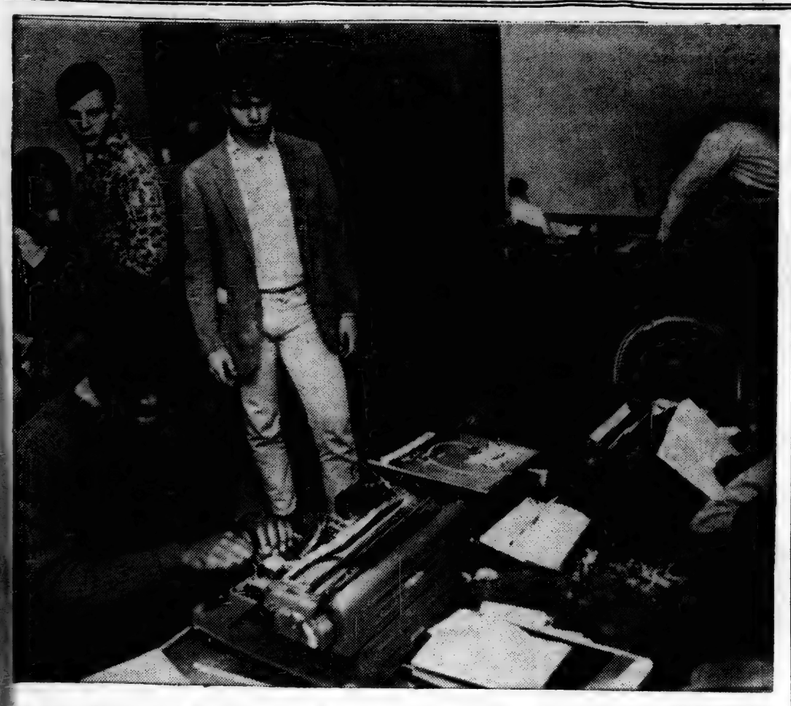
Offices in Graham Memorial | CHAPEL HILL, N. C., WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1963 | United Press International Service



HEADQUARTERS of the local CORE chapter is located in a room above a Carrboro funeral parlor on Merritt Road. All the plans and programs in the fight against segregation are coordinated in this room. John Dunne, chairman of the chapter, talks on the phone as Quinton Baker, president of the North Carolina Youth Program for the NAACP, types press releases.—Photo by Jim Wallace.

CORE Hopes Chapel Hill To Be First In The State

By PETER HARKNESS

In a dingy room above a funeral parlor in Carrboro, the local chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) maintains its headquarters.

In mid-afternoon, the office is bustling with busy white and Negro volunteers. Young girls work feverishly on typewriters, two boys talk quietly beside an oil stove, while another explains new tactics to a local minister over the phone.

One of the workers, Quinton Baker, is a serious young man who has a neat appearance, wears glasses, and speaks in an articulate manner. He is a pleasant person with a good sense of humor.

A student at North Carolina College, Quinton is head of the state youth program for the NAACP.

He was carried from Brady's Restaurant Sunday night and from the Pines Monday night by police during sit-ins.

This is nothing new for Quinton. He has spent a number of nights in jails throughout the state.

He is especially interested in Chapel Hill because of the hope, which is shared by others, that it will be the first town in the state to totally desegregate.

The current integrationist move began here at the end of the spring semester last year and extended through the summer. The original anti-segregation group was the Committee for Open Business (COB) which sponsored marches, picketing, and sit-ins throughout the summer. Some demonstrations were as large as 500 strong. Thirty-four were arrested in a sit-in at the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Bureau.

At the end of the summer, COB was replaced by Citizens United for Racial Equality and Dignity (CURED) and at the beginning of the school year, the local chapter of CORE was established.

CURED is only a local organization while CORE is a member of one of the largest national civil rights groups.

Quinton Baker was here throughout the summer and frequently participated in demonstrations. When asked why the COB disbanded, Quinton remarked, "The committee failed this summer because of the ineffectiveness of the movement, which brought a strong desire for new tactics that were contrary to the beliefs of many members."

"If any gains are to be made, the present movement has the greatest chance of achieving them," he added.

"The majority of the crowds this summer weren't willing to make the sacrifice necessary for an effective movement."

Quinton feels that the new integrationist groups have been able to organize people who are willing to make those sacrifices.

"CURED encompasses all those who are willing to make certain contributions, but not go so far as to go to jail. CORE's members are ready for anything."

The local leader of CORE is John Dunne, who recently gave up his Morehead Scholarship and left the University so he could work full-time for the organization.

John is a rather handsome, dark-haired fellow with a pleasant voice. If anything, he is intense.

He is one of the few whites whom the Negroes respect for leadership. Most whites, they say, are not militant enough. During the summer, the white participants served as a moderating force, but most of them are no longer active.

There is still a certain element of dissatisfaction with the present leadership. Some feel the recent wave of sit-ins have detracted attention from the planned voter-registration drive.

In answering them, Dunne said, "You might find a small element that feels we are stressing the wrong things now. That element is referred to as the "white liberals." There are very few Negroes, if any, included."

Asked if he thought a Public Accommodations law for Chapel Hill was possible in the near future, he said, "It's up to the city's fathers to solve the city's problems. I think there is a distant possibility they will. We are asking for complete desegregation before Christmas."

Quinton Baker was not as optimistic.

"Of any North Carolina town, Chapel Hill has the greatest possibility, but I'm very skeptical," he said.

As he was talking, an elderly minister entered the office. It was Father Clarence Parker, an 80-year-old retired Episcopalian minister. What did he think of the recent developments?

"It all goes into one basket," he said. "I'm behind anything subject to the principles upon which CORE is based."

He must have meant it. Two hours later he had to be carried out of the Pines Restaurant by police. He was one of nine arrested in a sit-in staged by CORE Monday night.

JOHN SALTER

The John Salter arrested during a sit-in at the Pines Monday is not the same John Salter who is chairman of the Chapel Hill Progressive Labor Club.

The John Salter who was arrested is a former professor and is currently a field organizer for the Southern Conference Educational Fund. He is presently stationed in Raleigh.

WUNC-TV has announced that it will televise the game, starting at 8 p.m., using its "Broadvision" technique. There will be no audio coverage of the game, only video. Viewers can listen to the game over any of the radio stations which will be carrying the intersectional battle.

Bill Urging More Student Participation Is Passed

By SUZY STERLING

The first Negro member of Student Legislature was sworn in at a special session Monday night.

Larry Poe, a junior from Salisbury, will replace recently resigned Richard Westin in Dorm Men's I. Like Westin, he is an independent, and said he "intends to remain one."

In other action, a resolution urging further student participation on Faculty Committees and a bill to amend the SL By-laws were passed.

Neal Jackson, sponsor of the Faculty Committee resolution, said that currently only one student is a member of a faculty committee, that being Scholarships, Awards, and Student Aid.

According to Jackson, the committee chairman, Dr. J. R. Caldwell, has praised the student representative highly, noting that the student was "active and effective in the work of this Faculty Committee."

Jackson said that Dean Cathey had noted in a letter that general reaction from other faculty committee members was negative.

These members commented that they had tried student members in the past, and there were "poor attendance and no contributions."

The faculty members were willing to let students appear before committees and offer suggestions, but not to act as members.

Student Government officials are making efforts to place students on other committees, such as Buildings and Grounds, Fraternities and Sororities, Admissions, and Athletics.

Bob Spearman, legislative speaker, said the only way the faculty could benefit from student suggestions would be through student relations.

The resolution passed unanimously.

An amendment to the Bylaws which will provide an automatic adjournment of the legislature at 10:45 p.m. was also approved.

The amendment will make it possible for the women students in legislature to obtain last minute permission from house-mothers in the event of unusually long session.

In the past, late permission had to be obtained three days in advance, preventing women from remaining after 11 p.m. when a session ran over.

This left 25 per cent of the student body unrepresented for part of the session.

This amendment will reassure the Dean of Women that late sessions will not be frequent, so that late permission may be gained at the last minute.

The election of the two members to the CUSC was postponed because of a large number of absentees.

Also sworn in as a new legislator was Gordon Parker.

Tuesday's demonstration brought the total arrested in five days of renewed protests to 73.

Treasury Chases Chain Letters

The U. S. Treasury Department is cautioning the public against the current rash of Savings Bonds "chain letters" which are reportedly being circulated on some college campuses in North Carolina.

A Treasury spokesman announced yesterday that "The Treasury Department is opposed to such practices. The objections stem from the fact that such schemes make fraudulent misuse of Savings Bonds, and experience over the years has shown that the vast majority of people who participate in such schemes or lotteries lose their investment.

"Some chain letter plans imply that the Government approves the idea in order to increase bond sales. This is not true. Banks and other issuing agents have instructions to refuse to sell Savings Bonds in cases where they know or have reason to suspect that the bonds issued will be used in any type of chain letter scheme. This applies whether

The New Look In Girl Grabs

By JOHN GREENBACKER

It didn't look like much of an abduction scene yesterday at the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity house, but that's exactly what it was.

Brothers of the fraternity "kidnapped" housemothers of the seven sororities on campus and held them until each girl of each house contributed a can of food for charity.

Charles Wolfe, Lambda Chi vice-president, said the canned goods would be given to the Inter-Church Council, an affiliate of the Red Cross, for distribution.

How did the mothers take it?

"The boys were real sweet," said Kappa Kappa Gamma mother Mrs. Mary Huffman. "I think these boys deserve lots of credit

SP To Elect New Leader In GM Tonite

Legislative Seats Also To Be Filled

The Student Party will meet tonight to select a new chairman. The meeting will be held at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge of Graham Memorial.

Neal Jackson, party chairman for the past year, announced last week that he would not run for re-election. He cited his work in Student Legislature and NSA as the reasons for his withdrawal.

Also to be elected tonight are a new vice-chairman, two year-long seats on the party's Advisory Board and two six-month seats on the Advisory Board.

Legislative seats to be filled include Dorm Men's IV (Upper Quad) and in Town Men's IV (the area outside the corporate limits of Chapel Hill and Carrboro).

"Several people have indicated interest in these positions, and the meeting is of importance to all party members," commented Jackson. "We hope that everyone will be able to attend.

"We have scheduled the meeting early in order to avoid conflict with the basketball game, and it will not last more than 45 minutes."

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Johnson Pledges Full Support To UN

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (UPI)—President Johnson pledged full support to the United Nations yesterday and offered a new year vow to make world peace, civil rights and human welfare "not an illusion but a reality."

Delegates applauded for 42 seconds when he ended his 15-minute address with the pledge that:

"Any man and any nation that seeks peace—and hates war—and is willing to fight the good fight against hunger and disease and ignorance and misery—will find the United States of America by their side, willing to walk with them every step of the way."

Bogus Priest Is Russian Spy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Justice Department said yesterday that a mystery man accused of espionage for the Soviet Union has been identified as a 44-year-old Russian.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said the accused spy, who assumed the name of a New York priest, really was Alexander Sokolov, 44, a native of Tiflis, Russia.

The department said it still does not know the identity of the woman arrested with Sokolov in Washington by the FBI last July 2.

The couple was living together in a fourth-floor walkup apartment under the names of "Robert King Baltch" and "Joy Ann Garber Baltch." The real Baltch is a priest.

The identification of Sokolov came to light when a federal grand jury in Brooklyn reindicted the Russian and the bogus "Mrs. Baltch" on charges of conspiring to spy for Russia and conspiring to act as foreign agents without notifying the State Department.

Ruby's Lawyers Seek Habeas Corpus

DALLAS (UPI)—Jack Ruby's lawyers fought yesterday to move the strip club owner from jail to a psychiatrist's couch to seek evidence that Ruby was insane when he shot and killed Lee Harvey Oswald.

A writ of habeas corpus was filed with criminal court judge Joe B. Brown Monday that charged Ruby was held illegally without bond and that he could not get "proper psychiatric treatment" in jail.

Mich., Kentucky Threats To Loyola

NEW YORK (UPI) — Loyola of Chicago has two new challengers for the No. 1 spot in the weekly United Press International basketball ratings following last week's upsets which plagued the nation's top teams.

The Ramblers finished first for the third straight week, receiving 28 of the 35 first place votes cast by the coaches on the UPI ratings board, but moving up fast were second-ranked Michigan and third-ranked Kentucky.

Michigan, unbeaten in five games, received three first-place votes and 245 points, 880 behind Loyola. Adolph Rupp's Wildcats, also 5-0, had two first place votes and 202 points.

Duke (3-1), beaten by ninth-ranked Vanderbilt (5-0), dropped from second to fourth place. Cincinnati (3-1) was fifth and UCLA (4-0) was sixth. New York University (4-1), beaten by Toledo in Madison Square Garden last week, dropped from third to seventh but had one first place vote.

Texas, another unbeaten with a 5-0 record, moved up from ninth to eighth place. Vanderbilt (5-0) was ninth and there was a three-way tie for 10th between Davidson (6-0), Toledo (6-0) and Oregon State (5-1).

Vanderbilt, Davidson and Toledo figured in last week's biggest upsets. Vandy beat Duke, 97-92, and Toledo stopped NYU, 87-74. Davidson beat Ohio State, 95-73. The three teams are newcomers to the top 10 along with UCLA.

Dance!

Come one, come all to the Carolina Christmas Ball.

It's Thursday beginning at 8 p.m. at the Carolina Inn Ballroom and the dress is semi-formal.

The Duke Ambassadors, a 14-piece orchestra, will provide the dance music.

The dance, first of its kind, is being sponsored jointly by the Men's Residence Council and the Carolina Women's Council.

The idea came out of a meeting of the two Councils early in November. This is the first year the two have combined for a joint project.

Non-alcoholic refreshments will be served and all students and faculty are invited. If you don't have a date, snake your professor. Admission is one dollar per couple.

Postponed

Trials of two Chapel Hillians arrested in a sit-in here Saturday, Rosemary Ezra, 25, and James Foushee, 22, Negro, were postponed Tuesday until Jan. 2, in Recorder's Court.

Ezra, a student in the University's Extension Division, and Foushee were arrested Saturday in a sit-in at Leo's, a segregated restaurant on W. Franklin Street.

Both declined to post the $175 band, $100 for resisting arrest and $75 for trespassing, and remained in jail.

THESE ARE THE REMAINS of a cabin near Manning Drive owned by student Jim Kirkman. According to Fire Chief James Stewart, the fire apparently started when an oil heater overheated about 4:30 p.m. Monday. A companion cabin, in the background, owned by Peter Van Riper, escaped fire damage. Stewart said no estimate of the damage was available and that an investigation was continuing.—Photo by Jim Wallace.

'Encounter' Discusses North Carolina Fund

By JOHN GREENBACKER

"There is no longer an excuse for not correcting our poverty and unemployment problems," Dr. George Esser said Monday night.

Dr. Esser, Executive Director of the North Carolina Fund, called for better organization and coordination of welfare and research agencies in North Carolina on WUNC-TV's weekly panel discussion program, "Encounter."

Stressing the need for public interest in the growth of the community, Dr. Esser said, "Until we help make people productive and self-reliant, we will fail to reach our goals."

The Fund was created by Gov. Terry Sanford after the state received contributions from several national foundations for the solution of its welfare problem.

Dr. Esser described the Fund's purpose as providing a new "incentive."

"While other organizations were established to create opportunities, we were established to help people take advantage of them," he said.

Mike Brooks, Director of Research for the Fund, said one out of every six citizens of North Carolina has below a sixth grade education. "The mountain and coastal areas have the worst economic problems," he said.

The Fund is now attempting what Dr. Esser described as "a comprehensive package of programs" in key areas of the state designed at relieving poverty and educational problems. "Response has been great," he said.

Dr. John Clayton, program moderator, concluded the discussion by stressing "the Fund is not a mass handout, but an experiment which may be carried out and duplicated throughout the state."

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Speaker-Committee, Demonstrations, Etc.

Dupe?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

For several days I have been reading the letters sent in by that illustrious group, the Student Committee to Help Eliminate Insidious, Subversive Speakers. I would like to know who the members of this group are and what kind of "favorable response" they received. I seriously doubt that this "student committee" is really composed of college students. More likely, it is one of the utlra-conservative organizations such as the John Birch Society or the American Legion hiding behind a long title.

Who are they to pass judgment on what is fit for people to hear? They say that "immature youth" is not "sufficiently trained" in "the proper ideas of our American Way" to see the faults of communism. What do they mean by these terms? What are "the proper ideas" and when does a person become mature enough to safely handle the communist doctrines? It seems to me that if this organization put into practice what they preach, America would be an even worse police state, imprisoning mind and body, than the worst form of communism.

Our "friends" make reference to the idea that we should learn about communism not from "some pale pink professor who spends his time in books (but) rather . . . in the manly arts of war." Since when has the "American Way" of settling issues been based on "the manly arts of war"? Also, what is so "manly" about war? The death and suffering caused by war is the most horrible evil man has created and carries no glory or manliness except that which is in the warped minds of men who favor it as a method of settling disputes.

I was disgusted to read that these people consider such phrases as "Love thine enemies," "Blessed are the peacemakers," and "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," out of date and even dangerous. I have always been led to believe by my pale pink professors that these are the basic American and Christian ideals.

I don't agree with your ideas. I feel that the fanatical right is just as dangerous as the fanatical left. So what am I, a dupe of communist infiltrators? Are you going to eliminate me and my insidious, subversive ideas?

Anti-Gag Quotes

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Politically speaking, I consider myself a moderate or even a conservative. However, my opinion on House Bill 1395 swings in the opposite direction from most conservatives. I justify my damnation of the "Gag Law" on two bases—the concept of democracy and the concept of academic freedom, the two of which are inseparable. Not being a polished speaker or writer, I must depend upon the words of John Stuart Mill and Supreme Court Justice Douglas in order to present my views. They are quoted here from "The Politics of American Democracy."

Mill wrote in his essay, "On Liberty," "If all mankind minus one were of one opinion, and only one person were of the contrary opinion, mankind would be no more justified in silencing that one person, than he, if he had the power, would be justified in silencing mankind."

In the following quote, Justice Douglas dissents the Supreme Court's opinion of the Feinburg Act; however, by substituting the word "speaker" for "teacher," this passage is applicable to House Bill 1395:

"Where suspicion fills the air and holds scholars in line for fear of their jobs, there can be no exercise of the free intellect. Supineness and dogmatism take the place of inquiry. . . . This, I think, is what happens when a censor looks over a teacher's shoulder. . . . It produces standardized thought, not the pursuit of truth. Yet it was the pursuit of truth which the First Amendment was designed to protect. . . . The Framers knew the danger of dogmatism; they also knew the strength that comes when the mind is free, when ideas may be pursued, wherever they lead. We forget these teachings of the First Amendment when we sustain this law."

Boycott Asked

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The Civil Rights movement has gained tremendous momentum in Chapel Hill in the past several days. Twenty-seven people, among them several white students, have been willing to sacrifice their holidays for freedom.

Yet, it must be remembered that far too many places in Chapel Hill do not serve all men with equal dignity.

We speak as individuals, and not as members of any organization, in asking every student's support in boycotting the following segregated establishments:

Allen's Amoco Service Station, Allen's Grill, Brady's Restaurant, Carolina Barber Shop, Carolina Beauty Shop, Carolina Grill, Chapel Hill Barber Shop, Clarence's Bar and Grill, Colonial Drug Store, The Frozen Custard, Leo's Restaurant, Merritt's Esso Service Station, North Carolina Memorial Hospital, The Patio, Dine and Dance, The Pines Restaurant, Rock Pile, The Shack, Sports Center, Tar Heel Barber Shop, Tar Heel Motel, Tar Heel Sandwich Shop, University Barber Shop, University Motel, Watts Motel, Watts Restaurant.

Mourning?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The serene atmosphere of the Pines Restaurant was shattered last night by a most unexpected event. While enjoying a quiet repast, I was suddenly aware of an obvious disruption of the usual surroundings. Almost immediately I found out that the cause for the disturbance was a rather serious personality conflict between the manager of the establishment and some prospective customers. One of these would be diners was a member of the Caucasian race and another was a member of the Negroid race, better known as a Negro. After exchanging some conversation that I cannot quote exactly, the manager and his companions at the entrance to the building were joined by a member of the Chapel Hill Police force who was accompanied by a member of the State Highway Patrol. Not being in an advantageous position, I did not witness the arrest of the demonstrators, but their arrest was later confirmed to me by an employe of the restaurant.

The point of this dispatch is to discover correct knowledge as to why this event occurred at this particular time. To the best of my knowledge (correct me if I am wrong) the entire nation is supposed to be in a situation of mourning because of the recent assassination of the President. This fact is symbolized all over the country by the lowering of the American flag to half-mast and I thought was to be accompanied by the temporary ceasation (sic) of all racial demonstrations. This period of mourning was to last for thirty days.

If I am correct in asserting that there was not supposed to be any such activity for the duration of the official mourning period, then somebody is out of order in allowing this event at the Pines to take place.

If the flag at half mast does in fact symbolize a nation in mourning and if with it does come the temporary ceasation (sic) of racial demonstration, there are many conculsions that could justly be arrived at concerning the real cause of this demonstration. You can form your own.

A New Life?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The nation begins to recover. We look about us and begin to piece back togther the parts of the puzzle called "American Life." All of us take a hand in returning the pieces to their proper places, but now we are more conscious of the puzzle. We note with sorrow that someone has stolen one of the pieces and others are warped or frayed at the edges.

When will we again see "American Life" whole? Perhaps we never will, but then again, perhaps we may. But only when we realize that each of us has a hand in the jig-saw, only when we learn to work together to replace those warped and missing pieces will the puzzle become whole. And instead of merely painting the new pieces, we must add color to the whole with our love, our pride, our devotion.

More Fuzzy-Wuzzy McInnis

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I have a few more facts to offer for the disposal of Mr. James Robinson, hoping that he will not so much dispose of them as use them to his advantage and understanding.

Swooping down with ominous wings, befeathered in red, white and blue artificial coloring, he thinks to attack liberals, swallowing them up in one overwhelming burst of logic-power. But the vulture is weak and must choke on its own poison.

I urge Robinson to re-read with eagle eye the Ninth Admendment: "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." He should take this law to his heart and his head and apply its spirit and meaning to the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. Then he might get some elemental glimpse into what it's all about.

"The direct consequences of the Bay of Pigs invasion were a lowering of national prestige and a loss of several million dollars in ransom 'donated' by Americans. Mr. McInnis says that the John F. ('Fuzzyminded) Kennedy administration has a knowledge of direct consequences." Several objections, I have, Mr. Robinson: I said in my letter of November 19. "The liberal mind, if responsible, knows that goals have no meaning or direction without a knowledge of direct consequences, and he plans as best he can. The Kennedy Administration is doing precisely that, all disclaimers aside."

This did not mean that I believed the Administration knew in advance everything that could happen given a certain goal or course of action. Obviously, I said that the Kennedy Administration APPRECIATED consequences, not that it could gaze into a magic crystal ball. The late President admitted that a great and tragic mistake had been made with the invasion. Where was Mr. Robinson then?

Even men of Kennedy's position are fallible. It is only the strong and the humble who admit their limitations. The selfish nature of the conservative mind reared its head when it looked on the valiant men who were captured by Castro. What could it see out of its dollar-sign eyes but national disgrace when a compassionate nation pays a monumental ransom for mere men? I am happy to be a part of a world power not so wretchedly insensitive to humanity that it can band together to reclaim its freedom heroes. When Robinson waxes sarcastic about the ransom being "donated" there is little to do but inform him that a donation from private citizens was the case, and these Americans who gave had nothing of which to be ashamed.

Robinson needs to purge himself of the cliche that medicare is synonomous with socialism. Not so, not so. Medicare provides that medical health insurance be taken from social security. I think Robinson will have to eat crow here, but suspecting his delicate stomach, I suggest it be a Jim Crow, which would be most pallitable and more to his taste.

As for his deploring the forces of federal troops to assure equal educational opportunity, at Little Rock, or Mississippi, I suggest that he remembers that he is a citizen of America, whose Supreme Court wrote into our national conscience in 1954 that the laws of the land will be enforced. The government exists to protect the rights of her citizens, and that was what was done. It had to be done. If that exercise in democracy is "totalitarian," then we all might as well go back to the cave stage, when chaos ruled, and darkness prevailed.

What I protest above all else is fiction disguised as fact, wholesale distortions, synthetic and artificial associations. Like many conservatives, Robinson finds explanations for our bewildering world difficult, and since simple, misleading answers are easier to give than complex, accurate ones, a great many naive and incorrect statements have been made.

Do-Nothing Leaders & Demonstrations

The resumption of demonstrations in Chapel Hill is mute testimony to the failure of our town's political leaders to lead, whether through abdication or inability.

Faced with a patent evil—segregation in places of public accommodation—town leaders with the power to remedy this evil have hemmed and hawed over the false issue of property rights vs. human rights, and have ended up doing nothing, which amounts to condoning the evil.

As a result, humiliated Negroes and indignant whites have taken recourse to their only remaining weapon, the sit-in. Those who criticize the use of this weapon should bear in mind that it is only being used because all other methods—including a plea to the town's political leaders—have failed.

It is unfortunate that Chapel Hill's excellent police department is being made to bear the brunt of the situation, but by their lack of action the town's political leaders have in effect decreed that this be done. It is to be hoped that the police officers, who are having to work overtime to handle the demonstrations, will be compensated more adequately and quickly than they were as a result of a similar situation last summer.

For the benefit of those who criticize the demonstration in favor of strict attention to Negro voter registration, it should be pointed out that the two programs are not mutually exclusive. In fact, with sound leadership in both areas the programs are highly complementary. Demonstrations are far more effective than door-knocking when it comes to impressing upon the uninitiated Negro adult the need for him to register and vote, which is the only ultimate way to remove the need to demonstrate.

In the meantime, demonstrations are an excellent way of reminding the town's leaders that just because they have swept the problem under the rug, it still exists and must eventually be coped with, if only because segregationists are bigots to whom reason and human dignity have no appeal.

An Old Fashioned Power Play

Two important elections face North Carolina voters in the coming months, and both could have long range effects for this state. The first is the January 14 referendum on the mis-named "little federal" amendment to redistrict the state legislature. Those students who wish to vote on this referendum must register while at home over the Christmas holidays, and apply to the Chairman of the County Board of Elections in their home county for an absentee ballot.

This amendment is an issue on which every eligible North Carolina voter should educate himself and vote. If this redistricting proposal should pass it would give the smaller, less populous areas complete power to tyrannize the remainder of the state, and could quite possibly bring the state's growth rate and industrial progress to a slow and grinding halt.

But not only have the amendment's proponents ignored this aspect, they have perverted and scoffed at the concept of equal representation. At present the House and Senate are districted in a manner which fairly well reflects the state's population distribution, although not nearly as closely as might be liked.

The House has 120 members, 1 per county, plus 20 on a population basis. In this, 49 central North Carolina counties, with 70% of the state's population, control 55.8% of the seats in the House. If the "little federal" amendment passed the 20 seats alloted on population would be cut and the same 49 counties would only have 49% of the seats. 30% of the population would control a majority of the seats. However, it is also possible that only 19% of the population could control a majority in the House since that is the percentage of the population in the 51 smallest counties from all over the state.

But this shows only part of the gross unfairness of the plan. If it passed, Rep. George Wood of Camden County, for example, would represent 5,600 people while the Mecklenburg representative would speak for 272,100 people. Or the 15,883 people who live in Camden, Hyde and Tyrrell Counties would have the same representation as the 708,000 people who live in Mecklenburg, Guilford and Forsyth Counties. One Tyrrell County voter would count as much as 37 Wake County voters, 9 Wayne County voters or 14 Johnston County Voters.

But what about the Senate? The state Constitution provides for mandatory redistricting which was accomplished in the 1963 Special Session. Each Senator represents an average of 91,123 people with an average district variation of 10%. 54% of the total state population in the most populous areas has 52% of the Senate seats.

If the amendment passed, the Senate would be increased by 20 seats and the 1965 General Assembly would again have to redistrict. Each Senator would represent an average of 65,087 people, and the bill stipulates that each Senator shall represent a number not to vary more than 25% from the state average. This means that the variation between the Senator representing the most people and the Senator representing the fewest could be as large as 50%. Again a gross unfairness.

The proposed amendment is a blatant power grab by a few of the small county legislators, and must be defeated on January 14.

Cooking And Eating Customs Different Than Here

(Editor's Note: This is the fourth in a series of articles sent from India by a participant in the Experiment in International Living. Our Experimenter is sponsored by the International Students Board of Student Legislature.)

By MARGARET A. RHYMES

CALCUTTA—Walking into the home of an Indian family, one senses an air of timelessness and the feeling that nothing is ever rushed or hectic here.

There's room to breath and relax under the whirling barbershop fans, remnants from the British days, which hang from high, cool ceilings.

The outdoors with its palms and greenery and the tropical sun streams in through tall, unscreened, unglassed windows with wide casements.

An occasional sparrow slips in between the shutters to flutter about the room and a small green lizard darts across the wall.

Most of the furniture is low and comfortable and small bamboo stools and plenty of long, round bolsters are scattered about to settle back on.

People move about barefoot or in simple thong sandles across richly patterned rugs or the dark enameled floors, washed daily by one of several servants.

Pictures and statues of gods and a few clay toys and brass knicknacks are placed about on small, square tables.

In the bedroom—if the family doesn't spend their nights on the roof or in the gardens—there are narrow frame beds laced with canvas and covered by a thin palat, one muslin sheet and a light coverlet. Perhaps a mosquito net is hung from an overhead frame.

One wanders into the kitchen—with shoes off in the orthodox Hindu home for most of the food preparation is done on the floor.

There may be a small black stove and a spigot protruding low on the wall from which water runs along a small gulley to the outside. If the family is non-vegetarian, one may find another kitchen for the cook whose personal belief allows him to touch meat or fowl.

Food is cooked in large brass pots and served on large, round flat platters along with several small deep bowls. For special occasions, the more orthodox family sits cross-legged on the floor and takes its food from banana leaves.

Food is usually eaten with the hands and there's a subtle art to mixing the rice and curry, flicking it into the mouth and never letting the food reach above second knuckle on the back of the hand. Only the right hand touches the food, although the left may be used to serve it with a spoon.

Rice is usually the staple food served with dhal, a lentil mixture rich in protein that often substitutes for meat in the villages. This is eaten with the fingers while other vegetables are taken with the aid of chappaties, round, thin unleavened wheat bread.

Vegetables are highly spiced and amply sprinkled with chillies and the meat, if the family is not vegetarian, is usually mutton.

To counteract the hot foods are sweet chutneys or cocoanut mixtures; and, finally, curds or yogurt is taken to line the stomach and aid the digestion.

The amount of spices and sweets varies from area to area, religion to religion. But rice, dhal and chappaties in some form are eaten by most Indians.

Instead of the after-dinner cigarette, the Indian often prefers pan (like wan), a green leaf wrapped around betel nuts which have a mild intoxicating effect and turn the teeth and lips a deep, rich orange.

Smoking is extremely rare among women, and young people seldom do it in front of their elders.

Drinking is not quite so unheard-of among women, but it is usually done at home and remains a matter of family preference. Indian beer with its two-per-cent alcoholic content is surprisingly more expensive than many hard liquors. There is a total ban on imports, except for Scotch which is quite expensive.

Entertainment for the upper-class family is often in the form of films, plays or concerts. And evening entertainment means 6:30 p.m. or so, in order to return for the dinner meal by 10 o'clock.

The Indian day begins early and ends early with no hurry in getting places; long, relaxed meals; afternoon tea, and a leisurely late dinner before retiring.

Head cheerleader Tom Gruehn reported yesterday there is still room for students who wish to make the trip to Jacksonville.

"There is a train leaving Raleigh Thursday night," Gruehn said. "Right now, there is one car completely filled with UNC students, including the cheerleaders.

"About three-fourths of another car has been reserved for those who want to make the trip. If anyone would like to get a ticket on this train, they can do so by contacting Seaboard Railroad in Raleigh."

The cheerleaders are planning a pep rally either Friday afternoon or Saturday morning if enough students can be rounded up, Gruehn said.

"We still have the fireworks that we didn't use for the Duke game."

Gruehn said about 95 people would be making the Jacksonville trek on another special Seaboard train leaving Raleigh Friday night, and arriving in Jacksonville Saturday morning.

"That train will return to Raleigh immediately after the game Saturday," Gruehn said.

Another special train from Atlantic Coast Line will leave for the Gator Bowl from Rocky Mount on Friday night.

ALL YOU'RE SUPPOSED to know is what you read in the papers. But sometimes you also know what's really behind what you read in the papers. Or else you think you know.

Examples:

NEW YORK, Dec. 11 (AP)—Roger Staubach, Navy's All-America quarterback and Heisman award winner, offered these views on his future Wednesday:

"I have received questionnaires from professional football teams but I haven't talked to anyone because I still have a year and a half at the academy and then four years of service. My thinking has always been along the lines of a Navy career.

"I have a lot to learn about passing. I figure I'll learn a lot more about football in the next year and a half. Lots of times I wait for my receiver to get in the open before I throw. That's wrong. The pros throw to where the receiver is supposed to be."

BEHIND IT ALL: "I'm thankful to even be at Annapolis after having to take the English test twice in order to obtain admission. Now, I wonder how the H I'm going to get out of this commitment to go to sea instead of doing what I want to do.

"My thinking has always been along the lines of a pro career. Hell, I don't need any more of this college bit. I'm a pro passer right now. I don't see how I can learn any more about throwing than I already know.

"Lots of times I throw to where the man is supposed to be, and what happens? He blows it. He gets blocked, or is too slow, or some such other nonsense. I wish I was throwing to Shofner or Randall or somebody. Maybe I'll get married. Then I can sign."

WINSTON-SALEM, Dec. 11 (AP)—Financial problems, not low grades, forced football quarterback Karl Sweetan Jr. to withdraw from Wake Forest College, he said today.

Sweetan, who is married and has two children, said by telephone from his home in Dallas, Tex., "My parents have been helping us financially. But dad has been in poor health and my mother told us they couldn't afford to help us any more. We were completely out of money, and as far as I could see, there was nothing to do but drop out of school."

BEHIND IT ALL: "What a mess I got myself into at that hole. I thought Texas A&M was bad, then nobody else in the whole state would let me in. I should never have left 'ole junior college. That was such a ball . . . four TD passes a game and all that stuff.

"I'm completely out of money now. After the first four games, Wake couldn't afford to help us any more. I can't stay in a school that can't pay for my food. I'd never eat. Then they knifed Billy and the AD and I really couldn't see that. After all, look at that poor material he had to support me with. And then I couldn't see who they were going to get to coach—somebody like Sonny Grandelius or somebody and he could just as well be a crook. I don't know. 'And anyway I couldn't pass classics. So I left."

BERKELEY, Calif., Dec. 11 (AP)—Marv Levy announced his resignation Wednesday night as head football coach at the University of California.

In making his announcement to university officials, Levy said, "I have decided that it would be in the best interests of the university and all parties concerned to resign . . . My reasons for doing so are personal in nature."

BEHIND IT ALL: "If you don't think I still have pride, you're nuts. Newell and the alums said 'quit or get canned.' Hell, I've got to find another job somewhere. I don't want a reputation for getting fired everywhere I go. You'd resign, too."

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Dec. 16 (AP)—Ara Parseghian, looking shaken and distraught, walked out of a high-level Notre Dame meeting Monday without signing a contract as head Irish football coach.

The fiery 40-year-old mentor, who has been Northwestern's head football coach the last eight years, was named Saturday by Notre Dame as its coach.

In a voice that at times showed signs of trembling, Parseghian said, "The premature announcement by the South Bend Tribune on Saturday precipitated my decision to accept the head coaching position at Notre Dame. The details of the contract have not been fully worked out. We expect to resolve the matter within a day or two."

BEHIND IT ALL: "First they tell me this, then they tell me that. I'm not going to sign no contract till I get what's been promised me. Now Father Joyce tells me they never thought of me till Duffy had such a good year at Michigan State and they wouldn't fire him.

"Everything happened that was wrong this year. I'm sick of these lines that cave in on me. And then Myers goes choke, choke. I can't win on that. They told me they'd give me enough to get linemen that wouldn't fall down in November. Now they're not sure.

"Also, he's worried about my name. Hell, I'm an American. Who've they had playing for them? Foghino, Jeziorski, Bonvechio, Patermostre, Paukstis, Welski, Dilullo, Wengjerski, Zewinski? What is this anyway?"

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 16 (AP)—Nebraska football Coach Bob Devaney arrived in Lincoln Monday and said that during a weekend visit to Miami, Fla., he had not been offered the University of Miami coaching job. Devaney met with University of Miami officials over the weekend.

BEHIND IT ALL: "I've got a ball game to play down there on New Years, and nobody can touch me till then. We talked about it, and they think they'll offer it to me after I beat Auburn unless they give it to one of Gus' assistants or somebody, but that's not too smart because all of them are quitting and running out on the deal because they think they'll all be fired when the new man comes in which may be right, but I just don't know."

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP)—Alabama's star quarterback Joe Namath has been suspended from the team and will not appear in Saturday's Miami game on the Jan. 1 Sugar Bowl.

Coach Paul Bryant said Monday night: "Namath has been suspended from the team for the rest of the season, including the Sugar Bowl, for an infraction of training rules this past weekend."

BEHIND IT ALL: "I love to win and all that but I told that guy he hadn't kicked anybody lately—at least not when the guy was down on the ground and hurt, and I said 'you'd better' and he gave me some back talk and then went out and got potted.

"I mean I don't mind a little horseplay, but two bars and a hotel lobby totaled is just too much, even out of his own scholarship money. He just wouldn't have any left to go to school, and a suspension means this place pays for it, and I don't mind how much this place pays, just so I win. And I'd suspend my own mother if she hadn't kicked anybody lately, anyway."

Back From Road Victories, UNC Faces Georgia Tonight

North Carolina winds up 1963 basketball activity tonight on an intersectional note. Coach Dean Smith's varsity cagers, just back yesterday afternoon from a successful road trip in Louisiana (76-61 over LSU, 109-81 over Tulane), host Georgia tonight in Woollen Gym.

WUNC-TV (Channel 4) will telecast the game starting at 8 p.m.

The visiting Bulldogs, 1-2 on the year, have as their only victory a one-point decision over Clemson at Death Valley. That was just two nights after Clemson beat UNC 66-64 in two overtimes. Georgia dropped other starts to Georgia Tech (73-65) and South Carolina (77-60), a team the Tar Heels defeated, 92-87.

From an 8-18 record last year, Coach Red Lawson has welcomed back a tall front line and two excellent guards.

Billy Rado (6-0) and Jimmy Pitts (6-1) are the backcourt men and the leading Georgia scorers. Rado, who broke in last year after transferring from Manhattan and had a great season (19.0 average), is the sparkplug. He is averaging 18.4 and had the shot in the final seconds that beat Clemson.

Pitts canned 27 in the Clemson game and is scoring at a 14 points-per-game clip.

At the forwards for Georgia are Mack Crenshaw (6-7) and Charles Bagby (6-4). Crenshaw is close to 10 a game while Bagby is averaging around eight. Center Jerry Waller (6-7) is also a 10-point man and is regarded as the Bulldogs' big boardman.

Chief substitutes are Lee Martin and John Mathews. Martin (6-0) is a sophomore coming off a 19.4 frosh season last campaign. He and Mathews (6-3) are both averaging around five a game this year, and either could conceivably move into a starting role.

UNC Coach Dean Smith is expected to start the same five he went with on the Louisiana trip. Billy Cunningham, averaging around 27 with 16 rebounds a game, is the Tar Heel leader.

Guards Mike Cooke and Charlie Shaffer (32 against Tulane) and forwards Ray Respess and rookie Bob Bennett round out the starting five.

FROSH PLAY WINGATE

Coach Ken Rosemond's freshman team will try to get back onto the win trail tonight when it entertains the cagers from Wingate Junior College.

The Tar Babies have been somewhat of a disappointment in their last two games, losing to Clemson and N.C. State.

THE BEARD FAD ON CAMPUS WILL END DEC. 26

Sweethearts and parents will be giving REMINGTON® LEKTRONIC II shavers for Christmas. Shaving will become easier, cleaner and more comfortable than having a beard.

Here's why:

There's the cordless feature. Sealed-in, rechargeable energy cells let you shave without a plug. And what shaves they are! 348 cutting edges of high-carbon steel (sharper and tougher than stainless steel) whisk whiskers off. These edges are honed on an angle. So whiskers get sliced off instead of "ploughed up." 756 whisker-gathering slots in the big shaving head feed whiskers to the cutters faster. And on top of the shaving head: REMINGTON Roller Combs. Adjust to any skin or beard—protect skin; set up whiskers.

Forget to recharge? There's a cord. Plug it in and shave anywhere—so get a REMINGTON LEKTRONIC II for Christmas. After all, you wouldn't want to be the only non-conformist on campus who isn't clean shaven.

1963—THE YEAR the Mets lost the pennant—was also filled with numerous other surprises. Like the Celtics winning and the Redskins losing and Mickey Mantle hurting. Some events did come and go as expected, though, and as usual the same people will get the same honors this time as in times past. There are some honors, however, which seldom are publicized, so today, in the final DTH of the year, we are proud to present these deserving memorials:

The Spalding Golden Glove Award for fielding—Frank Howard (the baseball Frank Howard, that is, and he gets the Iron Glove Award for ditto).

Slenderella Award for svelteness—Jack Nicklaus.

National Mental Health Association Award—Jimmy Piersall.

"Love Thy Neighbor Award" (Brotherhood) Award—Sonny Liston.

Most doing nothing—Walter Alston.

Most times being suspended by coach for practicing what he preaches—Ted Davis

Most money caused to be lost—(tie) Chateaugay and Yankees.

Most baseline calls disputed—Dennis Ralston.

Most disputed calls that were base—Sid Borgia.

Most done for baseball in 1963—Marv Throneberry.

Least done for baseball in 1963—Ford Frick.

In Season Of Cheer, We Give Gifts

AND SO WE come to that time of the year for giving gifts. In a season of good cheer, we cheerily give the following:

To Woollen Gym—many victories . . . in comfort.

To the Gator Bowl Committee—a dead rat.

To Vernon Crook—a replica of the Gator Bowl end zone and, inscribed in the grass, the word "Suckers."

To Jim Hickey—a dictionary.

To Chuck Erickson—a sedative.

To Bob Lacey—Ron VanderKelen.

To Tom Gruehn—four boxcars, a torch and a chihuahua.

To Marvin Allen—two Bolivians and an Argentine.

To Joe Hilton—spectators and a canceled plane ticket to East Lansing, Mich.

To Frank Howard—a pour mouth and an ACC Championship . . . in soccer.

To Bill Murray—an autographed copy of "How and When to Throw in Kicking Tee" and "How and When to Tell Correct Time."

To Dean Smith—an All-America that can shoot fouls.

To Billy Cunningham—some more help and 45 points on Feb. 12.

To Pat Earey—a "world's all-time greatest nice guy" badge, and a Woollen Gym pronunciation guide.

To Sam Barnes—a makeup kit from The Great Bolo.

To Walter Rabb—a "How To" book no repairing outfield fences.

To Jim Speight—a basket.

To Don Skakle—25 degree weather for the Miami match.

To Air Force—an air farce.

And to all, many bananas on the tree and a Very Merry Easter.

Ponce de Leon HQ For The Tar Heels

Headquarters for the Carolina football team, which will play in the Gator Bowl classic at Jacksonville on December 28, has been established at the Hotel Ponce de Leon in St. Augustine. The nation's oldest city is located just 35 miles south of Jacksonville.

"The Ponce," described as one of America's most beautiful hotels, is a unit of the Flagler System, headed by William R. Kenan, Jr., long-time benefactor of the University. Newly remodeled Kenan Stadium at Chapel Hill is named for his parents.

Every extravagance possible was lavished on Hotel Ponce de Leon by its builder, Florida pioneer Henry M. Flagler. Begun in 1885, the palatial structure was designed in the style of the Spanish Renaissance, with sunny courts, sparkling fountains and graceful towers.

It was one of the great dreams of Flagler, who was one of the founders of the Standard Oil Company. He built with poured concrete, brick, terra cotta, and the native coquina. It was one of the first large buildings in in this country to make use of poured concrete.

Flyboy Terry Is Air Force Triple Threat

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The last time Terry Issacson (of the Air Force "Terry's") appeared on national television was, depending where you live, on a CBS Sports Spectacular called "Seven Days to Kickoff." His passing was okay if his Nielson and Trendex were not.

The next time Issacson goes before the country on TV, it will be about seven minutes to kickoff, and UNC is hoping the situation will be reversed. It should be too, because (except for the Boston and Buffalo, N. Y. areas where the AFL Eastern Division playoff is of some interest) the football nation will be tuned on Saturday, Dec. 28 to Jacksonville, Fla. and the Gator Bowl.

One of the main reasons for this has to be Issacson, the glamour boy whose name has been used for the past two weeks on all of CBS' announcements of the Gator attraction.

Trying to figure out what to promote (UNC's record is good, but then it plays in the ACC; Bob Lacey is great, but then he's an end; and Junior Edge is good, but then whoever heard of Junior Edge?), the bowl sponsors and the network men finally decided on Issacson. His credentials are impressive, and they aren't all presented from the football field.

Besides playing a sound 18 holes of golf, Issacson also has been selected to the NCAA All-America wrestling team twice. And, in the fall, he plays football which is what concerns UNC a little more.

The concern is mainly because in 1963 Issacson was:

1. The third leading scorer in the country, (80 points, four behind Memphis State's Dave Casinelli and Princeton's Cosmo Iacavazzi).

2. The fifth leading total fofense man in the country (1,747 yards).

3. The tenth leading rusher in the country (801 yards).

4. The second leading serviceman in the country.

Issacson (5-10, 175) got this way with such things like rushing for 69 yards and passing for 160 more and the game's winning TD in the final two minutes against Nebraska; taking his team 91 yards in less than two minutes for the winning TD against Washington; and scoring four TD's in one game against Colorado State.

The versatile Oak Park, Ill. native also did most of the punting in his team's 7-3 (249 total points) season. He kicked 41 times for an average of 39 yards. Further, his passing was 68 for 147 (.463 per cent) for 963 yards.

To win its first Bowl game in history, UNC must stop Issacson. But there are also others to stop, and the problem starts in the backfield.

There, the leading runner, after Issacson, is a fullback—Larry Tollstam—who may not even start. Tollstam (5-11, 206) has a 4.1 rushing average on 284 yards, but has been replaced in the opening lineup by Steve Amdor (5-10, 185).

Amdor typifies the light but speedy backfield which the Air Force Academy usually turns out. His average is also above four yards (4.7), and the total is 175 yards.

At the halfbacks, Coach Ben Martin starts Dick Czarnota, the leading pass-catcher in the backfield, and Paul Wargo. Czarnota (6-1, 205), besides having caught 11 passes for 164 yards, has accumulated 267 yards running for a 4.5 average. He is called the slotback in the Air Force offense, and is backed up by John Lorber (6-0, 195), a 3.6-average man.

Wargo (5-10, 187) moved into a starting position this year as a sophomore and is considered the Falcons' fastest runner. He, like Czarnota, has scored four touchdowns, the most important one coming on a 12-yard pass from Issacson to win the Colorad game and a bowl invitation.

Wargo's relief help comes from Ken Jaggers (5-9, 160), another sophomore, and Dick Ritchie (5-10, 185). Jaggers has carried 22 times this year for 166 yards and a 7.5 average.

Up front, the Falcons are very light, but very, very fast. And their quickness hurts you especially when Issacson lines up as the "gun" in the shotgun offense.

At center and, more impressively, linebacker is Joe Rodwell (6-3, 208), an Associated Press third-team All-America. He is the number one obstacle in the Academy's 6-2-3 defensive set-up.

At the guards are Wendell Harkleroad (6-0, 195), on the left, and Tom Gorges (6-0, 212) on the right. Both are juniors, Gorges being a converted tackle. Harkleroad is considered the best offensive blocker on the team.

Air Force's heaviest lineman, Gil Achter (6-1, 218), is at left tackle while the right tackle is Jim Sears (6-3, 216). The latter improved his defensive work this year and moved into a starting spot from his third-team place of last spring.

The ends are, or at least have been, John Puster (6-3, 200) on the right side and Ray Lennon (6-0, 185) on the left. However, Issacson's favorite pass target all season has been Fritz Greenlee (6-3, 210).

Greenlee caught 15 passes for 323 yards and three touchdowns in 1963. Halfback Czarnota was the second-best receiver, and another end who doesn't start, soph Jim Greth (6-2, 196) the third. Greth caught 11 for 154 yards.

Perhaps the most important ingredient in the Birdmen's success this year, after Issacson, has been placekicker Bart Holaday. He set an Air Force record this season with seven field goals, three of which provided the victory margins over Nebraska, Washington and the big one, Colorado. Holoday also kicked 23 of 25 extra points.

Brunch for US

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — The Jacksonville alumni association of the University of North Carolina has issued a special invitation to all students and faculty members to a catered brunch at the Gator Bowl Coliseum at 11:00 a.m. the morning of Dec. 28.

Student Body President Mike Lawler yesterday urged all parties from North Carolina to take advantage of the opportunity to meet the alumni in Jacksonville.

"The association there is doing a fine job to make all of us welcome in Florida," Lawler said.

Amidst all the excitement of a Gator Bowl bid was forgotten the futile idiocy of the DTH Horrorscope which ended the season several weeks ago in its customary inept fashion. Furry Curry Kirkpatrick, who seems to pick games almost as well as he eats bananas, came out tops at 133-54 for a .711 percentage. Ron Logan was second with 126-61; Mat Friedman next with 124-63; and John Montague and Al Kaplan tied for fourth at 123-64.

Speaking of fourth, it was just that week when the panel's pathetic members succeeded in looking particularly ridiculous. It was then, if you remember, that guest picker Billy Cunningham topped all the EXPERTS by compiling an 11-5 mark for .688. Sounds more like his free-throw percentage.

On the whole, however, Police Chief Beaumont, Kitty Carmichael and the rest of the victimized Horrorscope guests finished with a combined mark of 97-90 proving, perhaps, that there are people who know less than the DTH sports staff members.

Looking back, everyone concerned feels that the Horrorscope accomplished just what it set out to do — nothing. Some people at the DTH feel, however, that the weekly farce has to be considered an unqualified success since no one wrote in any nasty letters about the thing. As a matter of fact, no one said anything about it, probably because no one ever wasted his time reading it.

UNC Goes Bowling In That Florida Sun

By JOHN MONTAGUE

John Hammett said it as early as last September.

"We'll go 10-1 this year and one of those wins will come in a bowl game."

Those who heard the senior end make this forecast during late summer drills appreciated his optimism, but shook their heads over the accuracy of such a prediction.

If you were one of those "Doubting Thomases" you can still shake your head today. You can say "I told you so," because the Tar Heels can't possibly go 10-1 this season—they've already lost two games. But you'll have a hard time making yourself heard above the din. Hammett is crowing and the Tar Heels are going—to a bowl game.

On December 28, Lindsay Nelson will fling out a "hearty good afternoon" to football fans all across the nation as CBS-TV joins with the University of North Carolina and the United States Air Force Academy in bringing you the 19th Annual Gator Bowl Classic from Jacksonville, Fla.

If you are sitting in the 50,000 seat bowl, you will forget about your end zone vantage point and stand up and cheer as the Tar Heels trot onto the field for their pre-game warm-ups. If you are lounging in front of a TV set, you will sit up and take a close look. There will be some familiar faces.

There in living black and white will be Junior Edge, who could be the best quarterback in UNC history. Junior is slightly bald and very good, especially when he's throwing passes to Bob Lacey. Bob, a first team All-America, is being chased by the Minnesota Vikings and the New York Jets. All season long he has been chased, usually by defensive backs after grabbing a pass from Edge.

This fall saw both Edge and Lacey breaking records right and left. Edge has thrown more passes (357) and completed more (193) than any other player in Carolina history. Lacey has caught more passes (102) and has gained more yards (1362) on passes than any other player in ACC history.

And these are not abstract accomplishments. The Edge-to-Lacey pass is still the heart of the Carolina offense.

"It's what we look to when we're in trouble," says ACC Coach of the Year Jim Hickey, who this year brought his team through the school's finest season since 1948.

Though the label reads "Edge-to Lacey" the ingredients of this wonderful remedy for Carolina's offensive stalls are many. There is the hard blocking of fullback Eddie Kesler and the great protection thrown up by the interior linemen — fellows like Cole Kortner (234) and Vic Esposito (215), Jerry Cabe (195) and Richy Zarro (188), Chris Hanburger (195) and Jim Alderman (218).

And there is Ken Willard, diving up the middle on a fake run, pulling the defenses into the middle and off Lacey and off Hammett, who is pretty good substitute when Lacey can't get into the open.

Sometimes Willard actually carries the ball himself. This happened 167 times this year and he gained 648 yards and one ACC rushing crown as a result. And every yard he picked up added to his value as a decoy on the bread-and-butter pass.

When one mentions the word "decoy," it brings to mind not only Willard, but also Ronnie Jackson, the forgotten man on the Tar Heel starting eleven. Hickey likes to have his little wingback streak down the field on most plays, taking at least one safety with him. At least three times this fall the safety didn't make it — and Jackson got three TD grabs.

Still left unmentioned is the second team and this could be the deciding factor in the Gator Bowl. With the likes of Gary Black, Ron Tuthill, Frank Bowman, Frank Gallagher, Joe Robinson, Gene Sigmon, John Hill and others waiting for reserve duty, the Tar Heels rate the edge over the Air Force in the depth department.

Of course it may all boil down to a kick—meaning placement man Max "42-Yard" Chapman and/or punter Bill Edwards. Nothing could be finer than a well-placed field goal by Chapman, over the crossbar and into the South Stands. Then we'd have the game ball to keep us company in the end zone.

Things We Wanted To Write About Before Christmas, But Time . . .

The University of Algiers had its library burned out by OAS terrorists in 1962 and desperately needs any text or reference books they can get. NSA, in cooperation with the World University Service, is heading up the U.S. drive. Books in French and Arabic are especially needed, but all books would be appreciated. Pick-up points are located at Y-Court and Graham Memorial. Give a book for Christmas.

* * *

One last word on the Gag Law. (That is, one last word before Christmas.) All three contenders for the Democratic Gubernatorial nomination, Lake, Preyer and Moore, have come out in favor of the law, but none have endorsed it absolutely. Their endorsements run from light-medium grey to dark-medium grey with as little explanation of their real feelings as possible. This maneuver is described as a reasoned, temperate statement, but is actually just reasoned, temperate evasion. An interesting sidelight is Senate President Clarence Stone's statement that "I have not noticed any professor leading any (civil rights) demonstrations in Raleigh since we passed House Bill 1395." Apparently equal rights is just a communist propaganda ploy.

* * *

For a change of pace it is nice to be able to applaud Rep. Harold Cooley. He was the only member of the North Carolina congressional delegation to vote for passage of the foreign aid program. Taking the other road is an act of political courage and consistency, but Rep. Cooley has demonstrated these characteristics before. He was the only member of the state congressional delegation who refused to sign the insidious "Southern Manifesto" in 1956, and as for consistency, he has voted for foreign aid ever since the Marshall Plan.

* * *

It must be nice for the Mayor and Board of Aldermen to go home every night to a warm house while the underpaid Police Department has to pay the price for their default. On the whole, the local police have done an excellent job in coping with the new rash of demonstrations, but a few, a very few, incidents belong more to Birmingham than Chapel Hill. We are not sure what it will take, but if demonstrations will get the city fathers off their butts, then go to it.

* * *

We notice that the Raleigh Chamber of Commerce has refused to take a stand on the "little federal" amendment. The Raleigh News and Observer can't understand why the chamber refuses to speak out to protect the city's interests, but possibly the chamber, like Jesse Helms, would hate to see areas with a high concentration of minority groups (i.e., Negroes) get equal representation in the state legislature. That's so far out it's like cutting off your face to spite your nose.

* * *

Once more: During the vacation register to vote and apply for an absentee ballot. Also, take a look at the wreck in Y-Court before you start home.

Roy Cole . . . Principled Or Prejudiced?

The position of Town Solicitor Roy Cole in refusing to accede to requests that charges against 21 demonstrators arrested last summer be suspended is not as damning as it may seem.

Cole apparently was not asked in advance if he would go along with an agreement between Chief Blake, the Committee for Open Business and the chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Human Relations, requesting that charges against the 21 demonstrators be suspended on condition that they cease demonstrations.

Cole also was under no obligation to go along with a request from Joe Augustine, executive secretary of the Merchants Association, who brought the charges, that they be dropped.

Thus the charge from UNC graduate student James W. Gardner, Jr., one of the 21 demonstrators arrested, that Cole acted single-handedly in prosecuting the demonstrations is true, but must be placed in context.

Although Cole refused to discuss Gardner's charge, Joe Augustine quoted Cole as saying he would not drop the charges because he "would not let the judicial system become a whipping post for those who wanted to break the law.

"He said he would not let mockery be made of the courts," said Augustine of Cole.

All of this makes Cole seem like a good, solid public official who refuses to be influenced by the whims of community opinion.

And maybe he is just that.

But the fact that he was instrumental in disbanding a local Little League a year and a half ago because a Negro youth refused to drop out of it leaves us wondering.

We Can't – But If We Could . . .

Like most other agencies of Student Government, The Daily Tar Heel is obligated to get $2 value for every $1 spent, in order to keep expenses—and therefore student fees—as low as possible. Thus we are unable to provide our hard-working staff with Christmas bonuses, though they are richly-deserved.

However, were it otherwise, our list would look like this:

Art Pearce—windscreen for his motorcycle, to keep the bugs off his teeth.

Wayne King—a diploma.

Fred Seely—honorary NAACP membership card.

Pete Harkness—paperback edition of "Memoirs of Casanova."

Joel Bulkley—a job.

Jim Wallace — thirteen cheesecake models.

Mickey Blackwell—two cartons of Metrecal and a talking dictionary.

Bob Samsot—a new name.

Curry Kirkpatrick—Diane Hile, three advertising departments and a couple of readers who like his column (imported—Bananaville).

Hugh Stevens—free copies of all of Mike Lawler's speeches.

Pete Wales—fourteen sorority girls.
Diane Hile—a muzzle.

Steve Dennis — a bound edition of "200 Translator's Introductions to Classic Works."

Mat Friedman—a B in Comparative Anatomy.

Sue Simonds—Gary Blanchard, David Ethridge.

Jim Neal—complete 1957 WUNC-TV program schedule.

John Montague — Chuck Erickson's public relations staff.

Linda Riggs—a raise.

Shirley Travis—thirty-seven Campus Calendars.

Al Kaplan—a new Sports Editor.

John Greenbacker—sixteen scoops.

And to Kerry Sipe, incapacitated with an eye ailment, best wishes for a speedy recovery.

Editors Praised, Sports Hit Hard

Thanks

Editors, The Tar Heel,

This is in regard to the article which appeared on the sports page of the DAILY TAR HEEL on December 13, 1963. It seems to me that the title of the article went out of limits in making specific note that Karl Sweetan had not been chosen the college back of the year. After reading this apparently malicious swipe at a fine boy and fine football player, I was further surprised to see that its composer failed to elaborate or explain his "flowering up" of an announcement that most everyone was aware of sometime earlier. I believe that this person has not only hurt and degraded himself, but also has to a great extent tarnished the fine tradition of the University and its paper.

If I have misunderstood the writer of the article's headline, I am truly sorry. If I have been correct in the conclusion which I have drawn from the article, however, I believe it imperative that immediate steps be taken to right this wrong. I would suggest that this be done in one of three ways:

1) Along with Mr. Sweetan's name should be listed every other college back who was not chosen as the back of the year.

2) Mr. Sweetan and the Wake Forest Athletic Office be sent an apology by your office and the person specifically responsible for the article. Also that the Daily Tar Heel carry a public apology to Mr. Sweetan.

3) The writer of the article explain the rationale behind it to Mr. Sweetan and the readers of the Daily Tar Heel.

Let me say that I enjoy reading your (our) paper very much, and I congratulate you on doing a very good job — the great majority of the time.

The Fourth Estate

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The Fourth Estate has an excellent opportunity (and, perhaps, a responsibility) to offer leadership in correcting a distortion, i.e., the distorted image of certain individuals on the basis of physical appearance.

All people are members of the human race. Logically, it would seem that this is the paramount factor, i.e., that an individual should be viewed, FIRST, as a human being, a male or female, child or adult. Then, such factors as responsible citizenship, occupation, nativity, cultural group, religious denomination, personality characteristics, and the like, may or may not have relevance in the reporting of news.

To illustrate by a hypothetical al "Negro Man Robs Bank." I cannot recall ever seeing that in a newspaper. However, this part is not hypothetical: "Negro Man Man Robs Bank." Or, consider that a responsible citizen, male, physician by occupation, American by birth, Protestant by religion, and of the Negro culture, is frequently identified thusly." "Negro Physician to Head Center." A true example may clarify the point: a newsman reporting the news on the radio, recently, stated: "A Negro bus" (referring to an accident). What the devil is a Negro bus?

For years, Negro was not capitalized in some newspapers and books. Although this practice has been corrected, as a teacher of graduate students I still see these errors on occasion—a reflection, probably, of their cultural heritage. May I suggest that the Fourth Estate in Chapel Hill provide the scintilla, and light the path toward a more accurate perception of one's fellowman, and identify individuals by name, age, address — instead of perpetuating a part of the past that deserves a long over-due requiem.

Sincerely,
Jim Morrissey

Brickbats

Editors, The Tar Heel:

The Indianapolis Times, in a sports page article concerning the Indiana-U. North Carolina basketball game, paid the fans a compliment. It said that the sportsmanship on the part of the fans were excellent. That even after one of the VanAnsdales had almost killed Billy Cunningham, the fans still gave the brother a round of applause when he fouled out.

The writer did not mention, however, that the game was played on a neutral court. He didn't have to listen to the loud mouth of our head cheerleader, nor the boos in Woollen Gym. Neither did he hear nor see the child-like behavior of our backcourt men as a foul is called, nor did he see an All-American slam the ball on the floor and then throw it off the end of the court. I hope these things happen only at home where the gym is too small to accommodate visiting writers.

Not only is our team a violator of good sportsmanship, but what about the so-called sports writer Curry Kirkpatrick? He has slandered the VanAnsdales. These boys happen to be two of the finest gentlemen, scholars, and all-round athletes you would ever hope to meet. Their high school record shows this as well as their college record. Neither would intentionally hurt another player as he has suggested.

Another example of his unsportsmanlike conduct is found in his writings about the Kentucky game. How is it possible to blame the referees when a team loses by 20 points? If, as he suggests from the Indiana game, North Carolina is not a one-man team, why did he get so upset when one man fouled out? Basketball is described as a team game, not an individual sport.

Why not practice a little of that sportsmanship which people in other parts of the country think we have?

Visiting Policy?

Editor, The Tar Heel:

There seems to be some ambiguity in the policy of the Chapel Hill Police Department concerning visiting hours for prisoners. Because the jail now contains a number of demonstrators who have acquaintances wishing to visit them, I think the visiting hours for these prisoners should be set and remain set.

To further explain these wavering hours, visitors were allowed to stay from about 2:30 p.m. to 3:00 p.m. on Monday, 16 December. On Tuesday, 17 December, the three visitors who were at the jail at 2:30 p.m. were allowed to see the demonstrators for approximately 5 minutes, at which time the cells were once again locked. Three more people had then just come to the Police Department to visit, and were told that visiting hours were over. This was at (approximately) 2:35 p.m.

Having called the Police Department to try to clarify this unpredictable policy, I was told that there are NO visiting hours for prisoners. After explaining to the officer that I, myself, had visited two days, I was told that members of the Police Department had decided there could be no visitors as there are not enough officers available to escort people down to the jail.

In order to eliminate more confusion at the Police Department, I would suggest that they make known to the public the hours prisoners are allow to have visitors. It seems that this should be one of the set policies of any Police Department, regardless of who is imprisoned.

Maybe So

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In the December 9th edition of the Durham Morning Herald, Ann Landers had a column on the "Faults of Campus Men." As a co-ed on the UNC campus, it proved very interesting to me, as I'm sure it did to the other co-eds. For the men's sake, I think it would be worth including it in the Daily Tar Heel. It reads as follows:

"Dear Ann Landers: Recently the girls in our college were polled. The question asked was this: 'What do you dislike most about the men on this campus?'

"The results revealed that the worst thing a fellow can say when he asks for a date is this: 'Are you doing anything Saturday night?' No girl wants to admit she doesn't have a date. Some girls actually say, 'Yes, I'm busy,' when they aren't doing a darned thing.

"The second most creepy guy on campus is the one who asks: 'What would you like to do on Friday evening?' The boy who calls a girl for a date should have some sort of entertainment in mind. It's unfair to put the girl in the awkward position of suggesting a movie or a play or a dance because the fellow may not have the money or transportation for such an evening.

"The girls unanimously agreed that the biggest drip of all is the guy who stands at the door and says, 'May I kiss you?' It's not too bad if the girl doesn't want to be kissed—all she has to say is 'NO.' But waiting for a kiss after saying, 'Yes, you may,' is gruesome. The fellow who hasn't confidence enough to risk a rebuff is just as well off to forget it.—Betty Coed."

I believe the girls on campus would appreciate it very much if this letter could be printed in the Daily Tar Heel.

Maybe the men on campus have some comments of their own:

Ain't It True?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Why do all the people in Chapel Hill think of the student as a patsy? Everyone is out to get the student. For example, today I went to a certain dry cleaning establishment in Eastgate to pick up my laundry which came to a total of $1.34. I paid for this with a five dollar bill. I received $.66 change. Being absent-minded I accepted this and walked out to my car. Realizing that I had been short-changed, I went back to the store and told them, in a nice way, about the situation. Since I had been patronizing this store for 2½ years and not 5 minutes had elapsed I naturally thought that the matter would be settled promptly. The clerk realizing that I was a student and a patsy saw the chance to take the advantage of another student. I did not get my three dollars change, but was told that I would have to wait until the cash register was checked after work. It sure made me feel good to know that the store trusted me after two and a half years of faithful patronage, during which time I also brought my roommate's laundry to them.

Another example of the student being a patsy can be seen in approximately 7,000 other cases. Along with other students, I hurried to the ticket office the first day to get my Gator Bowl tickets because we were told the first people got the "best seats." The athletic office knew that the seats were in the end zone, but they knew that the students are, always have been, and probably always will be patsys. When did the students find out that they had been made the patsys again, when it was too late. It was after we had already bought and paid for our tickets and had made arrangements to go to Jacksonville. Of course the poor, unsuspecting students were taken once again. Patsy as always! That's us! Maybe when I get home I can find out about the game or maybe even see some films of it on television.

Yippee!

Newsman Vs. Scientist: Rebuttal

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Last Saturday, THE DAILY TAR HEEL printed a guest editorial by Mr. Pete Ivey, in which the Director of the University News Bureau takes scientists to task for being difficult in their realtions with the press. Mr. Ivey suggests that contemporary scientists are excessively circumspect and overcautious when they speak to the general public and that they make the life of the news reporter hard by their constitutional inability to make simple, straightforward, and printable assertions instead of complicated statements, circumscribed by reservations and qualifications.

Mr. Ivey complains that today's scientists do not announce their discoveries with the flamboyant "Eureka" attributed to Archimedes when he found the law governing the buoyant force impelling a body immersed in a fluid.

There are many reasons for the scientists' attitude which so puzzles Mr. Ivey. The enormously increased complexity of science itself, rather than the apparent unwillingness of the scientists to stand up and be counted, is largely to be blamed for the communication barriers not only between the scientists and the general public but between scientists themselves as well. Scientists do have a responsibility to make an effort to surmount this barrier and to let the educated layman participate, as much as possible, in the intellectual and cultural adventure in which they are engaged and which can be carried on only as long as the community at large will support it.

Nothing is gained, however, if the message of science reaches the public garbled by the news media in the mistaken belief that heightened readability is achieved by lowered accuracy.

Mr. Ivey's editorial provides an example: Archimedes, he says, "conceived the idea that a body displaces an amount of water equal to its own bulk." Of course, it does, but what Archimedes actually discovered was that the force which buoys up a body is equal to the weight of the fluid which it displaces. It is disconcerting that over 2000 years later, a journalist, charmed by a, quite possibly apocryphal, anecdote about Archimedes' visit to the bathhouse, is unable to put into words the true findings of the Greek scholar.

No wonder, then, that scientists are on their guard when they communicate with newsmen. Many would like to get their stories across to the general public but are frustrated in this endeavor by handicaps not of their own making.

Otelia Christmas

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I dropped in to hear one of my favorite ministers preach during this Christmas Season. He was calling attention to the tendency of our times to commercialize Christmas—to forget the true meaning of Christmas. Up to a point, I think he may be right. But if we celebrate this religious festival by going to church on Christmas Day, and if our children celebrate the first Christmas in story and song and drama, then I am all for the tinsel, the gift-giving, and the gathering together of friends before the festive board and the Open-house where eggnog and good cheer are served to those who drop in. For joy in the heart must have a two-fold expression —upward to God, and outward towards our fellow man, and the first is impossible without the second.

So as we joyously celebrate the birth of Christ, may He be born anew in our hearts on this and every Christmas Day, expressed by love and gift-giving to our fellow-man.

This is one time of the year that you don't have to resort to the Twist to "let yourself go!" What a bright spot in the Christmas Season, coming as it does to make people forget the cold short December days and long winter nights. If there was no Christmas celebration, people would soon invent another celebration, so let's hold to Christmas, the best of all seasons for celebrating!

Experimenter Finds Calcutta Strange Place

(Editor's Note: This is the fifth in a series of articles from a UNC student visiting India in the Experiment in International Living program.)

By MARGARET RHYMES

CALCUTTA — On leaving Calcutta, one feels he has seen a good part of India.

But the foreigner has to be wary of generalizations after only one month in this city of extremes.

Someone has said that a fool in India sees two sides to every question, but a wise man sees half a dozen. And about the safest statement that can be made about this country is that anything that is said about it is true —somewhere.

It's an almost impossible nation to characterize—much more like a continent than a country.

Life has been somewhat hectic in Calcutta for the 12 American Experimenters. There have been receptions to attend, factories to tour, colleges to visit, films to see and talks to make.

There have been meetings with politicians and housewives, American ex-patriates and European visitors, college students and priests, businessmen and children.

And all this while trying to fit smoothly into the normal daily pattern of an Indian family.

While most Experimenters have tried to avoid intra-group contacts, a few all-American functions were necessary.

One such occasion was an hour-long audience with the Governess of West Bengal, one of India's two female governors.

She's affectionately called "the beast" by her constituents, but while no raving beauty, she proved to be quite the able politician and tactful diplomat, considering the questions that were fired at her.

Like most politicians we've met, she seemed overcome by, yet hopeful about, the resettlement of refugees and the slow road to economic self-sufficiency.

This question-and-answer situation was reversed during our many visits to colleges and universities. The questions came hard and fast and these sessions were both exhaustive and exhausting for Americans, suddenly in a minority position.

Stimulating also were discussions with Americans attached to the U. S. Embassy or U. S. Information Agency. However, we were somewhat dismayed to find personifications of the Ugly American among the personnel—those who were eager for another American's ears to complain about the poor education their children were getting or the modern "necessities" that they missed back in the States.

It is these people who alienate the Indian so quickly, throwing him into an uncomfortable, defensive and apologetic role.

For the American abroad representing a country of wealth and technological superiority, it is a difficult tightrope to walk between a paternal condescension and an inoffensive benevolency with respect for the individual.

This tightrope is especially hard to balance when one is being bombarded with sometimes valid questions and statements like:

Thailand is just a U. S. protectorate.

Why doesn't America leave Cuba alone?

How can a democratic nation openly try to engineer a coup in South Viet Nam, what business is it of theirs?

Why after the test-ban agreement did the U. S. immediately set off the first underground explosion?

And why, after almost two hundred years of independence, has America not given freedom to all her citizens?

Civil rights, naturally, has been the main field for questions, especially since U. S. racial news is splashed across the pages of leading Asian papers. One distasteful example was the story of a white man trying to force a live snake down a Negro's throat. This article made front-page center in Delhi's major paper.

Unfortunately, outside of Alabama, most reports of racial troubles that reach print have been from High Point, N. C.

The march on Washington made a tremendous impact on these people, who automatically align themselves with the cause of the darker, oppressed peoples of the world struggling for a long over-due freedom.

But, aside from political discussions, Calcutta has much to offer the visitor: The Victoria Memorial, beautiful gardens, museums and temples, as well as good restaurants, shopping bazaars and fashionable night clubs.

Some of our activities were in tourist realm, such as the visits to home industries and handicraft centers, the famous Bata show factory, one of the country's largest private industries.

This was an auspicious time for weddings, so our schedule was filled with a wide variety—from the Punjabi marriage where the bridegroom arrives on a horse, to the Hindu ceremony which stretches out to a three-day affair.

Other evenings we took in dance dramas, Bengali plays and Hindu films. In the latter field, the Indians are the world's second largest produces—in footage. Most film are a conglomeration of melodrama, comedy, music and tragedy. They feel that something of everything must be included to appeal to the masses.

Most of the written and spoken arts in India have a difficult time in attracting any international notice. The major problem is the 275 languages and dialects in the country, which prevents almost any writer or dramatist from winning even nation-wide acclaim.

These 21 days in Calcutta, the Americans have seen a good number of official functions and tours, formal meetings and talks, good entertainment and public relations work.

But, now, the group has become quite restless and quite ready to dig into the "real India" outside the city compound.

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Thirty-two persons, including ten UNC students, seven from Duke, and one each from N.C. State and North Carolina College, were arrested here Tuesday night in the latest of a current wave of sit-in demonstrations.

Tuesday night's protest took place at Clarence's Bar and Grill on West Franklin Street. It was the fifth and largest sit-in since the latest series began last Friday.

The march and subsequent sit-in at Clarence's climaxed a mass meeting at St. Joseph's AME church. From the church, the 32 walked directly to the grill.

To date, a total of 68 persons have been arrested. Excepting the four arrested Friday night, all have been charged with trespassing and resisting arrest.

BULLETIN

Some 24 persons, including juveniles, were arrested in sit-in demonstrations here last night, bringing the six-day total to 92 arrests.

Police arrested 18 persons at the Tar Heel Sandwich Shop and six others at Brady's Restaurant. The 15 Negroes and nine whites were charged with trespassing and resisting arrest.

The current sit-ins are the first demonstrations of their kind to be held in Chapel Hill since late this summer when 21 persons were arrested for sitting-in at the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association.

Among those arrested Tuesday and held on $175 bond were UNC student Kellis Parker, 21.

Others arrested included Henry Elkins, 26, chaplain at North Carolina College and Lavort H. Taylor, 23, a field secretary for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Other UNC students involved were Miss Stephanie Wilber, 20, Miss Shirley Pendergraft, 18, Richard Creel, 22, John Shirley, 20, Jan Jorgenson, 19. Stephen Hawthorne, 18, and Gilbert File, 25.

Students from Duke who were arrested were Harry Boyte, 18, Thomas Gibbons, 19, James Richardson, 18, Miss Dorothy McQuown, 21, Miss Florence Ryan, 21, Miss Diana Jones, 21, and Miss Andy Moursand, 19.

John K. Farnum, 18, a N. C. State student and Jerdine Alston, 19, a North Carolina College student were arrested.

As they were leaving the police station, they said, "Don't you worry, we'll be back."

A group of people gathered outside the station, singing their support to those who had been arrested.

Police Department Tries To Remain Neutral In Sit-Ins

By PETER HARKNESS

Hauling around demonstrators is hard on the back, and plenty of backs are sore at the Chapel Hill Police Department.

Since Friday there have been five sit-ins and 68 arrests. Each demonstrator must be carried from his seat in the restaurant and bodily placed in waiting patrol cars. It isn't easy, as any officer wil ltell you.

The protesters "go limp," which makes it difficult since a human body is both heavy and unwieldy. After five nights it gets tiresome, but Chapel Hill Police have become noted for their patience.

All through the summer months, demonstrations, picketing, and sit-ins forced Chief William Blake to call his men in for overtime duty.

Police logged over 3000 hours of overtime in 13 weeks this summer and as one officer put it, "We figure that we got about nines cents an hour for all that time."

Since the new wave of sit-ins began Friday, more overtime hours are being added. Off-duty officers are being asked to remain on a stand-by basis at home.

When asked about The Daily Tar Heel front-page picture showing an officer dragging a white girl from Brady's Restaurant, Chief Blake said, "I got out there a little late and didn't see it happen. But we are trying to see that there are two policemen for every demonstrator when carrying them out."

Feeding the demonstrators in prison has become a problem. In the past, Leo's Restaurant, one of the 26 in Chapel Hill that is still segregated, has provided the food for prisoners. However, the protesters refused to eat food from a segregated establishment and the police had to look elsewhere.

Chief Blake explained that no other restaurant would take the orders since there was no chance for profit. However, since the demonstrators have refused the food from Leo's, other arrangements have been made and prisoners are receiving hot food aside from fresh fruit and candy.

Despite their different roles in the civil rights movement, police and demonstrators are on good terms. The officers understand why it is happening and the protestors understand why the police must carry them to jail.

It is a strange relationship, yet most tempers remain well under control. Those in the movement are strictly non-violent and the police have acted responsible.

Chief Blake, who has been widely commended for his fairness, commented, "We try our best to stay neutral."

Debate Team Whips Duke

The UNC Debate Team defeated Duke University's team for the second time this season last Saturday.

Debate Team President Haywood Clayton said the 2-0 record over Duke is significant since at both encounters the teams were arguing the same question and UNC successfully defended both sides.

Clayton, Bob Powell, and George Carson composed the winning teams.

UNC scored a 5-3 record by defeating such teams as Illinois, Army, and Brooklyn.

The team's total score this season is 15-7.

Clayton said Carolina will participate in the Atlantic Coast Conference Debate Tournament the first week after school starts in January.

"If we win the tournament," Clayton said, "we have an excellent chance of participating in a national contest."

Praising the ability of this year's team, Clayton was particularly optimistic about his Freshmen.

"We have the best Freshman team in the Atlantic Coast Conference," he said.

The team is presently at work on a TV series which will be aired in February. Exact details are as yet incomplete.

MRC Gets Mad

The Men's Residence Council will place a representative on every floor of every hall next semester, according to the reapportionment resolution passed by the MRC last Wednesday.

The new plan, the first reapportionment since 1957, will have each MRC representative elected by the men living on the floor he represents.

The total membership of the MRC will be increased by 20 to 84.

In Craige and Ehringhaus there will be two representatives on each floor. There is only one per floor now.

Elections for the new representatives will not take place until February according to MRC President Gerry Goode.

April In Paris For UNC Students

By PETE RANGE

For the first time in history the University will conduct a junior year abroad program for qualified students this fall.

Sterling Stoudemire, professor and chairman of the Department of Romance Languages, announced the program on Monday.

Dr. R. L. Frautschi, Associate Professor of the Department, will direct the first group of nearly 30 students spending their junior year at the University of Lyon.

Frautschi is currently in France negotiating with the University of Lyon officials.

Although Consolicated University students may consider the program, it will be made available to students in public and private institutions throughout the South.

Requirements for the program are at least a B-minus average, at least five semesters of French and letters of recommendation from members of the faculty.

The students participating will arrive in Lyon five weeks before the start of the fall term for a period of extensive language review.

When the term begins in late October, the student will choose a program of study after consultation with a UNC advisor.

Courses in the French language, literature and civilization will be available for study, as well as lectures in European history, political science, sociology, and other fields.

UNC students will be able to earn 30 credits and quality points by the end of the academic year.

Students will be housed in dormitories or in private residences. Independent or group vacation travel will be available during the Christmas and spring vacations.

In addition to the program in Lyon, the Department of Romance Languages is also working on two programs with universities in Spanish speaking countries. Universities being considered are the University of the Americas (formerly Mexico City College) in Mexico City and the University of Madrid in Madrid, Spain.

Men's Council Hears 3 Cases

A freshman turned himself in for cheating on a take-home quiz and was sentenced to one semester probation in Men's Council trials Tuesday night.

In other cases three upperclassmen were suspended for one semester for cheating and a freshman received an indefinite suspension for stealing.

In the first case, the student received help from a friend on his take-home quiz. The friend did not realize that the student was taking a quiz.

Later the student realized that he had been cheating and turned himself in to his teacher without turning in the quiz. The friend had not asked him to turn himself in.

Another freshman stole $42 from a dormitory room and was caught by another student. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to indefinite suspension.

Under this sentence the student will have to apply to the Council to be reinstated and show cause for his reinstatement. The usual period for this sentence is one semester if the student appears to have learned from his punishment.

The three upperclassmen suspended for one semester were caught looking on each other's paper in a quiz. Another student saw them and reported the incident to the teacher who turned the case over to Dean of Men William G. Long.

The men pleaded guilty to the charge. A fourth student, whose paper one of the three had copied originally, was not charged.

Quiet Hours Offense Gets Man Probation

A student charged with repeated Quiet Hour violations and squirting another student with a bottle of mouthwash pleaded guilty in Tuesday night's MRC Court session. The Court accepted the plea and sentenced the student to Dormitory Probation in effect till June 1, 1964 and recommended a letter be sent informing his parents of his misconduct.

Roll Up The Sidewalks? Not In Chapel Hill!

Contrary to popular belief, Chapel Hill will not close down December 20 when students leave on vacation.

Many businesses and restaurants will continue their regular hours, although some will be closed throughout the vacation period.

On campus, the Louis R. Wilson Library will observe the following schedule:

Dec. 20—7:45-5 p.m.
21—9-5 p.m.
22—losed
23-26—Closed
27—9-5
28—9-1
22—Closed
30—9-5
31—9-5

Jan. 1—Closed
2—9-5
3—9-5
4—9-1
5—Closed
6—Resume regular schedule.

Graham Memorial will close at 12 midnight Friday and will reopen Sunday, January 5 at 11 a.m.

Lenoir Dining Hall will close after lunch on Friday. The Pine Room will open Sunday night, January 5, and the entire dining hall will resume regular schedule on January 6.

The Intimate Book Shop will close at 6 p.m. Christmas Eve and will reopen at 10 a.m. January 3. Kemp's will run a regular 9-9 schedule except Christmas Day and the day following.

The Carolina Theater will be open according to its regular schedule except for a 3 p.m. opening on Christmas Day.

The Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association will close on December 25-26, and has recommended that Chapel Hill merchants observe the holiday in like manner. Stores will remain open for regular hours, including Christmas Eve, when they will close at 5:30 p.m.

As for the restaurants, the Carolina Inn Cafeteria will remain open throughout the vacation except for Christmas night.

Both the Ranch House and the Rathskeller will be closed on Christmas Day and New Year's Day. The Rathskeller does not open on Sundays, but the Ranch House will maintain its schedule during the holidays although it will serve no buffet suppers.

The Village Cafeteria will close at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, Dec. 24, and will reopen December 30 on its regular schedule. The N. C. Cafeteria will close at noon on Friday and will reopen for lunch on Jan. 6.

The Carolina Coffee Shop will close at 3 p.m. Sunday and will reopen on Friday, December 27. La Pizza will be closed from Christmas Eve until Jan. 2, when its regular schedule will be resumed.

The Zoom - Zoom will be open through Dec. 22, then will be closed until Jan. 5. The Goody Shop will close Saturday and remain closed throughout the holidays.

The Dairy Bar will close Dec. 23 and reopen January 4. After lunchtime Friday, Harry's Grill will be closed until breakfast, January 5.

The Monogram Club dining room will close after lunch on Friday and reopen for breakfast, January 6.

The Porthole will be open through December 23, will close Dec. 24-26 and reopen Friday, Dec. 27. At 4 p.m. on Christmas Eve, the Oh-Boy will close and will reopen at 4 p.m. Christmas Day.

Neely Gains Presidency Of Di-Phi

Charles Neely, a junior from Butler, N. J., was elected President of the Di-Phi Senate in a close vote Tuesday night.

Neely defeated Daniel Kern by a vote of 12-11 on the fourth ballot. Kern was later elected Parlimentarian.

Others to gain posts were Les Bailey, President Pro Tem; Will Bullard, Critic; Rick Edwards, Treasurer; Walt Gunster, Sergeant-at-Arms; and Bill Bowell, Clerk.

In other action, the Senate passed a bill to limit absentee ballots and proxy votes.

SOPHOMORE HANDBOOK

A Majors Handbook will be published by the sophomore class, according to Larry Erhart, class president.

Various teachers on campus will be contacted concerning the proposed handbook which will investigate the various majors offered at UNC. It will report the courses required, vocational opportunities in that field, the advantage of graduate study, and outstanding courses.

"I hope that all teachers who are not contacted but feel that they can add something to this book will contact me at the Chi Psi Lodge," Erhart said.

Galantai Is Dazzling; Cooke, Shaffer Star

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

North Carolina turned a rout into ridicule last night and found another "Billy" in the process.

"We've waited long enough," Coach Dean Smith said afterward. But it wasn't his team's 99-71 victory over outclassed Georgia he was talking about. That was expected.

What wasn't was the performance of Billy Galantai who is beginning to rival the Davie Poplar for longevity at UNC. Galantai, despite a 6-5, 222-pound shadow, acted like a backcourt man in the second half when Carolina pulled away from a 43-37 intermission advantage.

Dribbling, playmaking, shooting and, one time, showboating a dazzling behind-the-back assist to Charlie Shaffer. Galantai came into his own with a 13-point performance. And it was needed too, for the more famous "Billy" (Cunningham) took his Christmas vacation from scoring a little early, didn't even scratch in the first half, and ended up with 12 points.

Carolina also got top-drawer performances from Shaffer and Mike Cooke, the real guards, who both broke 20 and were the recipients of some fine scoring passes midway the second period.

UNC went on three spurts in the last half, driving from leads of five points to 13 (57-44), from 16 to 21 (81-59) and from 22 to its biggest spread, 30 (93-63).

| Totals | 70-28 | 19-15 | 40 | 71 |

Halftime score: UNC 43, Ga. 37.
Attendance: 5,000 (capacity).

And that was when Dean Smith decided Georgia's Red Lawson had had enough.

The latter string started with five minutes left and UNC up, 85-63. Galantai wheeled for a three pointer, scored on a foul shot and, after Bob Bennett had shoved in a rebound, brought a capacity crowd off its hands with his pass to Shaffer for a basket on a play that Cunningham started.

The two Brooklyn Billys then hung it up with 2:46 left, and both got standing ovations. They don't count up assists, but Billy C had at least 10.

UNC, which shot 43.6 from the floor, also had Ray Respess and Bob Bennett in double figures. Billy Rado, the Bulldogs' fine-shooting guard got 20 points, though saddled with three fouls charged on him early in the first half. Georgia shot 40 per cent from the field.

Record Tumbles; Lewis Hits 52 In 119-75 Win

By HUGH STEVENS

Sensational Bob Lewis shattered his own UNC scoring mark last night, blistering the nets for 52 points in leading Carolina's freshmen to a sizzling 119-77 win over Wingate Jr. College.

Lewis flipped in 16 of 20 field goal attempts and 20 of 21 free throws to top his previous high of 51, set earlier this season. He reeled off 14 consecutive field goal attempts during one stretch.

The 119 team total was also a new UNC record.

With 13:15 remaining in the first half, the Tar Babies held a narrow 16-14 lead. At that point, Lewis hit from the floor for the first time, and UNC began to move. With Lewis and Ian Morrison (who had 23 for the night) leading the way, the freshmen blazed their way to a 40-20 margin at the 8:09 mark.

By half time, it was no longer a question of who, but how many. Even a cold streak in the last two and a half minutes (just four points over that stretch) did not prevent the Tar Babies from piling up a 61-35 halftime lead.

Lewis and his teammates continued the blitz in the second half, enduring a cold streak of four minutes during which they scored just one basket.

UNC out-rebounded Wingate 68-35 (Lewis had 21), and shot 53.5 from the floor. Tom Gauntlett had 17 points, and Donnie Moe, a defensive hawk, 10. Harold Walter and Mike Martin led Wingate with 16 and 17 respectively.

UNC Ranks 21st In Total Books

It looks like Duke has beaten UNC in another area of competition according to figures recently released by the Association of Research Libraries.

The UNC library has 1,349,584 volumes giving it a position of 21st in major college libraries but Duke is 16th with its 1,592,672 volumes.

However, UNC ranks ahead of some two-thirds of the other college libraries in the association.

Tragedy, Controversy And Success Highlight

The University Mourned The Loss Of John F. Kennedy

The assassination of President John Fitzgerald Kennedy ranked as the top story at UNC in 1963, a year highlighted by tragedy, controversy and athletic success.

The tragic slaying of the 35th President of the United States November 22 in Dallas, Tex. overshadowed such stories as passage of a state Speaker Ban law, the success of UNC's Gator Bowl-bound football team and the resignation of five top-ranking University officials.

Other big stories included the deaths of seven UNC staff members, continued anti-segregation demonstrations and the establishment of a Fine Arts Division here.

The campus reacted with shock, disbelief and anguish after learning the news of the Chief Executive's death. It was this same community that displayed feverish enthusiasm and great pride when Kennedy spoke here some two years earlier.

An estimated 32,000 people had jammed Kenan Stadium Oct. 12, 1961 expecting to hear a major foreign policy address. Instead, they received a 14-minute speech re-affirming Kennedy's dedication to both firmness and flexibility in the fight for Western freedom.

He had come to Chapel Hill to receive an honorary Doctor of Laws degree on the University's 168th birthday.

Campus activity came to a halt some two years, one month and a week later as students paused to pay tribute to John F. Kennedy.

LARRY PHELPS

JOHN SALTER

More than 2,000 students and townspeople quietly filled Memorial Hall three days after the assassination to honor the President. They came in answer to a call of President Lyndon B. Johnson for every American to enter his chosen place of divine worship and offer prayers for the Kennedy family and the nation, and to pay humble tribute to a "great and good man."

Forgetting their prejudices and their differences, they voiced their common sadness, their heartfelt sympathy and their youthful confidence in the future.

The North Carolina General Assembly passed a highly controversial state Speaker Ban law in the closing hours of its 1963 session. The law bars campus speaking facilities to known members of the Communist Party, persons known to advocate the overthrow of the United States or the state of North Carolina or persons who have pleaded the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution in refusing to answer questions with respect to communist or subversive activities.

The "gag" law, attacked by educators and newspapers throughout the state as an infringement on academic freedom and the freedom of inquiry, was one of many issues which have sprung up concerning communism on the campus.

Consolidated University officials, the Board of Trustees, the State Board of Higher Education were among the first to ask repeal or amendment of the law.

Two weeks after passage of the law more attention was focused on Chapel Hill. Two former UNC students, Larry Phelps and John Salter, defied a State Department travel ban, by going to Cuba with 57 other American college students.

The two were members of the Chapel Hill chapter of the Progressive Labor Club. Phelps had been thwarted in an earlier attempt to go to Cuba last Christmas

The Executive Committee of the N. C. Department of the American Legion blasted the University, charging UNC officials with violating a 1941 statute prohibiting campus speakers from advocating the violent overthrow of the government.

The law was broken, claimed the Legionnaires, when National Progressive Labor Chairman Milt Rosen, "a known subversive," was allowed to speak on campus in 1962.

Concern over the local PL club was raised in August when a staff investigator for the House Un-American Activities Committee appeared on campus gathering information on Phelps and Salter and other members of PL and the New Left Club, a former campus discussion group.

Carolina's varsity football team compiled an 8-2 record, its best since 1949, and earned a spot in the Gator Bowl. The Tar Heels face the Air Force Academy Dec. 28 in Jacksonville, Fla.

UNC, which shared the ACC title with N. C. State, broke 10 school marks and tied three others on the way to its best season since the 1949 9-1-1 Choo Choo Justice team.

Ace receiver Bob Lacey was named to the Look All-America and Associated Press All-American teams.

The cross-country team finished its usual strong season with a 7-0 mark, coasting to ACC and state titles and winding up 21st in the NCAA championships.

The tennis team, 18-1, again dominated the league, bowing only to the University of Miami.

Pat Earey's swimmers earned a tie with N. C. State and Maryland for first place in the ACC.

* * *

The resignation of five University officials, including Chancellor William B. Aycock, rated as the fourth biggest story of the year.

Aycock, who announced his intention to return to teaching in the Law School, will step down at the end of June after serving a seven-year tenure.

Also resigning next year are Law School Dean Henry Brandis, Journalism Dean Norval Neil Luxon and Dr. Walter Reese Berryhill, Dean of the School of Medicine.

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson Jr. resigned at the end of the summer session to return to the teaching of Latin. He was replaced by C. O. Cathey.

James Dickson Phillips, 41, has been named new Dean of the Law School succeeding Brandis who headed the school since 1949.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday has appointed a special student-faculty-alumni committee to assist him in selecting a new chancellor. Friday is expected to submit a list of two names and his recommendation to the spring meeting of the Board of Trustees.

Death claimed the lives of seven high-ranking University staff members. Archibald Henderson, 86, UNC Professor of Emeritus succumbed at his home Dec. 7. Henderson, noted educator, historian, critic and mathematician, was also the official biographer of George Bernard Shaw and had served on the faculty for 48 years prior to his retirement in 1948.

Other faculty members struck down included history professor James King, 46, who died of a fall in Washington, D. C. last December; John Boyd Flynn, 44, associate professor in the School of Business Administration who died March 5; Robert John Getty, 55, classics professor who died Oct. 24 and Modern Civilization instructor John McCloud.

Kenan Professor Loren Carey McKinney, 72, died Oct. 27 and famed University track coach Dale Ranson, 61, died a week earlier. Ranson had been associated with 52 championship track teams and countless individual standouts, including miler Jim Beatty, during his years as a coach.

The sixth biggest story of the year was the renewal of efforts to end racial discrimination in Chapel Hill. During the past week efforts were intensified as the local chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality, established here this fall, launched an all-out campaign to remove remaining racial barriers in this university town.

Through Tuesday some 68 persons, many of them UNC students, had been arrested after five days of sit-ins at segregated restaurants. The anti-discrimination campaign began last week following the conviction of four persons on charges stemming from a July 19 sit-in at the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association office.

The four were convicted on trespass charges in Orange County Superior Court in Hillsboro and given 30-day sentences, suspended on payment of $50 fines and costs. Three of the four are now serving sentences following their refusal to pay the fines.

Anti-segregation protests were conducted earlier in the year by the Chapel Hill Committee for Open Business (COB), which folded in August and was replaced by Citizens United for Racial Equality and Dignity (CURED).

Mass protest demonstrations and civil rights activities were in the headlines since the COB staged its first march on May 25 with about 350 Negro and white participants. Though the COB had listed about a dozen businesses as being segregated, a recent CORE survey placed a total of 26 establishments—gas stations, restaurants, motels and barber shops—on their boycott list. Four businesses have desegregated since direct action plans were announced last spring.

On July 19, 34 members of the COB were arrested and charged with trespassing, blocking traffic and obstructing the sidewalk during what was the biggest act of civil disobedience until Dec. 17. The sit-in occurred two weeks after the largest protest demonstration of the year, with nearly 500 Negroes and whites participating.

After the arrests, an 11-day truce was declared to allow time for a committee of anonymous businessmen to negotiate with the remaining segregating merchants. They reported back that they had made no progress, and the COB went back into the street in a renewed appeal to the town's aldermen for a public accommodations ordinance.

Such a law had been proposed earlier in the summer by the Mayor's Committee on Integration, but the Board of Aldermen indefinitely postponed consideration of it on June 25. The COB had publicly favored passage of the statute since the time of its proposal.

Shortly after the Committee for Open Business staged a protest march through campus seeking University aid and leadership in the struggle for community integration, its activities came to an apparent standstill. The Executive Committee ousted its chairman, Harold Foster, and at least two of its members resigned in protest.

At an open meeting of the full committee on August 15, an attempt at reorganization failed, and the Committee for Open Business ceased all activities. However, a "unity meeting" called by Floyd McKissick of Durham the following night resulted in announcement of a new group. Citizens United for Racial Equality and Dignity, which immediatly resumed demonstrations and said that it planned to explore other fields of activity such as voter registration.

tudy it. The month-long festival, a salute to the performing arts, has been tentatively scheduled for the spring of 1965. The festival was last held in the early 1940's.

Award-winning author John Knowles was named the University's first official writer-in-residence. Knowles, who teaches two courses in creative writing, accepted the invitation to come here after a student committee, headed by Gil Stalling had worked for nearly two years on the project.

Controversy flared in student-faculty and student-administration relations throughout the year as the Apartment Rule, the Student-Faculty Judicial Review Board and Gator Bowl tickets made the number eight spot on the list of top stories.

The Women's Residence Council, legislative body for women dormitory students, repealed the Apartment Rule in March, saying it would apply only to freshmen women. The rule called for at least two couples to be present when coeds visit a man's off-campus living unit.

Two days later Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael voided the rule change, noting that she considered the rule change invalid and regarded only those rules in the 1962-63 Handbook for Women Students to be in effect.

The Women's Council followed by announcing that it would uphold the changes as legislated by the WRC. In May, University officials told student leaders they must choose between temporarily reinstating the old apartment rule while a compromise was negotiated or force the administration to enforce a rule of its own.

The administration later began enforcing its own two-couple rule for all undergraduates when a special ad-hoc committee failed to resolve the issue to the satisfaction of students, faculty and administration alike. The committee, composed of two faculty members and the Dean of Women and the Dean of Men, had been forced to come up with a compromise satisfactory to everyone. The committee met three times but failed to propose an acceptable rule.

Student members of the Faculty Review Board, the body which hears appeals of students judicial cases, were dropped in an unexpected move. Student Government leaders issued a proposal that the Board be temporarily reinstated while a special faculty committee studied the controversy and discussed it with them. The proposal, issued at the December meeting of the Faculty Council, may be placed on the agenda of a later Council meeting, Chancellor Aycock said.

The Review Board now automatically hears all appeals from student court (of original jurisdiction).

Student leaders considered the arbitrary dropping of student members from the board a serious and unnecessary act.

Many Carolina students who picked up their Gator Bowl tickets last week found their seats in the end zone. Athletic Director Chuck Erickson, obviously disturbed by numerous student complaints, announced that tickets could be refunded. Approximately 700 tickets were returned.

a critical three men to a room situation. The 1963 Legislature vetoed a proposal for a 50 percent self-liquidating plan (the State and the University would put half the cost of new dormitories) forcing a $10 a semester increase in dorm rents.

The change, announced last spring, brought strong student reaction as about 450 students staged an orderly protest against the increase.

The election of Student Party candidate Mike Lawler as President of the Student Body in the spring elections and the candidacy of Griselda, an eight-week old pig for student body secretary ranked as the tenth biggest story of 1963.

Lawler, Bob Spearman, Bonnie Hoyle and Dick Akers captured the Big Four Student Government positions, despite Griselda's collecting 800 votes for secretary.

A number of other stories gained short-term notoriety during the year. Among them:

—the firing of Tom Crais as frosh tennis coach.

—the suicide of French graduate student Richard Lee Brand.

—picketing of the Rialto theatre in Durham and the College Cafe and Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill.

—the arrest of two students at the Senior Class party at the Patio.

—the announcement of John Lacey's appointment as a trainer for the 1964 Olympics.

—the appearance of Black Muslim Malcolm X on campus.

—Graham Memorial's $4,000 Spring Jubilee.

—Negro Kellis Parker's joining the Durham County Citizens Council.

—the actions of the Minataurs at the Georgia football game.

Student Directories Finally Hit Streets

By DAVE HERITAGE

Student directories are for sale . . . finally.

However, it's easy to see why it took three months to place this valuable asset on a selling basis. It's a big job and a long story.

Originally the YMCA was responsible for publication of the directory. Last year the University took over operations because the Y was losing time and money.

This year's finished product represents an investment of nearly $5000.

Mr. J. A. Branch, UNC Business Manager, is responsible for the general make-up and the cover picture, an aerial shot taken at the State game.

Central Records processed the names of students on the master IBM. Academic departments supplied the names of instructors and professors. The Personnel Office then screened these names to make sure none would appear twice.

The "blue section" was proofed by the telephone company. Colonial Press sold aproximately $3000 worth of advertisements and printed the directory.

The telephone company distributed the product to university departments free of charge. Y-Court, Craige and Ehringhaus dormitories, and the phone company are selling them for 50 cents on a consignment basis.

This price is 25 cents less than that of two years ago with the phone company absorbing the loss.

The business department feels that UNC's student directory is superior to that of most universities.

They admit that improvements are always possible and feel that strides are being made in that direction.

Dr. E. Everett Anderson will receive $3,000 a year for the next three years for special graduate training at Peter Brent Brigham Hospital in Boston and at the Duke Medical Center. Dr. Anderson won the award in competition with candidates from across the nation.

Does a man really take unfair advantage of women when he uses Mennen Skin Bracer?

All depends on why he uses it.

Most men simply think Menthol-Iced Skin Bracer is the best after-shave lotion around. Because it cools rather than burns. Because it helps heal shaving nicks and scrapes. Because it helps prevent blemishes.

So who can blame them if Bracer's crisp, long-lasting aroma just happens to affect women so remarkably?

Of course, some men may use Mennen Skin Bracer because of this effect.

How intelligent!

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: JACK ASCHERL

In less than a year, Jack Ascherl (B.S., Business, 1962) has turned in outstanding performances on four different assignments with Southern Bell in Pompano Beach, Florida.

As a Commercial Supervisor, he's run a section of a business office with leeway to make his own decisions. And then, as Public Relations Coordinator, he improved the PR program for his district.

Next followed increased responsibility—Jack was told to find methods of improving collection procedures, a job where he saw 18 of his recommendations accepted and used. And this led to a key troubleshooting assignment on which Jack found ways to tighten up security procedures in the tellers' sections of the district offices.

To Southern Bell, Jack is a man who gets things done!

Jack Ascherl, like many young men, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

New Year Brings Race Violence To Chapel Hill

Quinton Baker is comforted after being doused with ammonia solution along with several other demonstrators in sit-in at The Rock Pile variety store last week. Baker, state NAACP youth leader and student at North Carolina College in Durham, was treated for burns at Memorial Hospital after being arrested.

By JOEL BULKLEY

Racial violence greeted the New Year in Chapel Hill, sending 12 persons to the hospital following two "ammonia incidents" as anti-segregation protests continued.

Police have reported five separate incidents of violence, occurring at three segregated businesses, since demonstrations resumed here Dec. 13. Only one arrest has been made in connection with the five incidents.

Some 239 whites and Negroes, including 25 juveniles, have been arrested to date, most of them on charges of trespass and obstructing the sidewalk.

Seven persons were treated for first-degree burns at Memorial Hospital after being doused with ammonia and bleach water during a sit-in. Four were arrested at Carlton's Rock Pile, a segregated grocery on the Durham Road, while the others left before the police arrived.

The following day 18 more were arrested there, with five requiring treatment for minor burns. A group of about 25 persons had gathered in front with only five getting inside. When police arrived only John Dunne, chairman of the local Congress of Racial Equality chapter, remained inside with proprietor Carlton Mize. Dunne was in the back of the store, police said, with his coat over his head, coughing and the floor wet with ammonia.

Mize told police he had attempted to keep the demonstrators out, however, they had nearly torn loose a screen door before forcing their way in.

CORE officials have not pressed charges in connection with any of the incidents. Police Chief W. D. Blake said last week he did not expect any more "ammonia incidents."

Watts Restaurant on Pittsboro Road outside Chapel Hill was the scene of two incidents, resulting in the arrest of 16 persons.

Thursday night one white demonstrator was urinated on by a white waitress while a photographer was jostled by another waitress.

Friday night Orange County Deputy Sheriffs arrested five Duke University faculty members and one from UNC along with four others were arrested at Watts.

University faculty member, Albert Amon of the psychology department, who was not arrested, suffered head cuts and bruises when an unidentified waitress from the restaurant struck some of the demonstrators with a broom handle. Demonstrators, as well as spectators, were sprayed with water from a nearby garden hose.

Police identified the Duke faculty members as Peter H. Klopfer, zoology department; David Smith, mathematics; Frederich Herzog, Robert Osborn and Harmon Smith, all of the religion department. The UNC faculty member arrested was identified as Bill Wynn of the psychology department.

Amon was treated at Memorial Hospital and released. The others arrested included, police said, Quinton Baker, Negro, North Carolina College and president of the state NAACP Youth Council; Tom Bynum and Ben Spaulding, both Negro UNC students and Dunne.

They were taken to Orange County jail in Hillsboro and held under $100 bond each. All have been released.

Eleven more were arrested at the Rock Pile Saturday night, including seven whites and four Negroes. No violence was reported. Seven University students were among those jailed including John Shively, 20; Van Cornelius, 19; Jo Ann Johnston, 20; Ralph Mitchell, 19; Timothy Perkins, 19; Arthur Simons, 20, and Henry Sanford, 20, a Negro.

Police Chief William D. Blake estimated Friday his men had put in about 400 hours of overtime handling the current wave of demonstrations. He said he was preparing a report to be submitted to the Board of Aldermen Jan. 13 to seek some compensation for his men. Last fall the department received cash bonuses for handling the summer protests.

A report on a proposed public accommodations law for Chapel Hill is also expected to be presented at the meeting. The report, from the Institute of Government, is expected to support an opinion from the State Attorney General's office that the town does not have the legal authority to enact such a law.

John Dunne, chairman of the CORE chapter, has stated that protests will continue until employment discrimination and accommodations segregation have been removed.

Two Duke University students and three others were arrested during a sit-in at Watts Restaurant Sunday night. They were charged with trespass and resisting arrest and taken to Hillsboro jail.

The demonstrators had ice water poured on them by a waitress during the sit-in, part of a continuing protest against segregation here. They were also "stepped on" and dragged outside by customers in the restaurant.

Later Sunday, Brady's Restaurant was picketed by 15 persons representing CORE.

A Chapel Hill painting contractor, Howard Pendergraft, has been charged with assault with a deadly weapon in connection with a Dec. 19 incident at the Tar Heel Sandwich Shop.

Police said Pendergraft allegedly kicked Negro Donald Davis who was sitting outside the store. Davis was treated for minor injuries at Memorial Hospital. Pendergraft was released on $200 bond and is scheduled to appear in Recorder's Court today.

Trial is also scheduled today for 28 demonstrators involved in 55 cases.

The trials of 144 other cases involving 101 demonstrators were transferred last Thursday to Orange County Superior Court after a motion to dismiss the charges against them was denied in Recorder's Court.

Judge William S. Stewart granted Defense Attorney Floyd McKissick's request for a jury trial in each case, but he ordered each of the demonstrators to execute new bond of $175.

About 15 of the defendants, including Negroes and whites, refused to post bond and will remain in jail. The trials are expected to come up at the criminal term of Orange County Superior Court beginning the third week in February.

McKissick, a Durham attorney who serves as national chairman of the Congress of Racial Equality, asked for a dismissal of the charges on grounds that the defendants' rights under the 14th Amendment were violated. He also contended that clauses of the Constitution guaranteeing equal protection and the right to protest were violated.

Stewart also denied McKissick's request to continue bonds some of the demonstrators posted upon arrest. Bond of $175 was required on the combined charges of trespassing and resisting arrest.

McKissick said many of the 144 demonstrators had been arrested more than once.

One demonstrator, charged with trespassing, forfeited a $75 bond when he failed to appear in court.

Another was convicted of trespassing and resisting arrest and fined $75 and $16 court costs.

Warrants were served during the court session on six persons charged with assault and battery during a sit-in demonstration at the Pines Restaurant Dec. 16.

Drugstore owner John Carswell said Sunday he has brought forcible trespass charges against 11 demonstrators who entered his store Dec. 31. The charges were added to the trespass and resisting arrest warrants already served by police. All 11 are scheduled for court today.

A recount of arrests in recent racial demonstrations follows:

Dec. 19, 18 at Brady's and Tar Heel Sandwich Shop; Dec. 20, 11 at Tar Heel Sandwich Shop, charged with blocking the sidewalk and resisting arrest; Dec. 22, 17 at Brady's; Dec. 23, 4 at University Motel; Dec. 29, 6 at the Pines Restaurant; Dec. 31, 17 at Colonial Drug and the Rock Pile; also Jan. 1, 18 at the Rock Pile; Jan. 2, 6 at Watts Restaurant; Jan. 3, 10 at Watts Restaurant; Jan. 4, 11 at Rock Pile; Jan. 5, 5 at Rock Pile.

Kirkpatrick Wins Top Hearst Prize

By FRED SEELY

One of America's top collegiate journalism prizes has been awarded to Curry Kirkpatrick.

The DTH Sports Editor won the $750 scholarship given monthly by the William Randolph Hearst Journalism Foundation for his story on the impact on Chapel Hill of President Kennedy's death. It appeared in the Daily Tar Heel on November 23.

A 20-year-old junior from Lewiston, N. Y., Kirkpatrick maintains a 3.0 average and is in the top 10 per cent of his class. He ranks third in his class in the School of Journalism.

A member of the DTH sports staff since his freshman year, Kirkpatrick also holds the Jake Wade Memorial Scholarship for sports writing at UNC.

The School of Journalism receives $750 for its general fund from the Hearst Foundation, which will award $40,600 in scholarships this year.

In competition with stories submitted by journalism majors from 46 schools, the prize-winning article elevated the UNC School of Journalism to fourth place in the overall contest, trailing only Florida, Stanford and Nebraska.

Kirkpatrick's award is the second time a UNC student has won first place in a Hearst monthly contest. Larry K. Smith, '61, gained that honor in November, 1960, and later placed fifth overall in the yearly competition. His prize-winnings totaled $1300.

Last year Wayne King, former DTH Editor, won eighth place in the October contest and second place in April. His total award was $500. Jim Coltfelter won $400 in the March, 1963 competition. Kirkpatrick also placed eleventh in November, 1962.

The entries were judged by Hubbard Keavy, Associated Press bureau chief in Los Angeles; Roger Tatarian, Executive Editor of United Press International; and Lawrence Martin, former Associate Editor of the Denver Post.

Dr. Hardre Re-elected To Top Post

Dr. Jacques Hardre, professor of French here, has been re-elected to serve as president of the American Association of Teachers of French for another two-year period, September, 1964, to September, 1966.

A member of the UNC faculty since 1945, Prof. Hardre has served as a regional representative of the AATF, a member of its executive council, and as vice president.

Born in Dinan, France, Dr. Hardre received a baccalureate degree in France, a B.A. degree from Guilford College, and M.A. and Ph.D degrees from UNC. His research areas are surrealism, existentialism, and contemporary French theater. His teaching specialties are contemporary French literature and civilization.

Publications of Dr. Hardre's include a book entitled "Letters of Louvoius," published by the UNC Studies in Romance Languages and Literatures; and articles entitled "The Existentialism of Jean-Paul Sartre," and "Sartre's Existentialism and Humanism," among others.

DEBATE TIME CHANGED

The pros and cons of the proposed "Little Federal" plan will be debated on WUNC-TV (Ch. 4) tonight at 7:30.

The debate will be moderated by Clyde L. Ball, assistant director of the Institute of Government. Speaking for the amendment will be Sen. Robert Lee Humber of Goldsboro and Rep. Lacy Thornburg of Slyva. Opposing the plan will be Sen. Robert F. Morgan of Shelby and Rep. Sneed High of Fayetteville.

No New Leads In Rinaldi Murder

By GARY BLANCHARD

No new leads have been reported in the continuing probe into the Christmas Eve murder of Mrs. Lucille Rinaldi, 32-year-old wife of a graduate student and part-time English instructor, Frank Rinaldi, 34.

Mrs. Rinaldi was visiting her husband for the holidays from their hometown of Waterbury, Conn., where she worked as a high school English teacher. The couple was married last July 31.

She was found brutally murdered in Rinaldi's apartment at 105 North Street by Rinaldi and John Sipp, a friend, when they returned from a shopping trip to Durham and Chapel Hill about 1:45 p.m. Dec. 24.

Rinaldi was charged with the crime late Christmas Eve. He was released a week later following a preliminary hearing in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court. Judge William Stewart found no probable cause that Rinaldi murdered his wife.

The decision did not completely clear Rinaldi, however. He can still be taken before the grand jury for indictment proceedings next month in Hillsboro. If indicted, he would face a jury trial.

District Solicitor Thomas Cooper said further legal action against Rinaldi depends upon whether the continuing investigation turns up any new evidence against him.

Clinching testimony at the 5½-hour preliminary hearing came from Dr. Nathaniel Rodman, a Pathologist at N. C. Memorial Hospital, and Sipp, a local insurance agent and friend of Rinaldi's for the past seven years.

Dr. Rodman testified that a private autopsy he performed on Mrs. Rinaldi's body showed that death occurred about 11 a.m. due to suffocation. Sipp testified that he picked Rinaldi up by pre-arrangement about 8:45 a.m. outside Rinaldi's apartment, and that Rinaldi was out of his sight for only a few brief periods between then and the time he and Rinaldi returned to the apartment and found Mrs. Rinaldi.

Rinaldi has avowed his innocence throughout the investigation. After being freed, he left for Waterbury to visit his wife's grave. He returned to Chapel Hill Sunday afternoon.

Rinaldi was graduated from Georgetown University in 1951. Then he went to work in the CIA. He enlisted in the Army during the Korean conflict in 1953, and came to Chapel Hill when he got out in 1956.

A year later he left to teach at the University of Missouri, then he worked for an advertising agency in New York. In 1960 he returned to UNC to get his Ph.D. in English and is scheduled to complete his course work next semester.

Judiciary Probing Cases Growing Out Of Demonstrations

By HUGH STEVENS

Mike Lawler, student body president, said yesterday the Student Government statement of Dec. 20 regarding students arrested in local sit-in demonstrations "has been greatly misunderstood."

"The student Attorney General will investigate each situation and will dispose of these cases as prescribed by legislative statute," he said. "It is his (the Attorney General's) responsibility to decide whether there is sufficient cause for a hearing."

Buzzy Stubbs, student Attorney General, said investigations are being conducted, and indicated that results would be announced "later this week."

Lawler said that state papers have used phrases such as "possible penalties as high as expulsion" in connection with the original statement. The Honor Councils do not have the power of expulsion.

"These cases will be handled through the normal judicial machinery for investigating an "off-campus" action which may be a volation of the student Campus Code," Lawler said.

"This code of conduct has long been applied to both on campus and off-campus student actions."

The original statement said that the Attorney General would handle the individual cases after their final disposition by the North Carolina Courts. Stubbs said this would "probably" mean that students with appeals pending would not be considered by the student judiciary.

Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey agreed with Lawler's statement, saying "the students will handle the cases as they see fit."

"I think they will do a good job," he concluded.

The current investigations by the Attorney General's staff will decide whether the cases merit a trial by the appropriate councils. If so, the Men's and Women's Councils will assume their normal responsibilities in trying the students.

The original statement, widely misinterpreted in state papers, came from a meeting of student leaders and administration. Lawler said there was general accord on the statement between the two groups.

The statement said that cases would go to the student judiciary because the University "cannot condone the willful disobedience of the laws, aside from the merits, demerits, or employment of particular laws."

Christmas Crash Kills 1, Injures 1

LINDA ANN SWINEY

A University coed was killed and another student seriously injured in an automobile accident early Christmas morning.

State Highway Patrolman B. W. Lacock said Linda Ann Swiney, 21, of Chapel Hill, was killed and Samuel Philip Jackson, 21, also of Chapel Hill, sustained a fractured skull and a ruptured spinal disk.

The driver of the automobile, David P. Henry II, also a University student here, was not injured.

According to Lacock, the car hit an icy patch on the Old Durham Road, skidded and hit several trees and fence posts and a mailbox before overturning.

Miss Swiney was crushed by the roof of the car. No charges have been filed pending an investigation of the accident.

Mercy Petition Being Passed

A petition requesting Gov. Sanford to commute the death sentence given a Winston-Salem Negro to life imprisonment is being circulated on the campus, it was announced yesterday afternoon.

Charles Heatherly said he is circulating the petition on the behalf of Marion Frank Crawford, 26, convicted of raping and killing an 8-year old Negro girl in Winston-Salem.

Heatherly said the prisoner can't afford an appeal to Federal Courts which might reverse the decision of the trial court on the basis of "inflammatory" evidence presented by the prosecution.

Heatherly said the petition is being circulated by himself and other individuals who are "opposed to capital punishment."

Dr. Heusner Memorial Set This Morning

Memorial services will be conducted at the University Methodist Church today at 10:30 a.m. for Dr. A. Price Heusner, professor of anatomy at the School of Medicine. The Rev. Clyde G. McCarver will officiate.

Dr. Heusner died of a heart attack two days before Christmas. He was 53.

He was a native of Kansas and came to Chapel Hill in 1952 from the Boston University School of Medicine in Boston, Mass.

Dr. Heusner was a professor of surgery in charge of neurosugery at the School of Medicine and N. C. Memorial Hospital for five years before becoming professor of anatomy in the fall of 1957.

He is survived by his wife, the former Helen Day of Nebraska; two daughters; and one son.

Let Us Begin, If Only Because We Must

Perhaps the worst thing about Chapel Hill's current civil rights situation is that that people who must deal with it don't understand it. These people are not merely the political leaders of the town, though most of them are included. These people are we who are mostly white, who live and work in and around Chapel Hill, or are here as students, who have the power to effect the changes which must be made.

Most of us do not understand the deep longings of our Negro countrymen for full equality, and now. We do not understand that many of the demonstrators who have been staging sit-ins here nightly for the past three weeks have done so in the knowledge that they may be killed. We do not understand how deeply the demonstrators believe —and rightly—that real progress in achieving full equality for the Negro cannot begin until the visible barriers of segregation are removed, thus kindling fires of motivation and aspiration in the minds of Negro children now growing up.

What is more, most of us white persons do not seem to care about understanding the situation. Our attitude seems to be, 'let's forget about it and maybe it will go away.'

But the situation will not go away. It will only grow worse, and worse, and worse, until the unforgivable occurs and we are all shocked into doing what we should have done years ago, instead of expending our energies decrying the techniques and morals of the demonstrators.

Now is not a time for recriminations and accusations. It is a time for soul-searching and understanding.

The season just past was aimed at honoring Jesus, a man of divinely good will. Can we not know honor ourselves who are made, however remotely, in His image? Must we not before it is too late to do so? Can we afford to take refuge in recriminations and accusations any longer?

Pompous though it sounds, it is nevertheless true that now is the time for all good men to be true to the best that is in them.

Let us begin by making a new effort at understanding the actions of the demonstrators, and at our own previous reluctance to try and understand them.

Chapel Hill – North Carolina, Or Alabama?

We could hardly believe it. In fact, even though police and sheriff's deputies have verified the fact that it occurred, we can still hardly believe it. It just does not seem possible that any woman could be so debased as to straddle the head of a prone demonstrator and urinate on him. But this is what a waitress at Watt's Restaurant did last Thursday night.

To remove any doubt about the level of her depravity, the next night she directed and aided in the stomping, kicking, beating and water-hosing of eleven demonstrators—including five Duke instructors and two from UNC—for the 15 or so minutes it took police and sheriff's deputies to arrive.

The only thing that in any way prepared us for these animal acts was the ammonia-throwing at Carleton Mize's variety store earlier in the week. There demonstrators were doused with ammonia and bleachwater and, on one of the two nights these incidents occurred, Mize probably would have clubbed a demonstrator with the baseball bat he brought out from behind his counter if police had not arrived when they did. As it was, Mize put the bat down and spent his energy ordering the retching demonstrators not to puke in his store.

But even this ammonia-throwing, reprehensible as it was, did not really prepare us for what took place at Watt's Restaurant.

Nothing could.

Coroner System Indicts Itself

(From The Chapel Hill Weekly)

If any final indictment of the coroner system in Orange County were needed, the slaying of Mrs. Frank Rinaldi here on Christmas Eve provided it.

You don't have to be expert in these matters to recognize that the County's official effort to fix the time and manner of the death of Mrs. Rinaldi, an apparent homicide victim, was in many ways strange and finally absurd.

It was strange that the body was permitted to remain in an apartment for nearly three hours after being discovered, then transferred to a funeral home where alterations were made in the outward appearance, with nearly eight hours elapsing before a pathologist was finally able to begin an autopsy. The County procedure was reduced to absurdity when it was finally left to the man charged with murdering Mrs. Rinaldi, and at his personal expense, to have an autopsy performed.

The County coroner originally was quoted as attributing death to a blow on the head. After the pathologist's preliminary autopsy indicated that Mrs. Rinaldi had died of suffocation, the coroner denied that he had attributed death to the blow and insisted he had said only that it might have been the cause of death.

The coroner was in grave error in either case. Either he was wrong in originally concluding that death came from the blow on the head, or, without conclusive evidence of the cause, he was wrong in not obtaining an autopsy.

Obviously, the coroner was not qualified to attribute the cause of death in the Rinaldi case and his negligence in failing to obtain an autopsy raises the question as to whether he is qualified to direct others to determine cause of death.

The County Commissioners several months ago saw fit to adopt the medical examiner system under which such determinations would be made by a physician. For some reason, the new system has not yet been put into effect. The Rinaldi case testifies amply to the need for immediate action.

In Exchange Of Letters

Aycock Answers Gag-Law Query

An exchange of letters between State Rep. I. H. O'Hanlon of Fayetteville and University Chancellor William B. Aycock:

Honorable William B. Aycock,
Chancellor
University of North Carolina
Chapel Hill, North Carolina

Dear Chancellor Aycock:

A few weeks ago I was sent a copy of a column by Mr. Hoover Adams which appeared in the Dunn Daily Record on November 25, 1963. Although many words have been spoken and written pro and con on House Bill 1395, there were several points in this column which particularly concerned me. Your familiarity with the University and its policies, past and present, should allow you to clear up a few confusing issues in a minute for me.

It was distressing to me that young Larry Phelps was permitted to speak, "informally" or otherwise, at the University, even more so in the light of recent tragic events. Would you be kind enough to define for me an "informal discussion" and under what circumstances they will be permitted in the future.

Although originally I was not entirely familiar with the 1941 statute, I have been informed numerous times that its provisions have been ignored at the University since its passage. Certain prominent examples were cited in Mr. Adams' column. Could you tell me whether or not it was true that Gus Hall, Sam Rosen and Langston Hughes appeared on the campus, when if they did, and under what circumstances.

I have also heard that Gus Hall was scheduled to make an address on the campus this spring. Is this true; and, if so, what group was sponsoring his appearance?

My support of HB 1395 continues not without realization of the numerous apparent problems administrators of the University may have seeing it is not violated. There will be confusion and there will be times in which it may seem that academic exchange will suffer.

The free world may not always be the first to excel in every field of academic, scientific or cultural achievement and the purpose of HB 1395 was not to prevent a free flow of knowledge nor even to shield impressionable students.

It is, simply, the stand of citizens of North Carolina and their representatives in the General Assembly for a free America under God . . . it is a refusal to dignify, in however small a way, a criminal conspiracy whose Godless aim has been announced and demonstrated to every man concerned enough to care.

Looking forward to hearing from you soon, I remain

Sincerely yours,
I. H. O'Hanlon,
Cumberland County
Representative
House of Representatives

Mr. I. H. O'Hanlon
Cumberland County
Representative
House of Representatives
Fayetteville, North Carolina

Dear Representative O'Hanlon:

Thank you for your letter of December 17, 1963, in which you ask me to comment on several points discussed in a column by Mr. Hoover Adams which appeared in the DUNN DAILY RECORD on November 25, 1963. I will deal with all matters covered in your letter but not in the order in which they appear. I believe it would be helpful to focus first on the 1941 Act.

The third paragraph of your letter reads as follows:

"Although originally I was not entirely familiar with the 1941 statute, I have been informed numerous times that its provisions have been ignored at the University since its passage. Certain prominent examples were cited in Mr. Adams' column. Could you tell me whether or not it was true that Gus Hall, Sam Rosen and Langston Hughes appeared on the campus, when, if they did, and under what circumstances."

As you know, the 1941 Act (General Statutes 14-11 et. seq.) provides: "It shall be unlawful for ANY person, by word of mouth or writing, willfully and deliberately to advocate, advise or teach a doctrine that the government of the United States, the State of North Carolina or any political subdivision thereof shall be OVERTHROWN OR OVERTURNED BY FORCE OR VIOLENCE OR BY ANY OTHER UNLAWFUL MEANS." This is a criminal statute and it applies to any person who performs the forbidden act or utterances. The statute prohibits the use of ANY public building for the forbidden purpose.

Now to the vital issue—has the University "ignored" the 1941 Act? Your informants have so charged. Have you asked them for proof of their allegations? We have frequently heard these charges, and they have been the subject of circulation and conversation by many who regard themselves as friends of the University and who genuinely are puzzled by the charges and would like to know the facts. Often they do not ask those who make the allegations to furnish proof of their charges, but direct their questions instead to the University and ask if the allegations are true or false. I would suppose, therefore, that you have not asked for the proof of the charges, or else you would not, in effect, call on me to prove innocence. Let me begin at the State Legislative Building. Didn't a Russian official speak recently in this building? This building is covered by the 1941 Act (although it is not covered by the 1963 Act). Has this speaker been indicted for violating the 1941 Act? Have the custodians of the State Legislative Building been charged with "ignoring" the 1941 Act? I suppose not. Why? For the simple reason that there is no proof that the speaker advocated the overthrow of the government—hence the 1941 Act was not violated and the custodians of the building are in the clear. Incidentally, suppose the speaker had violated the 1941 Act and the custodians had no prior knowledge that she planned to do so, would you demand they be prosecuted because they did not have the foresight to anticipate what she would say?

Should a different test apply to the University? If the University has "ignored" the 1941 Act, so have the law enforcement officials of the State. We are not charged with the duty of enforcing the criminal laws of the State any more than any other citizen. However, we are charged with the responsibility of denying buildings on the campus to a speaker who violates the 1941 Act. If we have "ignored" the Act, (and I do not grant that we have ignored the Act), so has any person who failed to bring charges against a speaker whom he knew violated the law. We stand or fall together.

Now let me deal with the "prominent examples" of violation which you state were cited in Mr. Adams' column.

(1) GUS HALL. I have been informed that Gus Hall spoke on a vacant lot in CHAPEL HILL in 1954. I have no information which would indicate that he has spoken in a public building on the campus.

I have no information on what Gus Hall said in his Chapel Hill speech off the campus. If the 1941 Act was violated by him, the University was in no way involved since he did not use a public building under our control.

(2) SAM ROSEN. I never heard of anyone named Sam Rosen. I have heard of a Jacob Rosen and a Milton Rosen.

JACOB ROSEN, according to reports made to me, once resided in Sanford, North Carolina, and currently is supposed to live in Monroe, North Carolina. He may be connected with the so-called "Freedom House" in Monroe at the present time but an inquiry by you to the State Bureau of Investigation or to the Monroe police department should provide you with exact information. Jacob Rosen is alleged to be the Southern Organizer for the Progressive Labor Movement. He has, according to reports, visited Chapel Hill as well as other communities in the State several times. So far as I know he has never made a speech on the campus. I understand that he talked with Larry Phelps several times both on and off the campus. I do not know what he said to him.

MILTON ROSEN, according to reports, is one of the national leaders of the Progressive Labor Movement and he resides in New York. An item in THE WORKER dated July 7, 1962, states that he was expelled from the Communist Party. He spoke in Gerrard Hall (on the campus) on December 3, 1962. Our records show that the building was reserved by the New Left Club, a student discussion group which was in existence at that time. An investigation of his appearance reveals that fourteen persons attended his talk including a photographer and a news reporter. The only adult in attendance except Milton Rosen was the head of the Americanism Committee of the local (Chapel Hill) Chapter of the American Legion. If Milton Rosen spoke in a manner forbidden by the 1941 Act, I have no information that any effort was made to bring charges against him. I have no information which would indicate that he would be found guilty of violating the 1941 Act.

The Chapel Hill Progressive Labor Club had eight or nine members. It was not recognized by the University. According to two of the former members of the Club, it ceased to function last May. Some effort has been made this Fall to reorganize the Club off the campus by a former student who flunked out a year ago. I have no information that the Club was successfully reorganized. In fact, the last I heard was that the "would be organizer" left town several weeks ago. A few weeks back I asked a former member of the Club why it disbanded last May and he replied that efforts to attract students to it were unsuccessful. The size of Milton Rosen's audience on December 3, 1962, is an illustration of what he had in mind.

(3) LANGSTON HUGHES. In the Spring of 1960 the Graduate English Club (Graduate Students in the Department of English) invited Langston Hughes, a well known Negro poet, to read and discuss poetry. He came and he discussed poetry and nothing else. He did not violate the 1941 Act and neither did the University officials.

So much for the "prominent examples" cited by Mr. Hoover Adams as violations of the 1941 statute. You further state:

"I have also heard that Gus Hall was scheduled to make an address on the campus this spring. Is this true: and, if so, what group was sponsoring his appearance."

I find no evidence that Gus Hall was or is to be invited to speak on this campus this school year. If your informant will provide me with specific information, I will be glad to pursue the matter further.

Another paragraph of your letter reads as follows:

"It was distressing to me that young Larry Phelps was permitted to speak, 'informally' or otherwise, at the University, even more so in the light of recent tragic events. Would you be kind enough to define for me an 'informal discussion' and under what circumstances they will be permitted in the future."

I am as concerned about Larry Phelps as you are. Of the 2,344 graduates last year he was the only one who took the forbidden trip to Cuba. I suppose by recent "tragic events," you refer to the murder of President Kennedy. Whatever the complicated facts which led the alleged killer to commit such a crime, it is clear that he was not the product of a college or university. Whatever the complicated facts which makes Larry Phelps think as he does, there is no evidence that he is a victim of the University's ignoring the 1941 Act or that he is a victim of any speaker who is banned by the 1963 Act.

Larry Phelps came to the campus from Monroe, where he now resides, recently but for his own reasons and without invitation to speak. He appeared in Everett Dormitory where he resided last year as a student. He was looking for a friend who was out. By chance another acquaintance saw him in the dormitory and inquired about the recent trip to Cuba which had been taken in violation of a State Department ban on travel to that country. Larry Phelps responded that he was in a hurry at the moment but he agreed to return to the dormitory latter in the evening and discuss the trip. The questioner then put a notice on the dormitory bulletin board that Phelps would be available later in the evening to discuss his trip. Phelps returned at the specified time and talked to a group of approximately twenty (20) boys. But you desire to know why this appearance was permitted? Was he a visiting speaker? Should he have been banned under the 1963 Act? If so, on what grounds? He took the Fifth Amendment. But did he take it under the conditions prescribed in the 1963 Act? Did he take the Fifth Amendment "with respect to a communist or subversive connections?" I am not certain that he is a forbidden speaker. Are you? Under the policy adopted by the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees on July 8, 1963, the "invitor" is responsible for enforcing the 1963 Act. Do you think the student who asked Phelps about his trip under the circumstances of this case should be disciplined for violating the 1963 Act? Suppose he were suspended by the University, do you feel reasonably certain that his suspension would stand up in court?

Hundreds of speakers come to the campus each year. And hundreds, perhaps thousands, appear on the campus and discuss their experiences in response to inquiries. Certainly I cannot assure you that I can keep any citizen from walking through our buildings (more than one hundred) and responding to questions posed by an individual or a group of individuals. It is an impossible assignment for any person. I can prevent Larry Phelps from speaking in one of our auditoriums but I cannot keep him off the campus any more than he can be prevented from visiting any other community or going into any public building in the State and talking informally.

You observe:

"My support of H. B. 1935 (1963 Act) continues not without realization of the numerous apparent problems administrators of the University may have seeing it is not violated. There will be confusion and there will be times in which it may seem that academic exchange will suffer."

The problems are not apparent but real. As I have stated many times, I believe in obeying all laws whether they be wise or unwise. We must not pick and choose. The consequences of doing otherwise would eventually result in anarchy. I will do everything in my power to enforce this and all laws. My performances, however, should be judged by one who puts himself in my place and not on the basis of a person's individual notion of who should be banned under the provisions of an extremely vaguely worded statute. It would not be in keeping for any true university to hear only those speakers who suited the notions of any single person or group. Obviously, I do not personally care for or subscribe to the beliefs of every speaker who comes to the campus; however, it does not at all follow that a speaker whose views I personally dislike, violates any law when they appear on the campus.

I sincerely hope that every person who is concerned about the security of the State will call upon all available resources of the State to help determine the extent of the evil. Only on this basis will it be possible to provide effective protection. The 1963 Legislation is not the answer. It injures our State far more than it protects.

We are both officials of the State of North Carolina. You are authorized to make public my full statement if you care to do so. I will feel free to do the same.

Finally, it obviously took more than a "minute" to answer your questions. In the event you desire to discuss these or any other matters further, I will be glad to meet you anywhere at any time at your convenience.

Sincerely yours,
W. B. Aycock
Chancellor

Chapel Hill Happy New Year

A View From The Village Voice

A New Kind Of Christmas In Chapel Hill

By David McReynolds
The Village Voice

(Greenwich Village, N. Y. C.)

Chapel Hill, North Carolina, is a small, quiet town hiding in the middle of the state, somewhere between Durham and Raleigh. It's only real industry is the University of North Carolina, and like many college towns, it is not easy to reach without a car. For one thing, the town isn't even listed on most maps. When, in New Orleans, I phoned Delta Airlines to ask their schedule of Service into Chapel Hill, the girl asked me to wait a moment and then she came back to announce, with a note of surprise in her voice, that there was no air service into Chapel Hill on any airline. Trains also shy from breaking the air of academic peace that pervades Chapel Hill, and as it turned out, the only way of getting into the town is by Trailways bus. And so it was that on December 8 I finally pulled into the Trailways bus depot.

Liberal Center

I was on the last lap of a month-long speaking tour of the South on behalf of the War Resisters League. I had experienced no difficulties of any kind anywhere on my trip—neither in Virginia, nor Georgia, nor in Florda, nor in Louisiana — and I hardly expected any excitement in Chapel Hill. The town is well known as a center of liberal thought (in the rural areas of North Carolina it is thought of as a hot bed of Communism), and the university that sustains the town's small population is known as one of the finest in the country, conjuring up in our minds names like Howard Odum and Frank Graham. It is, in many respects, a kind of oasis in the South, where white and Negro may meet for lunch in at least half the restaurants in town without eyebrows being raised.

Pat Cusick, the Southern Field Secretary of the Student Peace Union and a resident of Chapel Hill, had set up a full—but not too full—week of meetings for me at colleges in Durham, Raleigh, Greensboro, etc., and I looked forward to a quiet and relaxed final week of speaking before heading back to the sanctuary of New York.

First Chink

The first chink in this vision of a peaceful week was my getting jailed in Williamston, North Carolina, the day after I got to the State. (Williamston is a rural town, about 140 miles east of Chapel Hill.) Cusick had driven me out to see one of the few rural civil rights groups operating in the South. It was a rewarding experience, and I suppose it was worth the $100 bond and the night in jail that are the price of police harrassment of outsiders poking their noses into Williamston.

Pat Cusick and Van Cornelius, the young fellow whose car we had used to get to Williamston, stayed overnight in the Negro section, picked me up in the morning at the courthouse ( I was released as soon as bond came in from New York), and we hastened back to Chapel Hill. Cusick was due in court that afternoon for what we had expected to be a routine court appearance.

It proved to be non-routine: by Thursday night Cusick and two others were in jail for 30 days; by Friday night four others, including myself, were jailed briefly; on Saturday three more were in jail and refusing bail; on Sunday 20 more were jailed and half refused bail; by Sunday evening the Mayor had called for a parley with the civil rights group; and when I left on Monday morning, the civil rights group (headed up by CORE) was making plans for a new wave of arrests.

How can all this happen in charming Chapel Hill? What kind of liberal center of thought is it when close to 20 persons, some of them high school students face Christmas in jail?

Watt's Grill Employees Remove Demonstrator

The History

To answer this we have to go back several months, to July of this year, when there were 34 persons jailed in racial protests. Chapel Hill is, without question, a liberal center. That is to say, it is smug and self-righteous and so proud of the past that it has not really kept pace with the current situation. It has been so willing to live on the moral capital of men like Odum and Graham that it is now fearfully close to being morally bankrupt. The town, because it basically a college town, with local business all but totally dependent on the students and faculty, and because the university involved is an excellent one boasting a top-notch faculty, an unusually good student paper, and a fairly serious student body, is one of the few towns in the whole South where, in fact, any segregation at all is an anachronism, and where, without any state or federal laws, all segregation could be eliminated almost overnight. But the town (and university) tends to rest on its 50 per cent laurels—the town is about half desegregated.

But the better elements of the local white population and the handful of militants among the local Negroes feel that halfway is not even half good enough. And so, earlier this year, there were a number of "silent marches" of Negroes and whites through the tiny downtown business district, demanding passage by the city fathers of a public accommodations law. There were extensive face-to-face negotiations with businesses that continued to segregate. There were major boycott efforts lauched.

When the city fathers voted four-to-two against the public accommodations law, the silent marches turned into direct action, and led by Pat Cusick, on July 19 a large group sat in at the Merchant's Association (which had spearheaded the campaign against the law). A total of 34 persons were jailed in short order, the town was in an uproar, and the Mayor intervened to secure a truce; all demonstrators would be released, and the police and the Merchant's Association agreed not to prosecute; the students agreed to refrain from further demonstrations until August 1, while the Mayor sought to bring about voluntary desegregation.

Truce Broken

The Mayor, for his part, achieved nothing, nor is there any reason to believe he tried very hard to achieve anything. But the real shock was when the City Solicitor, over the genuine protests of the police and the Merchant's Association, broke the truce by proceeding to prosecute the cases. He won a conviction, and the cases were appealed to the County Court. In the meantime—because everyone knew the City Solicitor had acted on his own and not as an agent of the police or merchants, and because the students were leaving for summer jobs, etc., and because it was expected that the cases would be won on appeal — the protests were not renewed.

Then, on December 10, the first four cases were called up in the County Court. The defense attorney, Floyd McKissick (state chairman of CORE), moved that all the cases be postponed pending a decision on similar cases that were before the Supreme Court. Judge Carr agreed and urged the County Solicitor to accept a postponement. But, as an elected official in a county which (aside from the little enclave of Chapel Hill) would reward him for lack of good sense and of mercy, he proceeded to demand prosecution. Thus the routine court appearance of Tuesday, December 10, turned into a full-fledged trial taking three days.

Most of the time was taken up with selecting a jury—McKissick and the judge between them threw off so many prospective jurors for bias that a special venire of 40 additional jurors was called. On Thursday all four defendants were found guilty and fined $50 and court costs—or 30 days in jail. With the exception of Mrs. Christine Glover, whose son was seriously ill and who therefore paid her fine in order to nurse him, all the defendants chose jail. This meant they would be spending their Christmas holidays behind bars, and it was their hope that this sacrifice might move the smug hearts of Chapel Hill.

The three who chose jail are a mixed lot. The leader, Pat Cusick, is a husky white native of Alabama who gives every appearance of being a typical "redneck." As far as the town is concerned he is simply "red," having been the key figure in both the local peace and civil rights movements. Charlise Cotton, a high school student and an exceptionally beautiful girl, is the only Negro of the three. Mrs. Peter Van Riper is the young wife of a student at the university. She has all the poise and dignity of a well-bred Northerner with good looks as a bonus. She and her husband have been married less than a year—their first anniversary will be observed with Mrs. Van Riper in the county jail.

As soon as the trial began, it was clear my own week was loused up—Cusick was unable to confirm the various speaking dates, etc., while in court—so I was on hand for the full week to watch the gathering storm in this little bastion of Southern liberalism. As soon as word spread that three CORE members were spending Christmas in jail, a current of anger ran through the students involved in the local movement. A mass meeting was set for that Friday night, the night after Cusick, Cotton, and Van Riper were hauled off to jail. Before the mass meetings, two "hit and runs" were planned to put the town on notice that the summer truce was completely kaput and that Christmas would be a time of tension for all concerned.

(A "hit and run" involves sitting in at a segregated restaurant and then leaving when the police arrive—it is designed to test the issue without leading to arrests.)

My only way of getting a ride to the mass meeting from the house where I was staying was by going with one of the "hit and run" groups, and so I found myself, quite without meaning to, participating instead of observing.

Our group was headed by John Dunne, one of the local CORE leaders, and in addition to myself there were David Dansby, chairman of the campus NAACP, and Phyliss Timberlake, a local high school student. We drove out to the Pines, Chapel Hill's only elegant eatery, and walked in. The hostesss dashed over as soon as we got in the door and asked us to leave. Dunne didn't refuse, but he didn't leave. The manager, a Mr. Leroy Merritt, came on the scene. He exploded almost immediately: "We're segregated! Everybody in Chapel Hill knows we're segregated! You got to leave right now!" Dunne spoke quietly about how he had made a reservation by phone and hadn't been told Negroes wouldn't be served and, pointing to me, said I was a visiting speaker and he had planned to have me out for dinner at the best place in town, and now he was terribly embarrassed, etc.

Police Arrive

All this time the moral elite of Chapel Hill continued to come into the restaurant, walk by, and sit down to their dinners. And all this time Mr. Leroy Merritt got redder in the face and kept yelling, "You gotta get out of here!" Then he called the police. They arrived almost at once, with poor Mr. Leroy by now almost inarticulate and on the verge of apoplexy. (One of the police went over to him and suggested he stop shouting.)

The four of us were ushered out and, to our dismay, notified we would be arrested as soon as Mr. Leroy Merritt could get down to the station to sign the warrants. Would we be so kind as to come down to the station at 8 p.m. for arrest, by which time the warrants would be ready Yes, we would.

We got back in our car and headed for the mass meeting to let them know there was some unexpected difficulty. Since Dunne was the local leader, it was agreed that we would have to be bailed out. (Dunne will be jailed eventually—is probably in jail by now—but it is considered a tactical error for the key leaders all to land in jail at the beginning of the campaign. With Cusick already in for 30 days, it was felt that Dunne had to remain out until the very last moment.) Then, with bail arranged for, we dashed back to the police station for arrest. We learned that Mr. Leroy Merritt had only wanted to press charges against Dunne and me — both white — on the typical Southern ground that Dansby and Timberlake, being niggers, didn't really know what they were doing.

Bad Impression

The mass meeting had been a flop—only about 25 people showed up—but spirits were lifted somewhat by the arrest. For my part, I was a little irritated—I don't mind being arrested, but to be arrested twice in one week, both times by accident and both times in one of the more "liberal" Southern states, was giving me a bad impression of North Carolina. We were ushered into our cells, which were warm and clean. Dunne, who is a Northerner and who is terribly serious and terribly dedicated, had planned to write letter while in jail, but since we would be in for only a couple of hours, I thought that was being a bit too dramatic. So Dansby and I took Dunne's note pad, tore its pages into little rectangles, marked them for playing cards, distributed matches from our match books, and persuaded Dunne to settle down and play Blackjack with us. Matches with green heads counted 10 cents, matches with blue heads counted 5 cents, and matches with red heads counted a penny. Fortunately we weren't playing for money—I lost every match to Dansby.

'Rocking the Jail'

.. About 10 p.m. Phyllis Timberlake, who was housed a cell or two away, called out that there was singing outside. Sure enough, we could hear singing coming down the street. Pretty soon the whole jail was permeated with clapping of hands and singing as the group outside began to "rock the jail."

The mass meeting had broken up and walked down to jail through rain - soaked streets, bringing the bond with them. We were released almost at once and left the jail to shouts and cheers, and all of us stood around outside singing songs for a while before heading back to the Negro section of town. We walked through a chill drizzle, two by two, until we came to the CORE office where a brief closing meeting was held. The CORE office is a windy little affair, on top of a local funeral parlor and heated by a kerosene stove. We got inside, had a brief meeting, and then, since several of the Williamston leaders had come into town to see McKissick about their own legal problems, we decided to have a party. Beer was sent for, and we sang freedom songs until 2 a.m. when we finally closed down for fear of waking the dead down below us.

Three More

On Saturday three more arrests took place, and this time they followed the "official" pattern of going limp. All three refused bail, pledging themselves to remain in jail through Christmas (one of the three was forced out on bail through parental pressure). The cops of Chapel Hill, under Chief Blake, are basically decent and rate higher in their handling of these demonstrations than the New York cops. In fact, I think the cops of Chapel Hill have earned the right to be called police. Aside from a bit of banging heads against steel poles and pulling limp demonstrators by the ears (this occurred in the July arrests), the record of police brutality is minmal.

New Generation Offers A Challenge

Charles Thompson, a white University student, has been arrested on six counts on three different occasions with trespassing and resisting arrest during racial demonstrations at Chapel Hill. His mother, Mrs. Frank Thompson, wrote this dispatch for United Press International.

By MRS. FRANK THOMPSON
Written For UPI

GREENSBORO (UPI)—On Sunday night, Dec. 19, at midnight an official of the University of North Carolina called to tell me my son was in the Chapel Hill jail.

"This is not tragic news," he said, "but your son, Charles, was arrested, along with 19 others tonight and charged with trespassing and resisting arrest." He explained that a group of Negro and white youths entered a restaurant which does not serve Negroes. They were refused service, ordered out, but would not leave.

The spokesman informed me that the University neither condemns nor condones this action, but he was obligated to report on the arrest of a student. I thanked him and was sorry that his duties were pressing him into service so late at night—but I wanted to cry.

What could I do? It was late, dark and cold and Chapel Hill was 50 miles away. I knew about demonstrations, arrests for trespassing and resisting arrest, for Greensboro has been a center of Negro protests.

The Negroes—yes, but my boy is white. He can eat anywhere, with anyone, except Negroes. What was his cause?

My husband and I believe in equal rights under the law. We consider ourselves liberal . . . just nonparticipants. Lying down, sitting-in, marching, picketing, boycotting all appeared silly to me. Why be so dramatic, so sensational, so persistent and insistent? Singing, clapping, chanting and praying in the streets seemed so childish and undignified.

Why, oh why, should my son be involved in a mess like this?

I went back to bed—to get warm, to hide and cry in the dark. "Charles is in jail in Chapel Hill," I explained the call to his father.

Bail was set at $175 but I had no idea what to do about it. I couldn't sleep so I telephoned the police department at 1:30 a.m. A nice young man answered my questions in a very polite way. I didn't know what to ask except —Is the jail warm? Are there blankets? What about food and sanitary facilities?

"You mean he doesn't want to get out," I cried when the officer said Charles was among those refusng bail.

Charles did get out for Christmas. We didn't bail him out, belittle his efforts or his actions. I wanted to tell him to pursue his studies and forget the cause. To educate a son is an expensive process and we just cannot finance "the cause." I wanted to tell him we would lose friends by participating in the movement. I wanted to tell him he should take the middle of the road as we have done. But when it came time I couldn't say anything.

Charles has returned to Chapel Hill and was in jail again on New Year's Eve. Again I wondered if he was warm, hungry, uncomfortable . . . with or without a pillow. I was very sad and yet proud.

Even I am beginning to wonder if there really is some other way. Maybe he is right. I grew up in a little town down next to the South Carolina line and Negroes to my people were always just "niggers."

But Charles is a generation apart and maybe his mother's attitudes are dead wrong. Maybe I am just beginning to understand.

The Movement Holds A Mass Meeting In A Local Church

— New Kind —

meeting was finally held, with about 125 persons turning out to one of the Negro churches. Following a long walk through the freezing town, the meeting returned to the church, where 20 volunteers for arrest were briefed by Quentin Baker, a brilliant young student and head of the state-wide campus NAACP. Following the briefing on how to go limo, etc., the 20 piled into cars and headed for a local restaurant for arrest. By nightfall all were in jail, with half of the group pledging to remain in without bail. (Among those arrest was a young white co-ed from the university whose parents called her from New Jersey to read the riot act about the "no bail" business. She read them a riot act of her own and hung up.)

By Sunday evening the Mayor had called the CORE office to ask for negotiations on Monday.

I had to leave town Monday morning, the 16th, but as I left CORE had planned further arrests before the negotiations meeting that evening, and the jail had already been over-filled.

Tragic Facts

I do not know the outcome of the negotiations, whether the students will stand firm or be outmaneuvered by the Mayor. But I do know that in a brief week when the peace of Chapel Hill was shattered after months of truce, several tragic facts stand out.

The other disturbing problem, which one confronts again and again in the South, is the silence of much of the Negro church. Not one Negro pastor in Chapel Hill has done more than loan his church to CORE. The pastors seem willing to let the children of the congregation go to prison. By and large this is also the attitude of the Negro community. It was said, quite some time ago, that a "little child shall lead them," but it does seem to me that if the children must lead at least the adults can follow. It is disturbing aslo to find how many of the students at the university—a clear majority—feel unmoved by the issue and perfectly prepared to patronize segregation. This goes as well for the majority of the faculty.

The final note on Chapel Hill is, however, optimistic. The realization by white students at the University that any remaining segregation in Chapel Hill is a shame and a reproach to the whole town, including to every white, the realization that the struggle is not simply to free the Negro but also to free the white, gives one reason to rejoice. This Christmas all the best people in Chapel Hill are in jail. One may regret there are not more in jail, but one aslo knows that towns and cities and whole cultures are changed, transformed, and saved through the willingness of the few to suffer and to endure.

Tar Heels Shoot Down Jr. Birdmen, 35-0

It Was A Sweet, Sweet Victory After A 35-0 Victory Over Air Force

We Gathered In Jacksonville December 28 . . .

'A Raging Bull And Two Icemen'

Text By Hugh Stevens

Photos By Jim Wallace

To Meet The Falcons . . .

They did it.

The Tar Heels—our incredible, unbelievable, impossible Tar Heels—did it. They went to the Gator Bowl and pulverized the Air Force.

Under a pale but warm Florida sun, with thousands of screaming Carolinians roaring approval in the stands, and other thousands going wild before their TV sets, the glorious Tar Heels plucked the Falcons clean—right down to the pin feathers.

Led by a rampaging, unstoppable bull named Ken Willard and two quarterbacks with ice water in their veins named Junior Edge and Gary Black, they turned what was billed as a close battle into a 35-0 shambles. And even that marvelous score doesn't describe the Tar Heel might.

"They could've scored 50," the fans said. Perhaps, but remember that the third team played a large portion of the second half, and besides, it seems almost un-American to clobber one's own Air Force that badly.

Indeed, though, there were times when it looked as if Carolina could score a million. It was supposed to be a contest, but anybody who called it that after the opening minutes wasn't paying attentionto the massacre occuring on the Jacksonville turf.

It was just prior to gametime that the Air Force made their first big mistake—they showed up. Shortly thereafter, they made their outstanding move of the day when they won the toss and chose to receive.

The game began in a rather mild fashion, with the Tar Heels unable to turn an Air Force fumble into a threat, followed by an exchange of punts. But then, with the football resting on the UNC 23 yard line, Jim Hickey turned loose a mass of muscle (Willard) and one of his Icemen (Edge), and the Heels began to sizzle.

With plenty of aid from the vicious Carolina line, Willard slammed around left end for 12 yards, and two plays later Edge calmly tossed 11 yards to John Hammett for a first down on the Carolina 47.

Willard slashed off right guard, turned left at the first white uniform, and steamed his way 24 yards to the Falcon 28, bringing the Tar Heel faithful leaping to their feet. Edge showed his stuff with a ten-yard rollout for a first down at the 18, and two plays later the dust lifted to reveal Willard with the ball at the seven.

He was just getting warmed up. The Big Bull carried the next four downs over, under, around, and through the tenacious Falcon line, smashing into the end zone on the last try. The placement attempt missed, and UNC led 6-0 with 2:34 left in the first quarter.

It was already beginning to look like Carolina's day.

The Falcons came right back to launch their most successful drive of the afternoon. They actually made it as far as the UNC 16, but then Terry Isaacson, the Air Force quarterback, launched a misguided missle. Speedy Ronnie Jackson cut in front of the intended receiver at the ten, nimbly plucked the ball from his fingertips, and dashed to the Carolina 32.

Three passes and a penalty later, the ball lay at the Air Force 22. Ponderous Eddie Kesler carried twice to the 11, and then Willard waded through to the six. Edge started a roll-out to the right, cut back, and squirmed into the end zone. The two-point conversion attempt failed, and with 9:40 remaining in the half, it was 12-0, Carolina.

In the stands, the Tar Heel supporters roared.

There was more to come before the half ended. When the Air Force attack (if that's the proper word) stalled, Isaacson punted to the Carolina 34. Eight plays later, the Tar Heels had another touchdown.

By this time, the second Iceman (Black) was in the game, and he was cool as the proverbial cucumber as he ran eight yards, then hit Willard for a first down at the Air Force 44. Willard got seven more, and Black fired to Joe Robinson at the 22, where a penalty moved the ball to the 11. Black ran once to the five, then threaded a needle to hit Robinson in the end zone. He repeated the performance for the two-point conversion, and Carolina led 20-0.

The fans roared even louder.

The Jr. Birdmen managed to drive to the UNC 26 before the half ended, but were stopped when Edge picked off another Isaacson pass at the two yard line.

The Falcons managed to kick off without a mishap to start the second half, and after an exchange of punts the Tar Heels moved again. Willard again led the drive as Carolina crunched its way down the field. He had runs of seven, ten, and seven yards, and Edge chipped in scampers of nine and four yards to put the ball on the two. Kesler needed just two smashes to take it over from there. Edge threw to All-American Bob Lacey for the two points, and UNC took a 28-0 lead with 4:44 left in the third stanza.

In the South Stands, the hoarse and jubilant North Carolinians began to devise schemes to grab the brand new white goal posts that adorned the field.

The Heels stopped an Air Force thrust at the Carolina 41 with a couple of minutes remaining in the third quarter. Black completed his fourth consecutive pass, throwing 12 yards to Lacey for a first down. Two plays later Frank Bowman broke right guard for 26 yards and a first down at the 18 as the quarter ended.

Black connected on number five, a tackle - eligible pass to Gene Sigmon good for 19 yards.

Despite a 15-yard penalty, the Tar Heels managed to score as Black passed 17 yards to Lacey at the six and then circled left end for the touchdown. Chapman kicked the point, and it was all over but the shouting.

Strange numbers and names began to appear in the UNC lineup, and the third team simply tied a ribbon around the package. Isaacson gave a few futile attempts at passing and was replaced by Al McArtor, who did little better.

But along the sidelines, the Tar Heel fans massed, ready to cover the field with a surge of humanity at the end of the game. They cheered, they screamed, they roared. They would have elected Jim Hickey governor, Man of the Year, or Santa Claus. And when the gun finally sounded, they mobbed their Heels—shaking hands, pounding backs, or just shouting.

In the dressing room, Hickey said it was "great" to win Carolina's first bowl victory. "Willard was tremendous," he said. But he pointed to others, including Edge and Black and Chris Hamburger, a terror at his linebacking post. He paid tribute to the entire Tar Heel forward wall, a line that had slashed the smaller Air Force to shreds, allowing Tar Heel backs to pile up 251 yards.

Outside, the crowd lingered, cheering and shouting even as dusk crept over the Gator Bowl, emptied now of its 50,018 spectators.

In the Air Force quarters, Coach Ben Martin said forlornly, "We just couldn't get going."

High up in the huge press box, the writers voted Willard (94 yards in 18 carries) the game's outstanding performer, then turned to their typewriters to pound out the tale of the slaughter.

One writer remarked, "You know, when that big Willard ran by me down on the sidelines, I swear it seemed like the earth shook a little."

Nobody said he was crazy.

'A Raging Bull And Two Icemen'

To Meet The Falcons . . .

To Its First Bowl Victory . . .

They did it.

The Tar Heels—our incredible, unbelievable, impossible Tar Heels—did it. They went to the Gator Bowl and pulverized the Air Force.

Under a pale but warm Florida sun, with thousands of screaming Carolinians roaring approval in the stands, and other thousands going wild before their TV sets, the glorious Tar Heels plucked the Falcons clean—right down to the pin feathers.

Led by a rampaging, unstoppable bull named Ken Willard and two quarterbacks with ice water in their veins named Junior Edge and Gary Black, they turned what was billed as a close battle into a 35-0 shambles. And even that marvelous score doesn't describe the Tar Heel might.

"They could've scored 50," the fans said. Perhaps, but remember that the third team played a large portion of the second half, and besides, it seems almost un-American to clobber one's own Air Force that badly.

Indeed, though, there were times when it looked as if Carolina could score a million. It was supposed to be a contest, but anybody who called it that after the opening minutes wasn't paying attentionto the massacre occuring on the Jacksonville turf.

It was just prior to gametime that the Air Force made their first big mistake—they showed up. Shortly thereafter, they made their outstanding move of the day when they won the toss and chose to receive.

The game began in a rather mild fashion, with the Tar Heels unable to turn an Air Force fumble into a threat, followed by an exchange of punts. But then, with the football resting on the UNC 23 yard line, Jim Hickey turned loose a mass of muscle (Willard) and one of his Icemen (Edge), and the Heels began to sizzle.

With plenty of aid from the vicious Carolina line, Willard slammed around left end for 12 yards, and two plays later Edge calmly tossed 11 yards to John Hammett for a first down on the Carolina 47.

Willard slashed off right guard, turned left at the first white uniform, and steamed his way 24 yards to the Falcon 28, bringing the Tar Heel faithful leaping to their feet. Edge showed his stuff with a ten-yard rollout for a first down at the 18, and two plays later the dust lifted to reveal Willard with the ball at the seven.

He was just getting warmed up. The Big Bull carried the next four downs over, under, around, and through the tenacious Falcon line, smashing into the end zone on the last try. The placement attempt missed, and UNC led 6-0 with 2:34 left in the first quarter.

It was already beginning to look like Carolina's day.

The Falcons came right back to launch their most successful drive of the afternoon. They actually made it as far as the UNC 16, but then Terry Isaacson, the Air Force quarterback, launched a misguided missle. Speedy Ronnie Jackson cut in front of the intended receiver at the ten, nimbly plucked the ball from his fingertips, and dashed to the Carolina 32.

Three passes and a penalty later, the ball lay at the Air Force 22. Ponderous Eddie Kesler carried twice to the 11, and then Willard waded through to the six. Edge started a roll-out to the right, cut back, and squirmed into the end zone. The two-point conversion attempt failed, and with 9:40 remaining in the half, it was 12-0, Carolina.

In the stands, the Tar Heel supporters roared.

There was more to come before the half ended. When the Air Force attack (if that's the proper word) stalled, Isaacson punted to the Carolina 34. Eight plays later, the Tar Heels had another touchdown.

By this time, the second Iceman (Black) was in the game, and he was cool as the proverbial cucumber as he ran eight yards, then hit Willard for a first down at the Air Force 44. Willard got seven more, and Black fired to Joe Robinson at the 22, where a penalty moved the ball to the 11. Black ran once to the five, then threaded a needle to hit Robinson in the end zone. He repeated the performance for the two-point conversion, and Carolina led 20-0.

The fans roared even louder.

The Jr. Birdmen managed to drive to the UNC 26 before the half ended, but were stopped when Edge picked off another Isaacson pass at the two yard line.

The Falcons managed to kick off without a mishap to start the second half, and after an exchange of punts the Tar Heels moved again. Willard again led the drive as Carolina crunched its way down the field. He had runs of seven, ten, and seven yards, and Edge chipped in scampers of nine and four yards to put the ball on the two. Kesler needed just two smashes to take it over from there. Edge threw to All-American Bob Lacey for the two points, and UNC took a 28-0 lead with 4:44 left in the third stanza.

In the South Stands, the hoarse and jubilant North Carolinians began to devise schemes to grab the brand new white goal posts that adorned the field.

The Heels stopped an Air Force thrust at the Carolina 41 with a couple of minutes remaining in the third quarter. Black completed his fourth consecutive pass, throwing 12 yards to Lacey for a first down. Two plays later Frank Bowman broke right guard for 26 yards and a first down at the 13 as the quarter ended.

Black connected on number five, a tackle-eligible pass to Gene Sigmon good for 19 yards.

Despite a 15-yard penalty, the Tar Heels managed to score as Black passed 17 yards to Lacey at the six and then circled left end for the touchdown. Chapman kicked the point, and it was all over but the shouting.

Strange numbers and names began to appear in the UNC lineup, and the third team simply tied a ribbon around the package. Isaacson gave a few futile attempts at passing and was replaced by Al McArtor, who did little better.

But along the sidelines, the Tar Heel fans massed, ready to cover the field with a surge of humanity at the end of the game. They cheered, they screamed, they roared. They would have elected Jim Hickey governor, Man of the Year, or Santa Claus. And when the gun finally sounded, they mobbed their Heels—shaking hands, pounding backs, or just shouting.

In the dressing room, Hickey said it was "great" to win Carolina's first bowl victory. "Willard was tremendous," he said. But he pointed to others, including Edge and Black and Chris Hanburger, a terror at his linebacking post. He paid tribute to the entire Tar Heel forward wall, a line that had slashed the smaller Air Force to shreds, allowing Tar Heel backs to pile up 251 yards.

Outside, the crowd lingered, cheering and shouting even as dusk crept over the Gator Bowl, emptied now of its 50,018 spectators.

In the Air Force quarters, Coach Ben Martin said forlornly, "We just couldn't get going."

High up in the huge press box, the writers voted Willard (94 yards in 18 carries) the game's outstanding performer, then turned to their typewriters to pound out the tale of the slaughter.

One writer remarked, "You know, when that big Willard ran by me down on the sidelines, I swear it seemed like the earth shook a little."

Nobody said he was crazy.

THE CRUCIAL WEEK

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Saturday night was a good night and a bad night for Coach Dean Smith and his North Carolina basketball team, but fortunately it was more good than bad.

Playing perhaps their best ball of the season in the first half, the Tar Heels ran-ran-ran to a 47-23 intermission margin over Notre Dame and 8,187 Greensboro spectators sat back and began the debate. Would ACC champion Duke be able to hold off the Tar Heels next Saturday in Durham?

When the UNC cagers returned for the second half they may have been thinking about Duke too, because they were cold-cold-cold as they watched the Irish cut the difference to seven points before time finally ran out on a 78-68 Carolina victory.

"No, we weren't thinking about Duke," said Smith in his office Monday afternoon. "But we were playing passive basketball. We were waiting and hoping and that's something you can't do in basketball. You must always be on the offensive."

Smith, at the same time, felt the cause of the difference between the first and second halves was simple to Notre Dame.

"They came out and played much more aggressively under the boards. Also their little guard Larry Sheffield started hitting on those driving shots of his. He's one of the best offensive guards in the country."

Overall, Smith was pleased with his team's performance Saturday night and he takes his team into what could easily be the most important week of the season with a great deal of optimism. The week begins Thursday night at Winston-Salem—Wake Forest. Saturday afternoon the Tar Heels visit Durham—Duke.

"We always take them one at a time," said Smith, "and right now we're thinking only about Wake. But of course we realize Duke is coming up too. I'd say we must win one of these two to stay in the ACC race and we hope we can take both of them."

The soft-spoken coach also mentioned something about how he wishes one of these two big games were to be played at home, and this is readily understandable. Duke and Wake Forest put together have only lost only three games on their home court in the last three seasons—and the Deacons, incidentally, lost all three of them.

"We feel the home court is worth almost ten points in many games," said Smith. "You'll notice most of your big upsets come when the favored team is on the road."

At Winston-Salem Thursday night the favored team will be on the road—the Tar Heels. Though they have not beaten the Deacs in the last five meetings, the Tar Heels must be considered the stronger of the two teams this year. Through the graduation of Bob Woollard, Wake has lost much of the rebounding strength which gave them three narrow wins over UNC last year.

At Durham Saturday afternoon the favored team will be at home, and Duke, even without Art Heyman, still is the team to beat in this conference. An improved defense and that home court advantage will make Duke a tough nut to crack in this crucial week in which something has to break.

Matmen Travel To Virginia

It was back to work immediately for North Carolina's wrestling team as the Tar Heel matmen left Monday for a two-day road trip through Virginia.

Coach Sam Barnes' grapplers, who lost to Washington & Lee and beat Davidson before the holidays, faced VMI last night at Lexington and meet Virginia today at Charlottesville.

This weekend the team will participate in a four-school meet at Blacksburg, Va. The Saturday event features VPI, Ohio State and N. C. State as well as the Tar Heels.

Meanwhile, Coach Pat Earey's swimmers are enjoying a relatively easy week in preparation for a busy schedule which begins Saturday with a home meet against VPI. Home meets with Wake Forest (Wednesday) and East Carolina (Thursday) follow next week.

Distribution of student and faculty basketball tickets for the next three home games began at the Woollen Gym box office yesterday and will continue on a first-come, first-serve basis until the supply is exhausted. You can pick up tickets to all three games at the same time. The games are: Maryland (Jan. 13), N. C. State (Jan. 15) and VPI (Jan. 18). Both the Wake Forest and Duke away games this week are already sell-outs.

Must Explore All Areas Of Learning At UNC — Friday

CUNC President Blasts Gag Law

By EVE HIGGINS

President William C. Friday slammed factors opposing freedom of a University to explore all areas of learning Monday night on WUNC-TV's "Encounter."

"Freedom of discussion is essential to the progress of the state, as is free and open debate on both sides of a question," Friday said.

"In order to develop the kind of leadership our state must have, the University must develop and train useful, responsible members of our society and our democracy."

Answering questions posed by WUNC-TV's Dr. John Clayton, Friday discussed the purposes, projects and problems of the University.

In discussing the value of a University, Friday pointed out that only one of the functions of a university is to teach students. It is concerned also with the growth and development of the community and the well-being of the state.

Long known for its traditions of liberalism, the University's policy has been challenged many times, especially in recent months. Friday brought out four points which he made in the October meeting of University trustees.

First, the University does not desire to have people speak who use its platforms to advocate the overthrow of the government by use of violence or force or both.

Secondly, no member of the Communist Party would be knowingly employed as a member of the teaching faculty or staff of the University. A man with such

Need A Job? Try County Commission!

Can't Find Man For Medical Examiner

Having waged a 15-year battle for a county medical examiner, the Orange-Durham County Medical Association is having trouble finding a man to take the pob.

The County Board of Commissioners finally approved the plan to replace the coroner with a medical examiner last July. Money for the plan was written into the budget.

A committee to appoint a medical examiner and his deputies was set up by the Medical Association in October. It has met every week since then, according to Dr. Erle E. Peacock, a committee member, but has not found a man.

Now the commissioners are upset that the doctors have not done the job.

Controversy has arisen over the coroner system in the recent autopsy done in the Rinaldi murder case.

Board Chairman Donald Stanford talked to several doctors to try to get them to take the job earlier this fall. But members of the Medical Association felt the commissioners should have nothing to do with the selection of the examiner and asked them to keep out of it.

"It's not their job," Dr. Peacock said. "It's up to the doctors now."

The Medical Association is supposed to select the new examiner who must then be approved by the State Health Department.

A medical examiner has legal immunity while a coroner does not. This means that he may order an autopsy without the fear of being sued, as in cases where murder is suspected.

In the Rinaldi case, a private autopsy was performed.

"We have a number of people who have agreed to be deputies," Dr. Peacock said. "And we think we finally have someone who will take the job of medical examiner."

The fee paid to the medical examiner will be a nominal one. The job is considered primarily as a public service, Dr. Peacock said.

Negro To Join Fowler's Staff

An apparent lull in anti-segregation protests followed Monday's announcement that a local food store planned to hire a Negro as a part-time emplyee.

Some 239 arrests have been made since demonstrations resumed Dec. 13. There were no arrests Monday or Tuesday.

An announcement by officials of Fowler's Food Store on West Franklin St. indicated the store would hire a Negro high school student to fill its next opening.

The store had been the scene of four days of picketing last week by the local chapter of CORE who charged the store had a discriminatory hiring policy. CORE officials said the store refused to hire the Negro employees on the basis of color.

Manager Vance Hogan said yesterday Fowler's already had three Negroes on the payroll in part-time jobs and had no specific hiring policy. He noted that applicants for spare time jobs were usually University students who needed extra money.

A list of five Negro candidates is expected to be given to Hogan next week by H. D. Smith of Lincoln High.

Trial of 36 persons involved in 56 cases stemming from racial demonstrations were transferred Tuesday to Orange County Superior Court. A motion for jury trial was granted by Recorder's Court Judge William S. Stewart. Trial is expected during the Hillsboro Court's February term.

The 36 were charged with trespassing and resisting arrest during the wave of sit-in demonstrations since early December. Many of those arrested have been jailed several times.

Sit-in demonstrations have been held at Watt's Restaurant, The Pines, The Rock Pile and Brady's in the last few days, and recent demonstrations have been marked with violence.

Last week several demonstrators were sent to Memorial Hospital with burns from being sprayed with ammonia, and several were treated for cuts and bruises.

In another incident, a waitress at Watt's urinated on a demonstrator.

State Officials To Attend SP Anniversary

Fleishman Heads List Of Guests

Several of the state's top officials are expected to attend the 25th Anniversary banquet of the Student Party Saturday night.

Joel Fleishman, Legal Advisor to Governor Sanford; Tom Lambeth, Sanford's Administrative Assistant; and John Sanders, director of the Institute of Government have indicated that they will attend. Dean C. L. Cathey of UNC also will attend.

All were active in the SP while students.

The banquet will be held in the Pine Room of the Carolina Inn starting at 6 p.m. Paul Dickson, Student Party chairman, said yesterday that tickets are still available for the banquet at $2.25 per plate.

Anyone desiring reservations can call Dickson at 968-9170 or Martin Lancaster at 968-9140.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Goldwater Pleased On N. H. Visit

CONCORD, N. H. (UPI—Sen. Barry Goldwater made a political sounding in bellweather New Hampshire Tuesday and said he has not lost any support since the assassination of President Kennedy.

"The picture hasn't changed," he said.

Goldwater told newsmen during a street-corner press conference behind the state house that he was "quite pleased" with the reaction his first tour in New Hampshire has brought.

There had been speculation that the Arizona conservative had lost support since President Johnson assumed the presidency.

"It's hard to sit out West in a hospital and judge how this anti-Goldwater sentiment is going and what effect it has. I'm convinced it's had little effect," he said.

Goldwater made the remarks after speaking to 15 Republican state senators who were meeting with Senate President Philip S. Dunlap. He said he had "picked up Sen. Dunlap" as a supporter.

Cultural Negotiations Resume In Moscow

MOSCOW (UPI)—Soviet negotiations on a new two-year cultural exchange agreement were resumed Tuesday with a plea by U. S. Ambassador Foy D. Kohler that a "more normal flow of information and persons" be allowed in the Soviet Union.

"It would be misleading not to say frankly that the exchange program as it is now conceived is limited in both scope and movements and has its definite shortcomings," Kohler told Soviet delegation chief Sergei K. Romankovsky. ". . . We look forward as our goal to a more normal flow of information and persons."

Ralph Scott Nixes Governor Bid

RALEIGH—Youthful Ralph W. Scott, already a political veteran at 34, yesterday announced that he would not be a candidate for governor this year.

The Haw River native, former Master of the North Carolina Grange, made his announcement at a 3 p.m. press conference in the Carolina Hotel in Raleigh.

Scott indicated that he would make a statement in the next two weeks regarding his plans for the future, and there has been speculation that he would pass up the gubernatorial race this year to run for Congress. He resigned his Grange post earlier in the year in order to test the political climate around the state before deciding.

He is the son of the late Gov. and Senator Kerr Scott.

Romney—"Come And Get Me"

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Gov. George Romney of Michigan virtually invited the Republicans Tuesday to run him for President but denied again that he would be an active candidate for the nomination.

In a speech before the National Press Club, he made clear that he is available for the nomination and expressed doubt that he could pull out of the Oregon presidential primary if he should be entered.

Dorm Social Life Is Topic Of Bill

By HUGH STEVENS

The SG Residence Hall Improvements Committee will ask Student Legislature for $2,500 Thursday night to start a "pilot project" for social room renovations.

Don Carson, committee co-chairman, said yesterday that the project is designed to be the first step toward general improvement of all dorm social facilities.

"In the past, the University has hesitated to spend money for social room decoration because they feel the students won't take care of the facilities," he said.

"The committee is of the opinion that a first-class social room would be properly cared for, and we hope to prove it with this project."

Carson indicated that the University has stated a willingness to use its own money to carry out further improvements if the "pilot project" is successful.

He added that a site for the project had been tentatively selected.

"We intend to provide the finest possible furnishings and decoration for the project," Carson said. "We have enlisted the aid of Louise Ingram, the purchasing agent for the University in charge of interior decoration."

The bill to be submitted to the legislature asks that the funds be appropriated from the General Fund.

"We certainly hope that this matter will be approved by the legislature, for we have found the current facilities to be very inadequate," Carson concluded.

"We think that the students will make a special effort to take care of nicer facilities. If we can show that they will, it will be an important step toward achieving better social facilities."

HAVE A DRINK?

The National Institute of Mental Health has approved a new two-year grant of $34,000 to the University to continue a study of experimental alcoholism.

Dr. Fred W. Ellis, associate professor of pharmacology at the UNC School of Medicine, is in charge of the research project.

Coroner Has No Comment On Autopsy

Walker Clams Up On Rinaldi Case

Orange County Coroner Allen Walker Jr. is again at the center of a controversy over the Rinaldi murder case.

Statements attributed to him Monday led Orange County Commissioners to reject a request that the county reimburse Frank Rinaldi for the cost of an autopsy performed on his murdered wife.

Walker yesterday declined to comment on the matter, and Rinaldi's attorney confirmed statements he made early in the investigation which challenge Walker's account of how the autopsy came to be performed.

The findings of the autopsy, authorized and paid for by Rinaldi, a 34-year-old UNC graduate student, played a major role in dismissal of a murder charge against him Dec. 31.

Reimbursement of the $150 fee was requested in a letter to the Commissioners from J. R. Gaskin, UNC English professor.

The board declined to act on the request after Col. George Levings, county attorney, said Walker was in the process of ordering an autopsy when Rinaldi contracted privately for the autopsy.

After the Commissioners' meeting Monday, Levings talked with Walker again. He quoted Walker as saying that after the discovery of Mrs. Rinaldi's body, he obtained the written consent of Rinaldi and his attorney, Barry Winston, to have a county-paid autopsy performed.

"Apparently though," Levings said, "the private request was made anyway in advance of the coroner's request."

Winston declined to comment directly on Walker's reported statements to Levings, but he agreed to repeat his version of the autopsy controversy.

"Walker asked me if we wanted an autopsy," Winston said. "After conferring with my client, I said yes. Walker then typed up an authorization on a Police Department typewriter and brought it back to us. Mr. Rinaldi signed it and that is the only request for an atopsy that was made by us. As far as I know it's the only request that was made by anyone.

"Fifteen minutes later," Winston continued, "Walker informed me that my client would have to pay the $150 fee or there would be no autopsy. So Mr. Rinaldi made out a check for that amount."

Walker became embroiled in a controversy at the outset of the

Association Takes No Official Position

By GARY BLANCHARD

The professional organization of the nation's physicists has postponed plans to hold a national meeting jointly at UNC and Duke in 1965 as a result of the Gag Law.

Dr. Eugen Merzbacher, UNC physics professor and local coordinator of the planned meeting of the American Physical Society, said passage of the law led to the group's Executive Council reviewing its meeting plans and deciding to postpone coming here until 1966.

Merzbacher said the society did not mention the law as the reason for its change in plans, but if the law had not been passed, he said, "it seems certain that the meeting would have been held as planned."

About 1500 physicists had planned to attend the meeting, Merzbacher said.

After the law was passed, Duke offered to host the meeting alone if the Society had reservations about holding sessions in Chapel Hill as planned.

Merzbacher said the society has not taken a position on the Gag Law, which bars known Communists or persons who have pleaded the Fifth Amendment in loyalty cases from speaking on the campuses of state-supported schools.

"However," Merzbacher said, "as hosts to the planned meeting, I and my colleagues hope that by 1966 the Gag Law will be repealed. That would remove any obstacles which now stand in the way of unhindered communication between scientists."

The next General Assembly meets in 1965. The three major gubernatorial candidates have called for the law to be clari-

Reds Can Speak At N. Y. Schools

The interests of academic freedom make it permissable for avowed Communists to speak at the New York State University, an appeals court held unanimously in a recent decision.

"The tradition of our great society has been to allow our universities . . . to explore and expose their students to controversial issues without government interference," the Appellate Division for the 3rd Judicial Department in Albany, N. Y., said in the precedent-making decision.

The court overruled a lower-court opinion that has kept Dr. Herbert Aptheker from speaking at the University of Buffalo, a unit of the State University of New York.

A student association had invited Aptheker, a member of the National Committee of the Communist Party, to give the final lecture in a series on political ideologies.

William Egan of Ballston Lake, an attorney and Democratic candidate for Congress at the time, filed a suit to bar Aptheker's appearance.

Justice Russell G. Hunt of State Supreme Court, the lowest state court, held that use of state-owned facilities for "expounding a subversive doctrine to a student body on campus" was contrary to state policy.

The appellate division said that no contentions had been made that "Dr. Aptheker advocates, has advocated or will advocate at the lecture in question the forcible overthrow of our government as any more than an abstract doctrine."

The court noted that there was no specific law to cover the case before it. Without express legislative direction, the opinion said the court "cannot find such abstract advocacy to be against the law of this state."

Attorneys for Egan said they would have to study the Appellate Division decision before deciding whether to carry the case to the state's highest court, the Court of Appeals.

SP Chooses Paul Dickson As New Boss

Lancaster Named As Vice-Chairman

Paul Dickson, a sophomore from Raeford, has been elected the new chairman of the Student Party.

Dickson succeeded outgoing chairman Neal Jackson in elections held just before the vacation. He pledged "a new and closer organization" for the party during the coming year.

In other party elections, Martin Lancaster was chosen vice-chairman and Baxter Linney of Ruffin Hall was elected to fill a vacant seat in legislature.

New members of the SP Advisory Board elected were Lanny Shuff, Frank Hodges and Larry Ford.

'Little Federal' Plan Goes To Polls Tuesday

News Analysis

By FRED SEELY

The final stage of the North Carolina redistricting controversy goes to the voters next Tuesday, climaxing some seven months of feudin', fussin' and fightin'.

Maybe.

For if the proposed "little federal" plan should pass, our General Assembly would be back where it started and under mandate from the voters to find another way to redistrict the State Senate. If it fails, everything stays as is.

The battle started in the General Assembly at the first of the summer, was pushed aside for most of the session and finally was acted upon in a special session in October. But the battle didn't end there, and next Tuesday the voters will go to the polls to weigh the merits of the "little federal" plan.

So what's it all about? How will everything be changed?

HOUSE . . . The house was reapportioned in 1961, and now has 120 members. Of these, each of the 100 counties has one, with the remainder apportioned on a population basis to 12 counties—Alamance, Buncombe, Cumberland, Durham, Forsyth, Gaston, Guilford, Mecklenburg, Onslow, Robeson, Rowan and Wake.

If the amendment passes, the House will be reduced to 100 members, one per county. It is conceivable that the House could be placed in the control of 19 percent of the population of the state. The reorganization would apply to the 1967 House.

SENATE . . . The Senate was redistricted by the Special Session this fall with no change in size. That body now has 50 members, and would be increased by 20 if the amendment passes. The amendment also states that the number of inhabitants for each Senator's district would not vary more than 25 per cent from the state average per Senator.

At the present time, the average variation from the state average per Senator is not more than 10 per cent. Ideally, each Senator should represent 91,123 people. Here, 36 of the state's 100 counties, having 54 per cent of the population, hold 52 per cent of the Senate seats.

ARGUMENTS . . . The arguments for the "little federal" plan center around the fact that it would duplicate the national arrangement—that is, the North Carolina General Assembly would be similar to the United States Congress. The smaller counties would have enough protection to ward off power-grabbing attempts by the larger counties.

Opponents of the plan cite the fact that the arrangement of the U. S. Congress was concerned with protection of states, and there is a distinct difference in the political value of the two.

States, say the opponents of the measure, were originally sovereign and came together to form the Union. Congress, the ruling body of the Union, cannot reorganize states or create new states out of those now in existence. In addition, states perform many separate and distinct services.

On the other hand, counties are creations of the state government and the General Assembly can reorganize them at its discretion. Counties perform very few services for their inhabitants, as witnessed by the relative smallness of county taxes.

Another argument for the amendment is that there are two separate majorities—geographical and population — and both should be solved. In North Carolina, there is no protection against a "run-away" legislature (this is the only state in which the Governor does not have the veto power) and the larger counties could easily railroad legislation through which would be unfair to the less populated areas.

Opponents refute this on the same grounds they refute the county-state relationship — counties are completely subservient to the state and have no power within themselves as far as statewide policy decisions are concerned.

They also believe that if the General Assembly were to be organized under the "little federal" plan, then the whole state would be liable to extreme gerrymandering, that is, it could be redistricted so as to reduce the effectiveness of an "unworthy" minority.

If the amendment passes, it will probably have to face a court trial. Several other states have redistricted in much the same manner proposed by the "little federal" plan, and every time the courts have declared it unconstitutional.

Proponents of the plan cite statistics in defense of the measure's constitutionality. For instance, Mecklenburg County, the state's largest, now has 6.2 per cent of the votes in the General Assembly. Under the "little federal" plan, it would have 6.7 per cent. Guilford County, the next largest, would increase its power from 5.3 per cent to 6.7.

As for the opposition's statement that the state could be controlled by 19 per cent of the populace, supporters point out that the United States could be controlled by 17.5 per cent of the populace.

"And how many instances can you think of in which the smaller states have banded together?", they ask.

Opponents are concerned about the procedure of redistricting the Senate in 1965 if the amendment passes. If the Legislature fails to redistrict the Senate, as it almost did not during the past session, then the amendment provides for a five-man commission composed of the president of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, an appointee of each and an appointee of the governor to do the job.

As one representative commented, "I am unwilling to let a fundamental democratic principle be given to the power of a five-man commission."

Another point cited by the amendment's supporters is the state's diversity, ranging from the fishing industry on the coast to the lumber industry in the mountains, from the mills of the Piedmont to the farm lands of the state. Each group should have equal representation, they say, and thus would be able to protect their interests.

But, say the opponents, it is the job of the General Assembly to do what is best for the entire state, and senators and representatives should not be elected on a purely sectional basis.

The major support of the bill has come from the North Carolina Farm Bureau, which represents most of the rural sections of the state. Without question, the supporters of the bill have been far more active than those who oppose it, and for this reason there is a distinct possibility that it may pass.

Opponents of the bill include the various labor unions, the Republican Party, most of the official leadership of the Democratic Party and the industrial leadership of the state.

So it's 19 per cent of the state pitted against the rest, and if they win the battle has just begun.

Kennedy's Foreign Policy Called Successful

By STU EIZENSTAT

As the terrible shock of President Kennedy's assassination begins slowly to wear off, an analysis of his nearly three years in office is in order.

Foreign policy under JFK kept its dominant position in U.S. policy-making. Cuba remained a sore thumb in the hemisphere. The Bay of Pigs invasion was ill-managed and turned into a fiasco. Kennedy bounced back by blockading Cuba and forcing the withdrawal of Russian technicians, missiles, and troops when reconnaissance flights showed their presence. Essentially, Kennedy, who inherited the Cuban problem, could do little but attempt to prevent the spread of Communist propaganda from the island.

Russia tested American wills not long after Kennedy assumed the reins of government, by throwing up the Berlin Wall and threatening the possible blockade of access routes. Kennedy's firm stand and brilliant strategy turned the wall into the ignominious symbol of Communism's failure in Europe. After taking Mr. K's measure at Vienna, he was well prepared to back him down in the Cuban blockade. This seemed to mark a turning point in Soviet-American relations, a turn for the better.

In his American University speech, Kennedy took the initiative in offering peaceful solution to some of the Cold War's problems; he thus threw the decision into Moscow's lap, with the world awaiting its reply. In this case and in the historic test-ban treaty, Russia had to choose, in essence, between a peaceful course (thus alienation from China) or a course of increasing tension (which would have cast her in a bad light in the eyes of the world).

The wheat deal with Russia will reduce our farm surpluses, provide the farmer with needed income, and, like the test-ban treaty, widen the split between Russia and China.

In Latin America, Kennedy's ambitious Alliance for Progress is in rough waters and the number of military coups is very discouraging. Yet, Kennedy's Alianza has begun a slow, but perceptible change in Latin Americans' image of the U. S. More than before, we are brothers, not Yankee imperialists.

Our situation in Africa is heartening; the Communists are faring poorly there in general, and our image is good.

Despite increasingly good relations with West Germany and many of our other Atlantic Allies, little has been done to increase NATO unity. The French breach has not been repaired and JFK felt the increasing desire in Western Europe for a greater say-so in NATO policy.

Though Asia remains a troublesome area, and SEATO is still devoid of any real unity, things have been looking up lately. In South Viet Nam the ambitious strategic hamlet program has paid handsome dividends; the war against the Communist Viet Cong is not going badly and may be expected to go better if the rift which the Diem regime made in the nation can be repaired.

The new state of Malaysia, which Kennedy fully backed, is likely to provide a stable, pro-Western base in Asia. In troubled Laos, Kennedy seemed to have made the best he could of an intolerable situation. India stands out as a bright spot in the late President's Asian policy. The huge nation appears closer to the West than ever before, primarily due to our help in its fierce border skirmish with China.

In the Middle East, our policy seems to have no firm guidelines, which perhaps reflects the flux of the nations in the region.

Kennedy was as popular throughout the world as any President in our history. They knew him as the vigorous leader sincerely interested in world peace and in helping the world's less privileged.

Our stature throughout the world is higher because of him.

Goettingen Is Similar To Chapel Hill

By JOHN SHELBURNE

"Extra Goettingam non est vita" (roughly, "Outside Goettingen there is no life"), an old Latinated motto on the ancient Ratskeller wall, well expresses the duality of Goettingen, a university with as many worm-eaten traditions as Carolina, but with a counter-balancing central tradition of tradition-smashing, of revolution, of research on the deepest levels.

The University was founded before Carolina, in 1736, by the Elector of Hanover as the first "modern" university in Germany. Goettingen was born with a spirit of enlightenment and has remained dedicated to reason. The library, the first to be systematically catalogued, has become the most comprehensive in West Germany. The "key word" cataloging, seemingly out dated, tends to subjects as recent as nuclear paramagnetic resonance and Gunter Grass.

Goettingen's history is one of protest. In the late eighteenth century the "storm and stress" literary movement swept over the town with a force not seen since 1517. The movement attempted to free German literature and to oppose the prevailing political system. This tradition was continued against Napoleon, the suspension of the constitution in 1837 and up to the present: in 1957, eighteen professors protested against equipping the army with atomic weapons. Political advertisements are everywhere, even on the roadside. One in Goettingen reads, 'A Thrice-Divided Germany? NEVER!"

But Goettingen's most important and most revolutionary contribution to the world is, for good or for evil, its scientific and mathematical endeavors, particularly in the area of atomic research. Goettingen developed into a sort of bomb hatchery. On a summer walk in the surrounding woods, a concept leading to thermonuclear fusion occured to the Austrian physicist Fritz Houterman. His subsequent work, in cooperation with Atkinson, led ultimately to the hydrogen bomb.

Nevertheless, swordfighting continues in the growing fraternities and horsecarts clatter through narrow streets. The same songs are sung, and former student Bismarck continues to be praised in Thomas Wolfe-like fashion. But the old traditions are mostly on the surface and somewhat deceiving —beneath them the ideas which will shake the next century are being prepared.

Henry James Reviewed

By JANE ANDERSON

The Complete Tales of Henry James, edited by Leon Edel. New York, J. B. Lippincott Company, 1963. vols 5 and 6, $5.95

Fifty years after his death in 1916 admiration for Henry James continues to gain momentum. Neglected and unappreciated at that time, Henry James is a master of style and character development. He especially excells in the short story and the nouvelle or short novel.

This year J. B. Lippincott Company is publishing "The Complete Tales of Henry James" in twelve volumes, edited by Leon Edel. With the issuing of these volumes Mr. Edel has brought together for the first time all 112 of James' stories, some published in book form for the first time in this edition.

As editor of these volumes Mr. Edel more firmly establishes his reputation as the foremost James expert in the country. This reputation is founded on almost twenty years of writing and editing James material. In 1953 he won the Pulitzer Prize for Biography for the second and third volumes of his complete life of Henry James. Mr. Edel is a professor at New York University.

Volumes five and six of "The Complete Tales" have just been issued. In volume five Edel has assembled the five tales written in 1883 and 84. Two of these tales, "Lady Barberina" and "The Siege of London," as the last short tales of James' famous international theme: the experiences of an American in European culture. "The Siege" deals with an American divorcee who penetrates into fashionable London drawing rooms. Finding that the English laugh at her American characteristics she thinks herself a success and despairs because "if she had only come to London five years sooner, she might have married a duke."

For each of the volumes Mr. Edel has written an introduction worthy of his reputation. He marks the importance of each story in James' development of style and theme. Volume six includes seven stories, four of which were written in James' Italian phase. Among these "The Aspern Papers" is a masterpiece of story-telling which is set in Venice. Edel says of it in the introduction, " 'The Aspern Papers' lives in the vividness of its detail and the measured tread of its narrative. There is not a false footstep in it. A superb sense of time prevails in each of its nine leisurely sections. We feel the unhurried passage of the Venetian spring; the narrator cultivates his roses and gazes at the shuttered rooms of the old ladies which guard their old mysteries; he waits and hopes for the moment when he will search for the Aspern papers. And we experience to the full the drama of his rising and declining hopes."

In the other six volumes we can continue to watch the development of James. This is a major publishing effort and indeed the most important editing of James since 1909 when James himself edited the "New York" edition of his works. Henry James has finally come to command an important and deserved place with other 20th Century great American writers.

Long Ago And Far Away And Never Was

We have watched with some interest as CORE and the Philadelphia Mummers jousted over whether the Mummers could paint their faces black for their annual Philadelphia parade. CORE apparently decided that black-faced Mummers would be poking fun at Negroes and should be stopped by court injunction or a sit-in in the parade's path. Fortunately an injunction came first and sitting-in was not necessary, but the whole flap seems a little ludicrous to us. CORE has reacted like the state of Alabama when it violently objected to a children's book which depicted black and white bunny rabbits frolicking together.

We are not too sure that black and white bunny rabbits actually do play together, but we are sure that Negro minstrels and their music and jokes represent a very real part of the heritage of this country. We agree that this was during a period when the Negro had few if any rights, and that particular part may be best forgotten, but we will deny that the whole period should be obliterated as if it never existed. It did exist, and its minstrel shows and music, its river boats and levee concerts, comprise a part of the Negro history which any race could accept without embarrassment.

The age is dead, and best dead, but let us not now say that it never existed. We might find ourselves with such new titles as "Old Mauve Joe", "The Negroid of the Narcissus" and "Uncle O'Malley's Cabin."

We could then start bowdlerizing books which contain the word "nigger", but we would run the risk of arousing an angry white crowd objecting to white men being called S.O.B.'s and worse in books. Add that to SCHEISS' proposal to eliminate subversive books and you've pretty well cleaned out the library.

At The Half

Your Hands May Be On The Switch

A petition is being circulated on campus requesting Gov. Sanford to commute the death sentence of a Winston-Salem Negro man convicted of raping and killing an eight-year-old Negro girl.

The petition is being circulated solely on the grounds of opposition to capital punishment. On those grounds it deserves our unanimous support.

Murder is never justified, not even when it is a murderer who is murdered by the state . . . meaning all of us who live in North Carolina.

Capital punishment has been shown in several lengthy, well-documented studies, to be no deterrent to criminals. It cannot be upheld on any grounds.

It should also be pointed out that the man has not yet had the full recourse of the courts since he lacks funds to appeal to the federal courts. His attorney believes an appeal is justified on the basis the prosecution introduced inflammatory evidence.

Unless you sign the petition, and unless it results in the prisoner's sentence to life imprisonment, your hand will be on the switch that seals this man's doom in the state's gas chamber.

One of the petitions is on the bulletin board on the second floor of Graham Memorial. Others are being circulated around the campus.

We invite you to join us in signing one of them.

To The Editors:

Who's McInnis?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Grammercy! Methinks Fuzzy Wuzzy McInnis hath been munching leeks by yon Carolina moon.

I sat through no philosophy of religion course of Maurice Natanson's with Fuzzy Wuzzy (though I audited a graduate course of which FW was not a participant). Possibly FW was haunted by my ghost, which might have been lurking in the back of the room, "alienating less sophisticated types." Nor did I think of myself as sophisticated; the word evokes in my mind the thought of sophistry. There is considerable distinction between a 'particular' man and a 'pedicular' man, old sop.

Now, you are on the right Yellow Brick Road, FW, in roaring back at Citizen Robinson. But, gads, man, when arguing that he should improve his vocabulary and consider a remedial English course, you should not pontificate in language so fractured, with phrases dangling helplessly, pronouns that weep for lost antecedents, and a stumble-and-fumble logic that would send an 8th grade schoolmarm into apoplexy. (Before you pick splinters, a fork-ed log CAN be crippled by a stroke).

That's what you get for hanging around with YMCA-types for four years, instead of reading Fowler and E. B. White.

Integrated?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Regarding the letter from the Misses Egenes and Wilson listing the still segregated establishments in Chapel Hill—I am grateful for the information supplied, but I suggest that they make a more thorough investigation before they include N. C. Memorial Hospital on that list. As an employee of the hospital, I think I know whereof I speak. While it may be true that one floor is nominally set aside for Negro patients, a walk down any corridor will reveal that there are Negro patients assigned to several other wards. A visit to the eating facilities and restrooms for patients, staff, and visitors will show that these are not segregated either. And neither are the waiting rooms or admitting office. Most important, I think, is that all patients are served equally by the same doctors, nurses, and technicians—and isn't it for these services that one goes to a hospital?

Experimentor Visits Indian Holy Places And Shrines

(Ed's Note: This is the last in a series by a UNC participant in the Experiment in International Living. Miss Rhymes has been in the Orient since June.)

By MARGARET A. RHYMES

BANARES — Even the most unenthusiastic visitor of tombs and temples cannot fail to be moved by the religious treasures that abound in India.

Bhubaneswar alone — the cathedral city in India — harbors over 100 medieval temples from the era 700-1200 A.D. when Bhuddism began its decline.

In some of these shrines, worship has been going on uninterrupted since the eighth or ninth century.

These temples capture in stone every human form and expression, from the most earthy to the most refined. Hinting at a religious revival of Hinduism, this magnificent architecture shows numerous figures of lions (Hinduism) stamping out the elephants (Buddhism).

* * *

One of the most exciting religious shrines in all of India is the Sun Temple at Konarak.

It stands in lonely splendor among the sand dunes of the seashore and the grandeur of this temple, now in ruins, still takes the visitor by surprise.

Built in the 13th century, the colossal structure is in the image of the mythical chariot of the sun rushing through the blue heavens.

It was once in the midst of a flourishing port city on the Bay of Bengal, but the sea has since receded.

The chariot is driven by seven horses and seven rays of sun, representing the days of the week.

Intensely lovely are the flowing forms and shapes — the ultimate in exotic art—which gradually become more spiritual as the temple rises.

The Hindu idea is to circle round the chariot seven times to observe the more erotic sculpture at the base, to experience the physical pleasures and then, by the seventh lap, one has exhausted one's earthly desires and can climb higher into the spiritual realm.

* * *

Not far from these temples are 150 small caves dug into twin hills, once the habitat of Jain monks (those who will not harm any living thing, including insects).

Bats flit about inside these first century dwellings and huge ants travel over the exquisite sculptures and reliefs — an assimilation of Jain, Hindu and Buddhist cultures.

Just oustide the caves, a scene greeted us — surely from a Biblical motion picture. A huge wall several hundred feet high was being built stone by stone, basket of dirt by basket. Men were breaking up the stones with primitive tools, while the women walked gracefully up the incline balancing baskets of earth on their heads.

* * *

In Hyderabad, once a Moslem stronghold, there is besides the countless mosques and minarets a massive, stone fort that would far surpass any Hollywood production. It stretches more than six miles across, and once housed up to 15,000 civilians, including the king's 1000-member harem.

There's an efficient warning and acoustics system, perfumed air conditioning, spikes on all doors to prevent elephant attacks, and small holes over entrance ways through which hot lead or oil was once poured on the enemy.

Originally built as a Hindu fort, it was taken over by the Muslims from Turkey in the 14th century. It's a magnificent structure, where one can visualize the sentries and nobility pacing the stone vestibules, looking out over the walls, climbing the winding stairways.

On the subject of forts, the Red Fort in Delhi—a city where kingdoms rose and waned, that has been sacked and resacked—is not to be overlooked.

It conveys both the splendid strength and the delicacy of the Moghul architecture. Built by Shah Jahan, who also is credited with the Taj Mahal, the Red Fort was the scene of massacre for 50 British soldiers during the 1857 mutiny, the first step toward an independent India.

* * *

In Agra, the Taj Mahal itself shimmers like a queen against the background of hazy plains and a winding river. Twenty-two years in building, the Taj was designed to enshrine the mortal remains of Shah Jahan's wife, who died in giving birth to her fourteenth child.

Also in Agra are the ruins of Fatehpur Sikri, a new Muslim capital built by Shah Jahan's grandfather. Within a circle of seven miles, this city in stone with is palaces and mosques was abandoned after only 14 years for lack of adequate water supply. It still stands today much in the condition that Akbar left it.

* * *

In Benares, the holy city of India and perhaps the oldest city of the world, one finds inspiration for Hindu and Buddhist alike on the banks of the sacred Ganges.

A microscom of India's vast humanity moves through the twisting narrow passageways, wide enough only for rickshaws, humans, cows and camels, and reminiscent of the Middle East.

Sadhus (religious beggars) and merchants, artists and pilgrims, scholars and priests — all weave through the crowded bazaars to make their yearly pilgrimage.

The pilgrim's way winds 36 miles around the city through temples and shrines, each with its own ritual and ceremony.

Devotees swarm over the Benares ghats to pay homage by bathing in the Ganga before visiting the temples. and minarets.

Lining the river banks are the steep steps and numerous rest homes. The latter are partially financed by the government and free for the first three nights for the Hindu who must make his pilgrimages to Benares once in his lifetime.

Many also come to die here. There are widow's homes, dotted with the widows' white sarees hung out to dry in the blazing sun, and the chants of women praying drift out to passing boats.

The small boats slide swiftly past the burning ghats, the city's main cremation grounds.

Bodies are burned in the open, the ashes are collected, sifted for gold and silver and then dumped

Taking a boat down the wide, turbulent river in the dawn hours, one sees the city of Benares at its morning bath—against a striking backdrop of spires, domes into the river.

Small children under five and smallpox victims are merely tied to stones and submerged—giving basis to the tale of floating corpses in the Ganges.

The owner of the river-side crematorium is considerably well-off —financially. Socially, he is a harijan, an outcast, although the system has long been illegal. Since the fires handle up to 60 bodies a day, the rupees are many.

* * *

From the scores of temples and shrines that we have visited, the description of only these few must sound dry and dull to the reader. Just as one cannot convey the Taj Mahal in words alone, the architectural and sculptural monuments must truly be seen if one is to capture the "feel" of India.

In 1964, Northwestern Mutual policyowners will share $121,200,000—the highest dividend in their company's history.

This is 15% higher ($16.1 million more) than Northwestern's 1963 dividend—a record made possible by company growth plus another actual dividend scale increase, the 11th in 12 years!

A rather typical effect of this increase is easily illustrated. Take the case of a man who purchased $10,000 NML straight life policy in 1952 at age 35. Based on the '52 dividend scale, he could have expected a '64 dividend of $75.40. However, with the 11 scale increases, he will actually receive a '64 dividend of $116.50—or an improvement of 54.5% over his anticipated return.

Three factors are largely responsible for this outstanding NML dividend: (1.) improved interest earnings; (2.) consistently low operating costs and (3.) record low mortality experience.

– Friday –

a commitment would not be intellectually free and therefore not competent to teach or to search for truth, Friday said.

"In so far as I know," he said, "and this is an informed knowledge, we do not have presently employed any faculty or staff member who belongs to the Communist Party."

His fourth point was that every member of the University family, faculty and staff, is required to take an oath of allegiance to the state of North Carolina and the Constitution of the United States.

"What the University desires, and in my judgment must have, is freedom of discussion and debate with scientists, scholars, political scientists, economists, musicians, writers and businessmen from around the world," Friday said.

Open communication among all nations is essential if the university is to fulfill its education purpose. The University has always been a place where new ideas develop, and if it is to be a University, it must be free in all areas to exchange and discuss ideas.

"The University has always had a liberal point of view," Friday added, "yet in my time some of the most conservative people in the nation have spoken here. I recall hearing the president of the National Association of Manufacturers, the Editor of the Wall Street Journal, Governor Talmadge of Ga., columnist William Buckley and heads of various banking concerns in the nation."

If the University is to express the ideas of people from "all over," it must be free to present both sides of the question and to engage in discussion.

Academic freedom was another area touched on by Dr. Clayton and President Friday. This area, which includes the pursuit of scholastic endeavor, is often confused with the freedom of a faculty member as a citizen.

The formal position of the Board of Trustees in this area notes that "the University recognizes the role its faculty members have as citizens outside the scholastic interests. In this, they have the same freedom as other citizens and should avoid abusing these privileges. A faculty member should not represent himself as a spokesman of the University."

Diversity is the nature of the University. Therefore many attitudes are found among students and faculty which are part of their privileges as citizens. They are not deprived of their rights because they are part of the University.

"The problems of the state are the problems of the University," Friday added, "and the University is as strong as the people behind it." Concern for conservation, industry, poverty, education, agriculture and all needs of the people is part of the purpose of the University.

It's goal? To train useful, responsible citizens in our democracy and to provide leadership in a time of change.

The autopsy report showed that Mrs. Rinaldi died of suffocation and did not have a skull fracture. Walker later said he had been misinterpreted and that skull fracture was one of the causes of death.

NASA Lends Space Exhibit

A launching of a Titan I rocket will climax the "Space Probes and Satellites" show opening at the Morehead Planetarium tonight at 8:30.

An $18,000 exhibit of space capsules and information on the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) will be shown in conjunction with the planetarium program.

The exhibit is displayed in four parts on the main floor of the Planetarium:

—A manned space flight exhibit with quarter-scale models of the Appollo, Mercury, Gemini and lunar excursion capsules. There is a full-scale model of an astronaut in full space gear.

—A full-scale model of the Nimbus weather satellite with quarter-scale models of the Tyros, Syncom and relay satellites in an exhibit of practical satellites.

—A poster exhibit describing the manned space flight program.

—A poster exhibit describing the NASA program.

Combination Is Not Con To Pros

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The passing combination largely responsible for North Carolina's fine 9-2 year in 1963 has been contracted to play professional football in 1964. Only it won't be a combination any longer.

Bob Lacey, the outstanding end who caught 51 passes on the way to All-America his senior year, was signed by the Minnesota Vikings of the NFL immediately following UNC's 35-0 Gator Bowl-over of the Air Force.

Minnesota Head Coach Norm Van Brocklin and General Manager Bert Rose personally participated in the signing.

Junior Edge, veteran QB who will go down in later books as this school's sharpest passer, has also come to terms with the pros. Edge talked with the Hamilton Tiger-Cats of the Canadian League during the holidays and, Jan. 2, signed with scout Carl Voyles, a former coach at William and Mary.

Lacey, who was also drafted by the New York Jets of the American Football League, said he had wanted to go NFL all along.

"I got a real good deal with the Vikings," Lacey said. "There wasn't really any of that pressure you always hear about or friction between the two leagues. They weren't too worried about me going to the Jets because they knew I wanted to play in the National League.

"The Jets tried to get me, sure, but I never did get to hear their final offer. They, too, knew I was partial to the other league."

Lacey said from the way Viking officials talked, he thinks they plan on using him a lot. "Of course, everybody 'snows' you on anything like this," he said.

Minnesota told the UNC end the club intends to try him at flanker back, rather than at the split or slot end positions.

"Paul Flatley (ex-Northwestern) was rookie-of-the-year for them at split end this year. They had some former free agent playing the flank. I hope that maybe I can work into a starting position there."

The Vikings, for whom Flatley was the only receiver of any note the past season, strengthened their end corps further with the signing of Southern Cal's Hal Bedsole. Lacey says Minnesota intends to play him at the tight end spot due to his size (6-6, 225).

Lacey and Bedsole, along with other Viking prize signees (Minnesota tackle Carl Eller, Auburn halfback George Rose to name two) will fly to Minneapolis-St. Paul over semester break for a get-acquainted session. The rookies are expected to report to pre-season practice around the middle of July.

Lacey, who gained several post-season All-America honors, also was invited to two all-star games. However, the East-West Shrine game in San Francisco was in conflict with the Gator Bowl, and Lacey's still-questionable knee prevented him from the Hula Bowl last Saturday night—usually an automatic engagement for participants in the East-West game.

Quarterback Edge, whom Jim Hickey has called "the best passer in UNC history," was passed up by both American pro leagues, but the Canadian team apparently thought very highly of him.

The Tiger Cats plan to use Edge mainly at defensive safety the first year and to acquaint him slowly with the offensive system during that time.

"I guess I'll be playing behind Bernie Faloney (ex-Maryland) up there on offense," Edge said. "I haven't seen too much Canadian ball, maybe just four or five games on TV, but I like it a lot. It's pretty wide open."

Not only will balding Junior have to make the usual difficult adjustment from college to pro but he'll also have to get used to new (for him) rules.

"I imagine that playing under those different rules will be the hardest thing," he said.

The Canadians, who have gotten valuable mileage from previous drafts of U. S. college quarterbacks, play with 12-man teams in a three-down system on a 110-yard field.

Edge, too, expects to report to the big club in mid-July.

Track Team Looks Strong

By BILL LEE

The fall's strong cross-country team has turned to the wood track this winter and is expected to lead the indoor track team to another successful season.

Undefeated in regular season dual meets, the UNC harriers competed in the National Collegiate Cross-Country Championship at East Lansing, Michigan, but finished in a disappointing twentieth out of 21 positions.

Coach Joe Hilton and assistant Wayne Bishop are expecting a fine indoor year. The team looks to be stronger and has considerable depth despite the lss of some of last year's outstanding performers.

Major weak spots of last winter's team were the broad jump and the shot put. Bill Graham, a junior, has made great improvement with the shot, and is expected to take up some of the slack in that area. Wayne Burchette, up from the freshman team, will probably strengthen the broad jump.

All the dash men are back for another year, and sophomore Dale White will be added to the ranks. The team will miss graduated Jim Brown in the hurdles, but are expecting junior Mitlon Bauguess to excell in that department.

Lost from the quarter-mile is Bob Hart, but filling his shoes are sophomore Hal Dobrich and Bill Allen, who both broke the freshman record last year.

From the quarter on up, the team is stronger. Except for the loss of Carmine Lunetta and Charles Little, the team has more depth in the distances.

Expected to lead the team in the different events are the following:

60-dash—John McNinch, Ronnie Jackson, Tommy Brooks, Dale White.

Hurdlers — Milton Bauguess, Richie Ambrose, Gary Mead, Dale White.

Jumps — Tommy Clark, Joe Huffman, Billy Busby, Wayne Burchette.

Middle distances—Bob Bennet, David Peltz, Al Dobrich, Bill Allen.

Distances—Art Maillett, Mike Folk, James Meade, Jerry Smith, Worth Helms.

IFC President Warns Minotaurs

By JOHN GREENBACKER

IFC President Charlie Battle warned the Order of the Minotaurs Monday that unless they "channel their efforts into something other than drinking," the IFC would take steps to abolish the organization.

The warning, contained in an open memorandum to the society, came in the wake of a controversy over the Mintotaurs' conduct during the weekend of November 2.

The Men's Council handed down convictions for Campus Code violations to several Minotaurs who had engaged in a public display of drunkenness before and during the Georgia-UNC football game.

Membership to the "service and drinking" society is open to fraternity members only. "Their actions certainly fall under the jurisdiction of the IFC," the memorandum stated.

"The IFC does not wish to abolish the Minotaurs or to govern its affairs," Battle said, "but only hopes that the members themselves will take the responsibility of channeling the group's activities away from what they have been for the past several years."

"If the group will not take this responsibility and continues to promote activities similar to the last few years, then the IFC will have no choice but to take steps to abolish the group completely," he said.

The Minotaurs were unavailabel for comment.

Radio Series Will Feature Prof. Byerly

KEN BYERLY
Author On Radio

Ken Byerly, associate professor of journalism here and veteran newsman, is one of 13 authors of outstanding college textbooks selected to be featured in a new radio series.

As the author of "Community Journalism," Byerly was selected to be interviewed for the new series now being produced by the Intercollegiate Broadcasting System and the American Textbook Publishers Institute, which publishes over 95 per cent of all texts sold in this country.

The series will be entitled "College Authors Forum," and will be carried by WUNC in February.

Byerly was interviewed here this week at the request of the producers of the series, and the taped interview, conducted by Frost Brannon, UNC senior from Charlotte will be edited by the producers and used on the series.

Byerly is a former owner of weekly and daily newspapers in Wyoming and Montana and is still the owner of the Lewistown Daily News in Lewistown, Mont. He is also the owner, with his sons, of The Tidewater News, a semi-weekly at Franklin, Va.

Dorm Social Bill In SL

Student Legislature will elect two of its members to the Consolidated University Student Council and consider several bills Thursday night.

Among the bills expected to come to the floor is a $2,500 request from the Residence Hall Improvements Committee for the initiation of a "pilot project" in social room improvements. Another appropriation bill would give $200 to WUNC, campus radio station.

The final appropriation due for consideration is for the purpose of setting up a revolving TV fund to replace sets in Residence Halls.

Proposals to revamp the UNC delegation to the CUSC have been introduced by Neal Jackson and Mike Chanin. Also on the agenda is a bill to create another Assistant Attorney General's post to serve the IFC court. The bill was introduced by Bill Straughn.

Goldwater Levels Guns At LBJ's 'Union' Message

Asks For Stronger Stand Toward Cuba

By ALLAN PRIAULX
United Press International

MANCHESTER, N. H. —Sen. Barry Goldwater leveled sharp criticism at President Johnson Wednesday and said his State of the Union message makes former President Harry Truman "look like some kind of a piker."

Goldwater, who heard the message on a car radio while campaigning for President in New Hampshire, said President Johnson "out-Roosevelted Roosevelt, out-Kennedyed Kennedy and even made Truman look like some kind of a piker."

Goldwater told a gathering:

"I can't think of one single field in which he (the President) is not going to move in and take more power over your lives and try to do things for you that you should be doing foryourselves.

"I don't think when you read the message tonight that you can have any belief that Lyndon Johnson by any stretch of the imagination can be called a conservative. I think he has outliberaled every liberal since 1932."

Goldwater earlier said he hopes President Johnson does not follow the Kennedy administration's "vacillating, weak line" on Cuba.

The Republican presidential hopeful, seeking votes in New Hampshire's first - in-the-nation primary March 10, said President Johnson appears to be planning a "firmer stand" on the Cuban problem.

Goldwater, on a voter handshaking swing through three industrial communities, did not mention the Kennedy administration by name but his reference to it was obvious.

"There are indications that President Johnson will not follow the same vacillating weak line

Highlights Of Johnson's Message

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Here are the highlights of President Johnson's first state of the union message:

Budget: The President promised to submit a budget for fiscal 1965 of $97.9 billion, a cut of $500 million from the $98.4 billion budgeted by President Kennedy for fiscal 1964. He said this would mean a deficit of $4.9 billion, far below previous expectations, and would be accomplished by cutbacks in federal employment, among other measures.

Nuclear: Johnson challenged Russia to follow his lead in ordering a 25 per cent reduction in output of enriched uranium atomic explosive—and closing down four plutonium piles. Coupled with new disarmament proposals, he said, it would be an important step toward arms control and "our ultimate goal—a world without war, a world made safe for diversity."

Foreign Policy: He outlined a 10-point program featuring military strength and alliances coupled with a bold search for East-West agreements "which can enlarge the hopes of all while violating the interests of none." The program also envisaged increased use of "our food as an instrument of peace," expanded world trade, and "an expedition to the moon in this decade" with or without Russian cooperation.

Poverty: Johnson called for an "unconditional war" on poverty in the United States to help that "one-fifth of all American families with incomes too small to meet their basic needs." He said the joint federal, state and local effort would be aimed at not only relieving the symptoms of poverty but at curing it and preventing it

Taxes: He urged passage by Feb. 1 of the administration's $11 billion tax cut bill, presently before the Senate Finance Committee, and called for lowering of the basic withholding rate from 15 to 14 per cent to give wage-earners an estimated $200 million a month in added buying power.

Jobs: Johnson rejected organized labor's demand for a 35-hour work week to create more jobs, but he endorsed Labor Secretary W. Willard Wirtz' proposal for a study to determine whether excessive overtime causes increased unemployment, and whether a higher overtime rate would lead to more jobs.

Civil Rights: The President also urged passage "this session" of the civil rights bill presently before the House Rules Committee. "Today Americans of all races stand side by side in Berlin and Viet Nam. They died side by side in Korea. Surely they can work and eat and travel side by side in America," he said.

Immigration: Johnson echoed his predecessor's appeal for new legislation to lift "the bars of discrimination against those who seek entry into our country, particularly those with much-needed skills and those joining their families."

Cutback In Atomic Weapons Big Item

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Johnson Wednesday announced a surprise cut in federal spending, disclosing he had slashed his new budget to $97.9 billion by trimming nuclear weapons production, closing old defense plants and warring on "fat and waste" everywhere.

The government still would be operating in the red, but the deficit would be slashed in half.

In his first State of the Union message, the President also told Congress that the budget he will submit Jan. 21 will call for a $1 billion anti-poverty program to give a fair chance to millions of Americans now dwelling on "the outskirts of hope."

The President also announced a heavy cutback in production of atomic explosives and called on Russia to do the same. He said there was no need to stockpile more such weapons than were needed because to do so would only be provocative and wasteful. There are tens of thousands of nuclear weapons in the U. S. stockpile.

Unveiling his "frugal" 1965 budget in advance, he revealed that it calls for spending $500 million less than the $98.4 billion expected to be spent in the current year and $900 million less than President Kennedy originally proposed last January.

He said the budget for the 12 months starting July 1 would cut the federal deficit by 50 per cent, from the current $10 billion to $4.9 billion. This slash would be based on an optimistic estimate of $93 billion in tax receipts, some $6 billion more than expected this year.

In the legislative field, the President renewed his appeal for such Kennedy-Johnson programs as the $11 billion tax cut to "keep this country moving" and the civil rights bill to ban all racial discrimination "as far as the writ of federal law will run."

He drew one of his most vigorous rounds of applause from the lawmakers and from spectators in the jammed House gallery when he appealed for prompt passage of the civil rights program.

If Americans of all races can stand side by side in Berlin and Viet Nam, and if they could die side by side in Korea, he said, "surely they can work and eat and travel side by side in America."

But his most enthusiastic response came when, laying down a 10-point program to make the world "safe for diversity," he paraphrased Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev.

"We shall neither act as aggressors nor tolerate acts of aggression," he said. "We intend to bury no one—and we do not intend to be buried."

Congressional Democrats, from Senate leader Mike Mansfield, Mont., to Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) hailed the President's budget-cutting plans.

Mansfield shouted "Bravo." But Southern Democrats disassociated themselves from the civil rights appeal.

Republicans also praised the spending cut plans, but many expressed doubt that the President would carry through. House GOP leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.) said he hoped "the administration's new-found enthusiasm for economy is as great in June as it is in January."

New Pool Tables Arrive For Two Residence Halls

Craige, Ebringhaus Get Rec Equipment

By ANDY MYERS

There's good news for the pool sharks of Craige and Ehringhaus dormitories.

Three spanking new blue-top Brunswick pool tables arrived at Craige over the holidays, and will be ready for use Feb. 3.

"I'm glad they're here," said Howard Henry, head of GM. "It's been a long wait, and now it's a reality."

The three tables were financed by GM at a cost of over $1,000 apiece, and the only difference from the new tables down in GM is that they have red rather than gold aprons.

Larry McDevitt, last year's UP candidate for president, first mentioned the idea to Henry last year. "Ever since we approved the tables Garry Grosball has been hard at work securing them," said Henry.

"The delays have been mostly because of financing and administrating problems," he said. "GM has been for the project all along."

The use of the tables will not be restricted to Craige men, Henry said. "Any student may use them."

The tables will be located in a small room under the TV room and snack bar. "We wanted the smallest space possible," he said. "We did not want to substitute recreation space for study space,"

The tables will be run by students from Craige on the same basis as those in GM.

Sanford Tops YDC Meet On Saturday

Top officials of North Carolina's Democratic Party will join Gov. Terry Sanford and presidential assistant Henry H. Wilson in Southern Pines Saturday for the installation of new officers for the Young Democrats Clubs.

Wilson, a native of Monroe and former State YDC president, will deliver the principal address at the installation banquet.

Gov. Sanford and State Democratic Chairman Lunsford Crew will appear on the official program. Party Executive Director Tom I. Davis will install the new officers.

Registration for the installation begins at 1 p.m., at the Holiday Inn, followed by a 3:30 p.m., meeting of the new State YDC Executive Committee and a 4:30 p.m., meeting of all county presidents with new YDC President Tom Gilmore.

Those who plan to attend are asked to contact Lane Brown, president of the UNC-YDC, in the Law School. Brown will be installed as State Secretary.

Brown also released the spring program for the organization here, starting with a general meeting in the second week of school. He said that one of the gubernatorial candidates will be the featured speaker, and that all candidates would speak at UNC before the end of the year.

The College YDC of North Carolina will hold a Winter Rally at the Sir Walter Hotel in Raleigh on Feb. 14-15. Brown indicated that details for this are not complete and would be released as soon as possible.

Concert Scheduled At Hill Hall Tonite

The UNC Symphonic Wind Ensemble, conducted by Dr. Herbert Fred of the Department of Music, will present its annual winter concert Thursday at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

The concert, originally scheduled for Tuesday, is part of the Department of Music's regular Tuesday Evening Series and is open to the public without charge.

Six selections will be featured on the concert program including the Mozart Serenade No. 10 in B-flat; the Symphony No. 3 for band by Vittorio Giannini; the Overture for Band by Felix Mendelssohn; "Fanfare for the Common Man" by Aaron Copland; fetes from "Three Nocturnes" by Debussy, transcribed by William Schaefer, director of bands at the University of California; and "Miniatures," by Joaquin Turina, a representative figure of the modern Spanish "nationalist" school.

The Mozart Serenade, "Gran Partita," written in 1781, is regarded as possibly the earliest work of musical significance written for wind instsuments. Two of the seven movements will be performed.

The Giannini Symphony, commissioned by the Duke University Band several years ago and recently published, is recognized as one of the most important contributions in contemporary band literature.

Parker Hall Fire Causes $500 Damage

The fire was discovered by George Sokol and John Leonard, Parker residents, who were studying in the main lounge about 1:30 a.m.

"I heard a cracking," Sokol said. "It sounded like the walls were falling down.

"Then John said he smelled smoke and we rushed down to the television room. We couldn't see any flames, but it was filled with smoke."

"We heard a swishing noise," said Mike Radford, who discovered the fire about the same time. "We went out in the hall and it was full of smoke."

Radford called the fire department while Sokol and Leonard doused the smoldering tiger with fire extinguishers. Firemen stayed for about 45 minutes putting out the fire and tearing burning insulation from the overhead pipes.

Water damage was slight, but several light fixtures were melted by heat. One wall was blackened by smoke, the television was damaged and the ping pong table and several chairs were charred.

The origin of the fire was not known.

SBI Men Here, But Nothing New In Rinaldi Case

Lab Tests Still Are Incomplete

No new leads have developed in the Christmas Eve slaying of Mrs. Lucille Rinaldi, wife of a UNC graduate student.

"We're still working on it and have been since the court hearing last week, but we haven't come up with anything new," said Chapel Hill Police Chief W. D. Blake.

Blake added that agents from the State Bureau of Investigation (SBI) have been in Chapel Hill for the past three days to confer with local detectives.

SBI laboratory tests on some of the physical evidence have not been compelted, and Blake said he didn't know when the results would be available.

Legal action in the case came to an apparent standstill Dec. 31 when Recorder's Court Judge William S. Stewart freed Mrs. Rinaldi's husband, Frank, of a murder charge. The judge's action came at a preliminary hearing in which he failed to find probable cause in the state's evidence against Rinaldi.

Defense testimony accounted for Rinaldi's whereabouts at the time of his wife's killing. The woman died of suffocation between 10 a.m. and noon Dec. 24, according to the pathologist who performed the autopsy.

Mrs. Rinaldi was a teacher in the Waterbury, Conn., school system and was in Chapel Hill for the holidays.

UNC Named Test Center

UNC has been designated as a testing center for the National Teacher Examinations to be given on Feb. 15, it was announced recently by Dr. J. W. Little, associate director of the Testing Service at UNC.

Before a teacher can be certified in North Carolina, and before his certification rating can be raised, he must show evidence of having completed the examination.

Where, Oh Where, Has Our 'Drive Safely' Gone?

The Old....

By HUGH STEVENS

RALEIGH—"Drive Safely" has disappeared from the 1964 North Carolina license plates.

The familiar slogan, a feature on the state tags for 10 years, was axed by the Department of Motor Vehicles for a number of reasons, according to Miss Foy Ingram, Director of Auto Registration.

"We had first intended to make this plate a permanent one, with a tab (such as used by California) which would be changed every year. We needed more space to take care of the tab," Miss Ingram said.

"The General Assembly did not make the necessary changes in the laws, so we will continue to change the entire plates every year.

"I doubt that 'Drive Safely' will reappear, however, for we have found that fewer words mean better visibility and less cost," she said.

Miss Ingram, who runs her Raleigh office with quiet efficiency, also indicated no change in the current black-and-yellow color scheme.

Proposed Council Trials Of Demonstrators Is Criticized

Editors, The Tar Heel:

It has come to my attention that representatives from the student legislature meeting with officials of the University have discussed the prerogative of having the Honor Council try other students for the misdemeanor of sitting in at a restaurant in protest of segregation and passively resisting arrest. Nothing could be more contrary to the idea of academic freedom than these proposed trials, for implicit in the idea of free education is a sense of racial impartiality, that the free exchange of ideas has no regard for race and in fact academic freedom must presuppose racial equality. The trials of the Honor Council would then appear as a restriction of those who are supporting the ideological foundations of the University itself. All over the world students have played an increasingly significant role in the formation of public opinion, and now when the American student has finally seen a way to act meaningfully for the repeal of racial prejudice, he is threatened by his own legislative body. No one would deny that these students are violating the legal code of our country, but they are doing so with a moral vision and a personal sacrifice that should make all reasoning people grateful.

The decision to actively involve oneself in the movement for the total citizenship of all our people is a matter of the individual's personal commitment and not the concern of the Honor Council. If the student who acts for integration cannot satisfy the requirements of his coursework, the tests and the papers, then he will receive the punitive measure of a lower grade on the academic alphabet, but this is still a private matter between student and professor. If the student involved finds he can no longer be student and integrationist, then it is up to him to leave school with the satisfaction of at least acquitting himself well in the studies he attempted, but under no circumstances should he receive an additional hindrance for what is demanded of him through rational or spiritual commitment.

Martin Luther King has been arrested fourteen times; he has also busily conferred with the President of the United States. It is no accident that a man who appears to be a legal vagrant has also gained the respect of the executive branch of our government and both major political parties. This fact is indicative of a legal code which has not caught up with the moral integrity of the civil rights movement.

We as a nation have too many other things to worry about to have to contend with the narrow-minded bigotry of centuries. If as Khrushchev has said, the watchword for Soviet-American relations is peaceful co-existence, then we must set a much higher and finer example. Black and white must conjoin to insure the opportunity for the personal happiness and spiritual and economic prosperity not only of all our citizens but of all mankind. It is not fair to the Negro to leave some establishments open to him, some closed, some places where he is accepted as a man created equal in the words of our Declaration of Independence, some where he is not. Gradual integration will never succeed as long as we are allowed to harbor the silent prejudice and superiority that prevents legislation and leaves the Negro treading the line between those who will accept him and those who will not. He is a living man and that sacrosanct, on a bus, in a restaurant, at a swimming pool, in our communities and in our homes. We must have racial equality and we are going to have it if it means participation and demonstrations by every thoughtful human being in these United States for they will never be united without it.

Let us hope that this will not be the case, however, since no demonstration or arrest can be a substitute for the enlightened conscicusness of a free society and a public awareness molded in debate and discussion. Economic stringencies in fact make it almost impossible for the working man to leave his job and compromise his family income to act for civil rights. On the other hand, students, not pressured by economic necessity, have a greater opportunity to act, and they will no doubt continue to do so.

There is a larger dimension to the racial problem that has not been indicated, a permanent drawback that perhaps must always reside in our legal code. What is to happen to the idea of private property if all establishments are forced by law to integrate? The tension between legal statutes and moral vision perhaps may never be fully bridged. The owner of private property which serves the public must be able to refuse service to those he does not deem worthy. But in this clause can we allow him racial prejudice as the cost preserving total ownership? Indeed it may be an infringement of state and local rights to pass national laws enforcing all private establishments to give service without regard to race or creed despite the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission fortunately makes this demand on nationwide bus companies. Certainly it is not totally foolish to believe that a really free society may be one which allows its people the alternative of bigotry if they choose. This is a difficult problem of law that must concern us all since we are the ultimate arbiters of justice. But even if Congress itself cannot legislate the disappearance of bigots and fools, we can through national and state legislation do this: impose the legal imperative that any owner who refuses service to Negroes, Jews, Chinamen, leprechauns, etc. plainly post in print a notice to that effect at the front of his shop. This advertisement of prejudice will at least clarify for white and black those establishments they may avoid or picket and it will properly give the individual the choice in a moral question.

Remember The Boston Tea Party? Well . . .

After seeing "Lord of The Flies," it is easier to understand why many supposedly moral persons criticize violations of the law for any reason, and why they preach respect for the law at all costs. Unless the law is always respected and honored, they say, we might all too easily regress to the level of savages.

But where, we wonder, does this credo of blind obedience to man-made law leave our Founding Fathers, who intentionally violated a bevy of laws they considered unjust? Where does it leave the Suffragettes of the early 1900's, who did the same to secure female emancipation? Where does it leave the labor leaders of the past? Where, especially, does it leave the sit-in demonstrators of today?

Clearly, the history of our nation is bound up in protest — protest against unfair taxation, against female inequality, against the supremacy of management against labor, and now, against racial inequality.

Perhaps the central difference between the protestors mentioned is the fact that they have not all been relegated to the history books for dutiful homage as yet. The sit-in demonstrators are here with us today, disturbing our peace and reminding us of unfinished business we would prefer to leave for some future generation to settle.

As a result, many of us carefully find reasons to explain why the demonstrations are wrong. Just for good measure we toss in a comment or two on how most of the demonstrators are social misfits anyway. That makes it much easier for us to avoid facing the issue squarely. But just in case we are nearly forced to face it, then we can always take refuge in the need for people to obey the law, else civilization will crumble.

There is only one trouble with falling back on all these reasons: they are just so much poppycock. Falling back on them only makes most of us even more of a bunch of moral lepers than we already are.

It takes more than laws to make and maintain a civilization. It takes leadership and courage and honesty. Laws, like rules, are merely guides to conduct. Some are good; some are bad. And if the history of our own great nation is any example, it takes more courage to break laws in full knowledge and acceptance of the consequences than it does to keep them.

Laws, after all, are made to serve men; not to make men its captives. If a law is bad — if it violates the higher law of morality — then it must be changed.

If no other means than intentional violation of the unjust law will work, then — following our forefathers' examples — intentional violation is justified, if not required.

The Positive Side Of Bullshooting

Time Magazine

If the most popular of the liberal arts is the art of snowing the grader on exams, how should the grader respond? Last week this question cropped up in the first examination of examinations at Harvard in 25 years

The answer given by William G. Perry Jr., director of Harvard's Bureau of Study Counsel, is that snowbound student bluebooks should be divided into two classes. "Bull" is opinion without supporting facts. "Cow" is facts without understanding. If the grader has to make a choice between these two sharply-drawn categories, says Perry, he should take bull every time.

According to Perry, "bull in pure form is rare; there is usually some contamination by data." But even in its purest form, bulling "expresses an important part of what a pluralist university holds dear, surely a more important part than the collecting of 'facts that are facts,' which schoolboys learn to do."

Unlike the cover, says Perry, the bull-er is close to being "in a strong position to learn content rapidly and meaningfully, and to retain it. I have learned to be less concerned about the education of a student who has come to understand the nature of man's knowlege, even though he has not yet committed himself to hard work, than I am about the education of the student who, after one or two terms at Harvard, is working desperately hard and still believes that collected 'facts' constitute knowledge."

JFK Appraised

By STU EIZENSTAT

Domestically, the late President Kennedy made the nation vibrant again in many ways.

Despite an excellent liaison system, his relations with Congress, as reflected in his legislative record, were not as good as he had hoped. Public apathy was reflected by Congressional inaction, and in light of the closeness of his election, Congress felt Kennedy had no great public mandate behind his proposals.

He alienated business when he attempted to exert his powers against a rise in steel prices started by U. S. Steel; he felt this rise to be an inflationary move contrary to the agreement he had made with industry and labor. In the last two years, he assiduously attempted to regain the confidence of business in his administration. For several reasons, his efforts were begining to bear fruit:

1. Business in general was prosperous and without recession for an unprecedented length of time.
2. J. F. K. liberalized depreciation allowances for industry, making faster write-offs possible.
3. He pushed for a private corporation to manage the U. S. satellite communication system.
4. He attempted to de-regulate transportation.
5. He stressed and encouraged American Business to invest in underdeveloped areas.
6. He proposed a Domestic Service Corps to help the unemployment situation.
7. His manpower Retraining Act was important to depressed areas.
8. He offered an across the board tax cut which would leave business more capital to invest, and give consumers more take-home pay to either save or hopefully buy more and thus encourage further industrial investment and more jobs.

The late President did much to make Washington the cultural center of the U. S. and the U. S. the cultural center of the world, by encouraging and making practical use of the intellectual community, and bringing the world's top artists to perform in Washington.

As no President before, J. F. K. stressed the need for higher vocational education to make a strong, vibrant America a reality. His Higher Education Bill, recently passed, is called the most significant in the country's history.

He helped quiet the internecine service rivalry in the missle and space field. Our numerous space successes not only provided the American public with a psychological boost, but demonstrated our scientific prowess to the world.

In the realm of domestic affairs, Jack Kennedy will best be remembered for his tremendous efforts in the field of civil rights. During his first two years he did not push a strong civil rights bill because he realized that it would so alienate the Southerners in Congress that everything would become bogged down, and because he felt that extended voting rights for Negroes (which he consistently pushed) would best solve the problem in the long-run.

Yet, when he realized the seriousness of the mounting civil rights crisis, he reacted in the typical Kennedy style, not being left in the wake, but becoming the leader and chief spokesman for the drive for human equality.

But John Fitzgerald Kennedy was more than all of this put together. He was a brilliant, dynamic, energetic leader with whom the citizens of the U. S. and the world could identify. He personified those qualities which have made our nation great. As he said, all we want will not happen the first hundred days, nor even in our lifetime, but let us begin. He began. What more can one say, than "Hail to the Chief," whose fervor and love of country will always inspire us.

Boycott

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I could scarcely believe my eyes when I saw the statement in the Tuesday Daily Tar Heel that recently a white waitress at Watt's Restaurant had actually urinated on a demonstrator. This seems to me to be sufficient reason for the cessation of all attempts by anyone to eat at that Restaurant. If Watt's will hire a person who is so filthy in her personal conduct, what must their ideas concerning sanitation be?

I, for one, am never going to set foot in Watt's Restaurant again. I don't believe I could work up an appetite for anything they might serve.

"Well, Well–What Have We Here?"

Does Giving Make Good?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

A critical and accurate analysis of the fraternity and sorority system at Carolina would yield the inquirer the fololwing facts:

1. They are the most charitable group on campus. Each year they give more money than any other group to the Campus Chest Drive. The dormitories cannot even be compared in this point. Neither can any other group and this includes the professors. The dorms give little and the professors give even less. Possibly the professors can be excused—they give to the community charities, I hope. But there is no overlooking the dorms wher the per capita gift might amount to a quarter, but it's probably in the range of four to six cents.

2. The fraternities are giving a good deal to the Carolina Symposium. To my knowledge the dormitories are giving nothing. The sororities are ginving a good deal too—the girl's dorms are giving nothing. The professors are hoping that they will not be approached.

Perhaps I am wrong to pick on the faculty. The responsibility for supporting sudent activities does not rest on their shoulders. But it rests squarely on the shoulders of every one of the 10,000 plus students at this university.

So far the fraternities have been carrying the ball. They are the first group to be asked for money and they are the first group to donate. Committees soon learn that to canvass a dormitory is hardly worth the effort. The only sure bet is to approach the fraternities and sororities. And in general they are the only possible source of money.

Quit maligning the fraternities and sororities. Unless your record in responsibility is as good, you are not worth listening to. When and if you realize that privileges entail responsibilities, then and only then do you have the right to criticize.

Robinson Upheld, Critic Hit

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Aside from the trifling inaccuracies of grammar which would tend to give Mr. McInnis very little reason for assuming such a condescending attitude toward Mr. Robinson's English, there were several points in the former's letter to the DTH of December 16 which deserve closer examination than they obtained.

To begin with, one might consider the statement in the second paragraph that "he (Robinson) is indifferent to the injustices of the world." (The half-hearted qualification of this absurdity is of no real consequence.) It is certain that Mr. McInnis and his fellow liberals do not comprise the unique group of all men who realize that this is, in many ways, a cruel world. To do justice to Mr. McInnis' awareness of this fact leads one to the conclusion that the statement referred to was an attempt to justify the liberal position by an appeal to the emotions, mainly by disparaging the personalities of conservatives. Faith in the correctness of one's convictions is one thing; calumny is quite another. Much of the verbiage that abounds in the letter referred to is for the same purpose.

But that is enough of questioning what is quite probably a standard tactic for exchanges on the subject of politics. Issues being the center of interest (ideally), one should strip away the verbal trappings and submit the key points to scrutiny. Mr. McInnis states that, if a business is open to the public, then it is exactly that. It should be pointed out here that, for primarily practical reasons, discrimination has been an accepted practice for public businesses for some time, and rightly so, in that they may refuse service to customers who are inebriated or otherwise undesirable. As was brought out by Mr. Robinson, in the case of the pending legislation there is the practical problem of who is to decide whether discrimination is based on race or what one may loosely term "desirability." Mr. McInnis previously brushed this aside by declaring that it is a legal and not an ethical problem. This is foolish, since a law is precisely what is at issue. The danger inherent in the "broad goals" of liberals is that they serve as admirable starting points for various and often conflicting interpretations on the practical level. The objection referred to is the core of the problem of this legislation. The conservative conclusion is (if I may speak for most conservatives) that, by taking the prerogative of choice away from the owner of an establishment, the government is infringing upon the rights of owners of private property on the ground that the latter should serve anyone and everyone, which is not a necessary corollary to the idea of equality before the law. (Incidentally, there is a difference between a privately-owned public utility and, for example, a restaurant. The function of the government (among other functions) is to protect the rights of all people to the greatest extent possible (which is not license for the removal of the rights of a majority for the less clear rights of a minority), not to alter the moral attitudes of a certain segment of the people by force, as was tried with prohibition.

If one took the last part of the seventh paragraph literally, one would have concluded that if those business concerns now practicing segregation were to place a sign to that effect in plain view, they would be "outside the ball park." In fact, those firms which have signs saying essentially the same thing (namely, "we reserve the right," etc.) satisfy that condition nicely.

In conclusion, the problem of racial discrimination is, as Mr. McInnis no doubt realizes, a moral one. Let those who feel that moral problems of this type are matters of individual conviction not be callous when they advocate other than legal means for the Negro's gaining the stature of normal white citizens in the eyes of the latter. Moral suasion is the most obvious method, although it will take much time and effort, and the Negro's patience is nearly exhausted. The situation is an unfortunate one, but with time and "good will" on both sides, it will be resolved to everyone's satisfaction. Even the radical liberals must have enough faith in their fellow Americans to believe that the right side will gain supremacy eventually. In the meantime, the Negro's "rights" are simply not so well—defined—in "spirit" or letter of the law—as to call up such a feeling of martyrdom as now prevails, and civil disorder does not show any great faith in the workings of a democracy.

bers. Floyd McKissick, defense attorney for the other 16 persons, had earlier requested transferral of the cases to Orange County Superior Court. No action was taken on the motion.

The UNC professor involved is Bill Wynn of the psychology department. The Duke faculty members are Peter Klopfer, zoology, David Smith math, and Frederich Herzog, Robert Osborn and Harmon Smith, religion.

Charges against the demonstrators stem from three sit-ins staged at Watt's Restaurant outside of Chapel Hill last week. They include trespass, resisting arrest and assault and battery.

Warrants for the assault and battery charges were served on the 19 persons arrested in Friday night's demonstration during the court session. Besides the Duke faculty members those arrested Friday included one UNC professor, two University students and two others.

on Cuba" as the previous Democratic administration, the senator said.

"I am very hopeful that President Johnson will be very firm in the Cuban question—more than the administration has been up to now," he said. "There are indications that President Johnson plans a firmer stand."

Goldwater said he was "sorry" for Britain for engaging in a deal to sell $12 million worth buses to Cuba. He said he did not know where Cuba would get the money to pay for them.

"I sometimes can't blame these countries for trading with the enemy because they don't know where we stand part of the time," he said.

On other matters, Goldwater made these comments:

—He said isolationism "is the last thing in the world I want. We can no longer be a fortress America."

—No member nation of the United Nations should have a vote until the nation pays its dues.

—"The civil rights package before Congress is valuable but "there's no law that can be passed that can make you like me or me like you."

—He defended his vote against the nuclear test ban treaty. "The longer I live the more I'm convinced I was right on the test ban treaty."

"We have found that those colors combine excellent qualities of durability, visibility, and low cost. Of course, we have used quite a few different combinations over the years."

She pointed to a case on the wall displaying numerous examples of past license plates, including one as early as 1913. They included tags don in red and white, green and white, or blue and silver. Sizes and styles showed great variety, and there was a 1925 plate in a color very familiar to UNC students — Carolina blue.

"We have quite a few people write us asking for new colors," Miss Ingram said. "Some of them are pretty wild."

She pointed out one plate submitted by a mountaineer from western North Carolina. The background was a vivid red, white, and blue, with bright yellow numerals and the words "North Carolina" in a wretched shade of green.

"As you can see," she said, "some of the proposals are a little extreme."

Returning to the topic of license plate slogans, Miss Ingram produced a color photo showing the '64 plates from all 50 states.

"Twenty-nine states used some type of promotional slogan or picture this year," she said. "But I think the trend is to plates that are less cluttered."

UNC Looks To Halt Wake Forest Jinx

Frosh Tackle Deaclets At 6

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Still seeking their first win against major opposition, North Carolina's Tar Babies invade Winston-Salem tonight for a six o'clock preliminary skirmish with the Wake Forest freshmen.

Coach Ken Rosemond hopes this will be the game in which his frosh cagers jell and become a team. Bothered by a lack of height (expected) and ball-handling and play-making mistakes (not so expected), the Tar Babies have lost twice — to Clemson and N.C. State—while running away from the Elon Jayvees and Wingate Junior College.

Pride and joy of the Carolina frosh followers so far this season has been 6-3 Bobby Lewis, who can jump like a jackrabbit and shoot like William Tell. The Washington, D. C. product has done twice what no other player in UNC history has been able to do once—come up with a 50-point game. Against Elon, Lewis hit for 51. Against Wingate, he upped his record to 52. All in all, Lewis is averaging 38.7 a game and is also the team's leading rebounder.

Less spectacular, but still good have been the performances of guards Ian Morrison and Dennie Moe and forwards Billy Freuler and Tom Gauntlett, who round out the starting five. Top reserves are forwards Tom Parrish and Bob Powell.

The Deaclets are led by the highly-touted Jim Boshart, a 6-5, 210-pound center from Huntington Station, N. Y.

UNC Matmen Topple VMI, Lose To UVA

North Carolina's rapidly-improving wrestling team saw its record for the season evened off at 2-2 Tuesday night as Virginia took a 20-10 mat decision from the Tar Heels at Charlottesville.

The loss to the Cavaliers followed an 18-16 victory over VMI at Lexington Monday night. Dickie Blackman (147), Paul Wellstone (123) and Kennie Furr (130) came in for special praise from UNC coach Sam Barnes for their work against the Keydets. Blackman pinned his man and Wellstone and Furr decisioned their opponents.

Wellstone also won in a decision at Charlottesville, one of two matches the Tar Heels were able to take from the Virginians. The other came on Elliot Dworin's decision in the 177-pound class. Furr and heavyweight Jerry Cabe both drew with their UVA opponents.

The UNC grapplers were hampered somewhat in the UVA meet by the loss of Steve Lister (177) and Bill Woodall (157). Both received sprained ankles at VMI and were unable to go at Virginia. Woodall had won his match at Lexington.

This Saturday the Tar Heels will participate in a four-team meet at Blacksburg, Va. The other teams are VPI, N.C. State and Ohio State.

The trip to Virginia was a productive one for the freshman wrestlers. The Tar Babies posted a 24-10 win over VMI and a 16-14 victory over Virginia, thus running their record to 4-0. Leading the way was heavyweight Bill Johnson who pinned both his opponents.

Heel Win Would Be First One For Smith

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The last time North Carolina was on the long end of a score with Wake Forest was February 11, 1961. Dean Smith was on the bench in the 93-78 win, but not as head coach. Since then, as a head coach, Smith is 0-5 with the Deacons and has lost the last three by a total of 10 points.

"We really don't pay much attention to that kind of thing," he insisted yesterday. But it's got to bother him, and he hopes it will bother his team also. Enough, to win tonight's eight o'clock ACC battle at Winston-Salem's Memorial Coliseum.

The Deacons are currently in a rock-bottom slump which has seen them drop the last two games (61-87 to Clemson and 58-86 to Furman) and fall into a 4-5 record for the season.

But, as Smith will concur, they always manage to come out of something like this when matched against UNC. "They will be sky-high for us," he says. "I just hope we'll be up, too."

Wake has balanced scoring, vital experience in three veterans of the NCAA playoff wars and a good backcourt sophomore. But the key to the team's performance (especially in a game like this one) is a tall, gangly, sometimes awkward 6-6 center named Ronnie Watts.

Watts has only taken up where graduated 6-10 Bob Woollard left off last year in two departments — inconsistency and hilarity. When he walks, runs and shoots, Watts is usually funny. But on his good nights when he is jumping and blocking out on the boards, he can hurt you.

Forwards Frank Christie and Rich Carmichael and guard Butch Hassell are the three seniors who, as sophomores, played on the 1962 NCAA third-place club which featured Len Chappell.

Christie (6-4) is the leading WF scorer at an even 14 points a game. This is the 13th best average in the league. Carmichael (6-5) is at 11.2 and Hassell (5-11) at 13.3.

The fifth starter is the much-heralded Bob Leonard whose most prominent herald has been his coach, modest, soft-spoken, sweet, kind Horace McKinney.

Bones made no bones about his rookie at the start of the season. "There is no better player in the ACC than Bob Leonard," he said.

Whether he meant basketball player or horseshoe player has not yet been established for there are better ones than Leonard (6-2) in this league, even if he is averaging 12.3 and filling in okay for last year's spark, Dave Wiedeman.

On the bench to spell the team which he calls "my best shooting group in the last few years," McKinney has Richard Herring (6-5) and Al Lozier (6-1).

UNC, 6-2 for the season and 1-1 in the conference, got a big win against Notre Dame Saturday (78-68) and is favored tonight to end their losing streak against the Deacons.

Billy Cunningham leads the ACC in scoring (25.3) and rebounding (15 plus) and will be called upon again to key the attack tonight. Billy had probably his greatest game in a 71-72 loss to the Deacons here last year.

Senior guard Charlie Shaffer scored 15 against Notre Dame and is averaging 16.1. Mike Cooke is at 13.9 as is rugged front court man, Ray Respess. Bob Bennett and revitalized Billy Galantai alternate in the pivot when Cunningham is out of it.

Top UNC reserve up front is Bryan McSweeney while Ray Hassell is the third guard. Hassell is the cousin of Wake's co-captain Butch.

Lodge Volley

In the other semi-final the Chi Psi Town Lodgers, residence hall champs, face the Physics Fiends, winners of the graduate division, today at 4:15 p.m.

The winner will play Chi Psi Blue for the title at 5:00.

For the fraternity division, this was the second straight year for the Chi Psi Whites and the third straight title for the Blues.

The Town Lodgers, made up of Chi Psis living in residence halls and apartments won the title for the first time while the Physics Fiends are last year's all-campus champs.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Bobby Kennedy To Remain In Cabinet

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Atty. n. Robert F. Kennedy said ursday he will remain in his binet post until after the No- mber presidential election. Af- that, he does not know. he brother of the late presi- t, getting back into the ing of things after the fami- and national tragedy, also d he would be willing to mpaign in the election or do ything else the Democratic party wishes.

White House Press Secretary Pierre Salinger was asked if there ever had been any doubt about President Johnson's desire for Kennedy to remain as attorney general. Salinger replied, "None whatever."

The attorney general told interviewers he had given some thought to his future after the elections but had reached no decision.

'No Plan To Run,' Says Nixon

NEW YORK (UPI)—Former ice-President Richard M. Nix- said Thursday he still be- eves his best role "is not as a andidate" for the Republican omination.

"My position," Nixon said, has been and still is: I will do anything I can to see that he Republican party nominates nd elects the man best quali- fied to be president, but I still believe my best role is not as a candidate."

He reiterated that he had no plans to set up a campaign staff or enter any primary elections.

Nixon, 51, is a partner in the New York law firm of Nixon, Mudge, Rose, Guthrie & Alexander.

'Neither Do I,' Says Scranton

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — Pennsylvania Gov. William W. Scranton said flatly today he does not wish to run for the Republican presidential nomination and is taking measures to discourage his staff and top Pennsylvania GOP leaders from pushing him for the job.

"I told you I was not a candidate and do not wish to run," Scranton told his weekly news conference.

"National conventions generally accept someone who is an outright candidate and I think that is good."

Scranton said statements made by Republican state Chairman Craig Truax indicating Truax would seek support for Scranton as a potential nominee had been made without his knowledge.

Celler, Smith Fight Over CR Bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Rules Committee began its long-awaited hearings on the civil rights bill Thursday with an acrid exchange of words between the committee chairman and the bill's principal sponsor.

Rep. Celler (D-N. Y.) who will manage the bill when it reaches the House floor, called for prompt action by the rules committee headed by Rep. Howard W. Smith (D-Va.) Smith retorted that Celler's judiciary committee "railroaded" the bill through last October without giving members a chance to amend it.

"We don't railroad bills through," Celler answered.

"Do you prefer the word 'strong-armed,'?" Smith said.

Smith got only to the second section of the 10-part bill in his questioning of Celler during a three-hour session and said he would point out "the rest of the booby traps" as hearings continued.

The bill is designed to safeguard Negro rights in the fields of voting, education, jobs and use of public accommodations.

Rules Committee Still On Baker

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Rules Committee shifted the focus of its Bobby Baker inquiry today to examine the former Senate aide's business dealings with a local insurance man.

Called to testify at a closed session was Don R. Reynolds, an insurance dealer in suburban Silver Spring, Md. Committee sources said Reynolds was to be questioned about a number of business dealings.

Baker has been described in previous testimony as a one-time partner in Reynolds' insurance business. The committee's investigators are reported to have been given several versions of the Reynolds-Baker relationship.

One result of that relationship, according to the committee's information, was a $200,000 insurance poilcy written by Reynolds on the life of Baker's boss —then Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson.

Opera Workshop Presents Pair

North Carolina opera buffs don't mind long-distance commuting if they can get song.

Each week, Dr. Wilton Mason, director of the Opera Workshop here greets seven members of the workshop who come from as far as 100 miles away just to participate in weekly rehearsals and air their arias.

Exact mileage figures show that these commuting workshop members will have traveled a grand total of 18,754 miles during the 15 week rehearsal schedule preceding the opening night of the workshop's first fully staged production of a double bill, to be performed at Hill Hall at 8:30 p.m. next Tuesday and Wednesday.

The workshop will be presenting two one-act operas, "Hin and Zuruck," a melodramatic opera by the German composer Paul Hindemith, and American composer Alec Wilder's "The Lowland Sea," an opera based on folk themes giving a picture of early American life in a New England village.

Five of the commuters in the Opera Workshop travel from Campbell College at Buies Creek. One distant traveler comes all the way from Rocky Mount's North Carolina Wesleyan College.

Among the commuters are two professional singers. Susan Horton of the Campbell College music faculty and Lawrence Gupton of North Carolina Wesleyan College are fellow graduates of the Westminster Choir College of Princeton, N. J., where as students they sang under the batons of many of the nation's leading conductors.

The commuting singers have joined the other 28 workshop members in preparing for the operatic productions. Reserved seat tickets are now on sale at the UNC Department of Music. Tickets may be purchased at $1 or $1.50 from now until the day of the performances at the Music Department and at the door on the evenings of the performances.

Says Scripps-Howard

Smoking And Lung Cancer Linked In Health Report

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A report by a Public Health Service advisory committee will term heavy smoking a "significant health hazard" that is one of the main factors in the rise in lung cancer, the Scripps-Howard newspapers said Thursday.

Science writer John Troan said the committee's long-awaited report, due Saturday, will link smoking, especially cigarette smoking, to lung cancer, other less common types of cancer—including cancer of the bladder —and to tobacco amblyopia, a rare form of blindness.

The Scripps-Howard report said, however, that sources indicated the 10-man committee would say foolproof evidence still was not in hand, indicating more research is needed on the problem.

In New York, the American Cancer Society issued a report saying 15 years of medical research have proved that cigarettes are "the major cause of the unprecedented increase in lung cancer.

The cancer society traced the history of lung cancer research through 25 studies in 10 nations. It said its own research combined with the studies "developed evidence that lung cancer was linked to cigarette smoking."

A third report issued by the Tobacco Institute said the cancer society's claim had not been proven. It suggested that "previous lung ailments" and viruses probably are involved in the development of lung cancer.

According to the Tobacco Institute report, "lung cancer was known to exist long before cigarettes became popular, but was seldom diagnosed."

It said "the increase in lung cancer death rates being reported in recent years is due in part to better means of diagnosis, more frequent recognition of the disease, the increase in the population and the greater number of older people today."

According to the Scripps-Howard report, the health service advisory committee will:

—"Indict heavy smoking as a likely cause of chronic bronchitis and pulmonary emphysema, a condition that impairs breathing."

—"Note evidence that smoking may play an important role in coronary heart disease."

—"Link smoking with Buerger's disease, a circulatory disease that usually affects the legs, and tobacco amblyopia, a rare form of blindness."

In its report, the Tobacco Institute said scientists have been unable to specify any substance found in cigarette smoke that is known to account for lung cancer.

Goldwater Slams Defense System, Johnson In N. H.

McNamara Bites Back At Missile Charge

PORTSMOUTH, N. H. (UPI)— Sen. Barry Goldwater Thursday issued the bitterest attack of his campaign against President Johnson and also charged that the nation's intercontinental ballistic missiles ICBM's are "undependable."

He said he probably would "catch hell" for his remarks on the missiles—and he did.

In Washington, Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara promptly retorted that Goldwater's charge was "completely misleading . . . politically irresponsible and damaging to the national security."

"The idea that hate is prevalent is the biggest lie that's ever been perpetrated on the people of this country . . .," he said.

"To simply say it was an act of hate is an attempt to obscure the real issue. The assassin was a product of the sort of hate taught by Communists, not by Americans."

Goldwater, a major general in the U.S. Air Force Reserve, said he could not say anything more about the ICBM's because the information about the missiles, a major deterrent to enemy attack, was classified.

"I wish the Defense Department would tell the people how undependable the long range missiles are," he said.

The candidate for the Republican presidential nomination made the statements at a news conference concluding his three-day swing through New Hampshire which holds the nation's first Republican primary March 10.

The Arizona senator said the short range ballistic missiles are dependable but he added: "We need to keep up our airplane capability. I'm very fearful that we may get caught sometime with our airplanes down."

On other subjects, Goldwater predicted that Sen. Margaret Chase Smith, R.-Maine, will enter the New Hampshire primary as a presidential candidate. He said she would make a "formidable candidate."

As for his own campaign, Goldwater said he is convinced he has "it made" in this state. "I think the enthusiasm is greater now than before I announced for president," he said.

'Routine Matter' —Long On Note In Sitters Files

SG Doesn't Have To Wait For Trials

Dean of Men William Long confirmed yesterday that a notation of a possible Campus Code violation has been attached to the permanent record of UNC students arrested in the current wave of civil rights demonstrations.

However, Long said that the notation might be temporarily removed if a student has to have a transcript or is applying for transfer to another school.

Long said it was a routine matter to place a notation of a possible Campus Code violation on a student's record anytime the student has been arrested.

In past cases where students have been arrested, student government officials have waited until final court action was taken on the charge before they took separate action.

But, since many of the trials of the demonstrators have been continued, it will be sometime before an SG decision on the matter is reached.

"That is the reason we might temporarily remove the notation," Long said, "We've never done it in the past, but in this case, we might make an exception."

Student Government officials, however, are not bound to wait until final court action on the matter before they take sepa-

USIA Agent Will Recruit In Chapel Hill

William L. Green, Jr., a representative of the United States Information Agency, will be on the campus Monday and Tuesday to talk with interested students about Foreign Service careers and general employment opportunities with the Agency.

Green will address several classes in Political Science and RTVMP and group meetings will be held at the Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall for the general student body on Monday afternoon and Tuesday morning. Students can contact the Placement Service for the time and place of the meetings.

Junior Officer Trainee positions with the Agency are filled through the Foreign Service Examination to be given on March 7. Closing date for receipt of applications to take the examination is January 20.

Some of the positions available in the USIA are for Public Affairs Officers, Cultural Affairs Officers, Information Officers, writers, editors, broadcasters, telecasters, librarians, motion picture specialists, and educational exchange officers.

Students majoring in political science, international relations, American studies, history and communications should be especially interested in learning more about opportunities with the USIA.

Green, a native North Carolinian and UNC graduate is currently Special Assistant to the USIA's Deputy Director.

Cosmo Club Will Select New Officers

The Cosmopolitan Club will hold elections for president and vice-president of the club Sunday.

T. T. Yen and Harotune Dekirmenjian, the outgoing officers, have resigned their positions because of heavy academic loads.

Under its present leadership the club has had the largest membership since it was founded in 1948. It currently has about 170 members and 130 honorary members.

Yen expressed his gratitude for the support he received on campus and from the Hospitality Committee of Chapel Hill.

The election meeting will be held in Roland Parker Lounge of GM at 4 p.m.

ROTC Honor Unit Inducts 24 Members

24 pledges were inducted into the local Scabbard and Blade unit Thursday night.

The ROTC honorary society, whose members are outstanding juniors and seniors in the NROTC and AFROTC units, was founded for the promotion of closer relationships among military departments of American universities.

NROTC members inducted were T. M. Cribben, W. D. King, M. G. Roser, D. C. Rumsey III, R. T. Segrest Jr., C. M. Vellmer, J. E. Fluet Jr., K. R. Furr, A. V. Monette, R. T. Oliver, W. M. Parhan, and J. L. Peddicord.

AFROTC members inducted were C. P. Dunnigan Jr., D. W. Howe, B. R. Matthews, J. J. McDonald, J. R. Poole, R. D. Skees, C. E. Stull, J. P. Noybach, M. L. Jones, W. J. Nelson, C. M. Tate, and B. F. Warlick.

Cunningham Nets 27 As Tar Heels Bow

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

WINSTON-SALEM — Wake Forest did it again Thursday night—refused to believe the improbabilty that a weak team can beat a stronger one four straight times.

The Deacons inconsistent this year and last (when they defeated a superb UNC club three times), continued a mysterious mastery of Carolina and came away with a coveted 80-71 ACC victory—their first league win of the season.

Carolina's Billy Cunningham was his usual productive self (27 points), but superior team balance paid off for the Deacs as they pulled away from a 32-28 halftime lead on sharp passing and floor work, strong rebounding and good shooting.

UNC made one move in the second half which threatened the home club's jinx—but that was all the Tar Heels did on a night when, at times, they looked very, very bad.

Behind 50-40 with 11:08 left Carolina scored 12 points, eight of them on long jumpers by Ray Respess, while Wake could only counter with baskets by Bob Leonard and Frank Christie.

The Tar Heels held on and trailed 60-58 at the 4:40 mark, but WF put on a killer spurt in the next two minutes which was to mean another frustration for UNC Coach Dean Smith who now has lost six straight to the Deacons.

Christie scored two fouls and a layup, Ronnie Watts drove for a bucket and Christie (who had 25 for the game) dropped in two more free throws for a 68-60 lead, and it was all over with 2:51 left.

"Wake Forest did a good job defensively," said Smith later. "They kept putting pressure on the guards to keep the ball away from Billy. Butch Hassell's shooting was tremendous. It seemed like he didn't miss." Wake guard Hassell got 10 in the first half and three straight jumpers midway the second period to put UNC in the hole.

"I thought we were the better team again this year," Smith said. "But we met an inspired club, and it's always tough up here. It was especially so after Wake had lost those two games earlier this week."

Wake Forest never trailed (while shooting 54.5 per cent) in the first half as UNC ran into two periods of sparse production. One came early as the Deacons went from a 9-9 tie to a 10-9 lead. Hassell's two jumpers off a screen and Watts' work off the boards paced the rally.

Ailing Mike Cook, benched as a starter for Bill Brown, brought the Tar Heels back within three (24-21) on long scores, but again Wake found a method to pull away.

While the Deacons scored six straight to get their biggest margin (30-21), Carolina mysteriously had difficulty working for the close-in shots and getting any kind of rebounding off either board.

Using a new type offense which had four men lined up across court parallel to the foul line and a guard bringing it down, Dean Smith's men refused to work the ball consistently and, during one period, came down the floor three straight times, took three 20-foot plus shots—and missed them all.

They rallied, though, for three baskets and were behind at intermission, 32-28.

Hassell had 19,Watts 18 and Leonard 11 for the Deacs, who shot 55.4 per cent for the game. Cooke had 15 and Respess 10 for Carolina. Tar Heels shot 42.3 and, surprisingly, outrebounded Wake, 42-35. Cunningham led Watts in that department 14-13.

Political Science Dept. Opposes 'Little Fed' Plan

19 Sign Petition Vs. Amendment

The Department of Political Science went on record yesterday as opposing the "Little Federal" Plan.

A declaration issued and signed by 19 members of the department said the "Little Federal" Plan "would scrap the most equitable apportionment of the legislature which the State has had in a long time and substitute one which violates the most elementary principles of representative government.

"It would permit a majority of the representatives in the House to be chosen by counties which had only 19 per cent of the State's population in 1960 and are expected to have no more than 15 per cent by 1970."

The declaration said if the controversial amendment passed, the Piedmont section would not have an effective voice in the legislature.

"One of the proponents of the amendment has declared this would protect the State from 'the tyranny of the majority,' ignoring the possibility of a tyranny of the minority.

"If the amendment should pass, which may very well be the case as a result of public apathy, a diminishing minority will have acquired a stranglehold in the North Carolina legislature which the electorate can do nothing about . . ."

Top CU Officials To Get Pay Boost

Top administrative officials of the Consolidated University and its three branches will receive undetermined salary increases as the result of action taken in December by the State Advisory Budget Commission.

Gov. Terry Sanford announced Dec. 19 that the commission had authorized him to use a non-budgeted $50,000 fund to supplement salaries and expense allowances of University officials, including President William C. Friday, Vice-President Donald B. Anderson and chancellors of the Chapel Hill, Raleigh and Greensboro branches.

The supplement fund is derived from "non-state" sources or monies not appropriated by the General Assembly, mainly overhead expenses included in foundation grants made to the University and from gifts.

President Friday said recently that he and Gov. Sanford were scheduled to confer on the funds use. He said the Commission's action was a followup to increases granted some University officials last August and completed salary adjustments recommended for University Administration officials.

In effect the Commission authorized Gov. Sanford as director of the budget to use the "unrestricted, unappropriated amount for salary adjustments.

"This will involve officials in all three institutions," Friday said. This would include Chancellors William Aycock, John Caldwell of State and Otis Singletary of Woman's College, each of whom currently draws $20,000 a year, and three Consolidated University vice presidents.

Friday indicated yesterday none of the details of the proposal had been completed yet.

Weekly Editor Sets Liberal Record Straight

(From The Chapel Hill Weekly)

Last Sunday several of North Carolina's daily newspapers carried a story from United Press International on the racial situation in Chapel Hill.

For the most part the story was factual and accurate in detail. In our opinion, however, the writer drew a totally gratuitous conclusion in picturing Chapel Hill as "straining to keep up the liberal image long associated with this historic university town."

There are many people in Chapel Hill actively straining to resolve the apparent impasse in the civil rights movement here. There are many others straining to decide for themselves, as a matter of conscience, what is right and what is wrong. Whether we agree or completely disagree with the ultimate actions or personal decisions of these people, we do not question their honesty or sincerity. To ascribe their efforts in trying to solve our racial dilemma to nothing more than a desire to keep Chapel Hill's "liberal image" untarnished seems to us a gross misrepresentation and an undeserved denigration.

Certainly people in Chapel Hill are proud of the University's tradition and of whatever part of it rightfully attaches to the Town. They take particular pride in the towering figures of Howard Odum and Frank Graham and others whose voices have rung bravely in the wilderness. But most people decline to wallow in this illustrious past and they are not blinded by it.

When students are arrested during sit-in demonstrations here the first thing many people, including the United Press International writer, ask is how can this be happening in Chapel Hill. The second question inevitably is what has happened to the liberal tradition.

The answer to the first question should be obvious. The trespass law is the same in Chapel Hill as it is elsewhere in North Carolina and for police purposes it must be enforced impartially, whether it is being violated in the name of civil rights or for no reason at all. Failure by the police to arrest those who have been charged with trespassing would amount to dereliction of duty. Failure of the courts to punish those found guilty under the present construction of the trespass law would be an abdication of judicial responsibility.

The answer as to what has happened to Chapel Hill's liberal tradition is as complex as trying to define a "liberal image." Even the most casual investigation of Chapel Hill today will show it to be an infinitely more liberal town —in terms of public accommodations, equal employment opportunities, school integration, or any other standards by which gains in today's civil rights struggle are measured—than it ever ever pretended to be in the days of Howard Odum and Frank Graham. We concede that there are not today any great liberal voices in Chapel Hill to match Graham and Odum. We think it is quite probable that there never again will be, but mainly because it is no longer a matter of an enlightened few speaking to vast areas of darkness and doubt. The gap between those speaking and spoken to has been narrowed critically, if not entirely eliminated, and the day of the heroic figure and the grand style might very well be past. But this should not be taken to mean that the liberal spirit of Chapel Hill is dead. It is still here, as surely as the University is still here, and we are convinced that it will never die, although it might respond in different ways and no longer have a Graham or an Odum to articulate it.

It is a hypothetical assumption to make, but we don't believe the presence of Frank Graham as president of the University or of Howard Odum as a great scholar of the Southern character would make any appreciable difference in Chapel Hill's racial discord today. Graham and Odum consistently addressed themselves to what was decent and noble in the human character. They gave words to man's hopes and aspirations and appealed to what was best in him.

The people in Chapel Hill at whom today's civil rights demonstrations are aimed do not respond to such appeals. They do not understand, or even listen. We think it is more realistic than cynical to accept the fact that there will always be a certain number of these human blights on the face of Chapel Hill, and every other place. We abhor them, but we do not consider them to be a general and vital disfigurement. Except by geographical accident, they do not represent Chapel Hill, its people, or its spirit.

Chapel Hill will continue to try to eliminate discrimination wherever it exists in whatever way seems best. We will not indulge in an orgy of self-flagellation because all is not right, nor will we try to pretend that nothing is wrong. But whatever we do or try to do will be done, not in the fond hope of living up to some nebulous image, but simply because we believe it to be right.

To the Editor of The National Review: The Editors of The Daily Tar Heel wish to announce that their patience with Barry Goldwater has been exhausted.

When In Doubt, Insert Head In Sand

One of the things that sticks out like a sore thumb admist all of the demonstrations, violence and name calling is the failure of the two local newspapers, The Chapel Hill Weekly and The News of Orange County, to exhibit any of the qualities of leadership which distinguish good and effective newspapers from the rest of the herd.

The Weekly, one of the best weekly papers in the country, has remained unusually silent on the subject. It bravely stated that violence was a bad thing, which is about as safe as saying communism is a bad thing, but at the same time The Weekly has branded the demonstrations as lawlessness. We can but mourn for that bolder Weekly spirit which just last summer said demonstrators were on the right track. Of course those demonstrators weren't operating in Chapel Hill at the time.

Orville Campbell, the Publisher of the Weekly, is one of the men who fancies himself as a town leader. Unhappily, he has yet to demonstrate that he is even a good follower of any particular policy. He appears to have been able, rather pompously, to ignore the demonstrations, or at least write them off as meaningless.

The News of Orange County represents even a sadder state of affairs. The Publisher, Edwin Hamlin, is Orange County's representative to the state legislature, and the Editor, Roland Giduz, is a member of the local Board of Aldermen. In keeping with its regressive policy, the News has offered no constructive help with the civil rights problem, but has limited itself to hurling epithets at the demonstration's leaders.

At one point the demonstrators managed to offend Mr. Giduz's seemingly sensitive sense of fair play and he was able to sanctimoniously proclaim that they had "proven unworthy." At the same time he neatly side-stepped the fact that we have violated the Negro's sense of fair play for 200 years! But then, ignoring the real problem is something the News has proven quite adept at.

It is sad indeed that these papers' failures must manifest themselves in the form of demonstrations and violence in an enlightened University town.

The town deserves better.

Choking Up On The Gag Law

The Gag Law has struck again. This time it has resulted in the nation's physicists deciding not to hold a planned meeting jointly at Duke and UNC as planned in 1965, but to postpone it until 1966. The action should come as no surprise to any informed observer. President Friday, Chancellor Aycock and a host of other state education officials warned months ago that this was the sort of harvest we could expect to reap from the Gag Law.

The postponing is obviously aimed at the hope that the General Assembly will repeal the law at its next session in 1965, thereby clearing the way for unhindered communication between scientists and removing the unwarranted abrogation of the basic rights of all American to freedom of speech and inquiry.

There are two pitiful aspects of the situation, however, which make the postponing action even harder to take.

The first is that this event will likely have no effect whatsoever on those short-sighted super-patriots who helped to ram the law into existence, and who can be expected to fight with every drop of blood that is in them to see that this act of spite against the University remains on the books.

The second pitiful aspect of the situation is the apparent disinclination of the American Physical Society's leaders to call a spade a spade and admit that the Gag Law is the reason the 1965 meeting has been postponed, or that the law at least played a major role in their decision.

The APS could thereby have focused badly-needed national and international attention on the state's educational plight as a result of the Gag Law. Instead the Society's leaders left it to the local coordinators, Dr. Eugen Merzbacher and his colleagues in the UNC Physics Department, to spell out the real reason for the action.

This is a sad commentary on such a supposedly august body as the American Physical Society. By omission the group's leaders have contributed to the weakening of international science and the cause of freedom.

A Few More Indignant

Li'l Fed, Misled

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Supporters of constitutional amendment number 1, the so-called "little federal" plan, have been misleading the voters about North Carolina's present representation. In arguing that the amendment should be passed so as to give North Carolina a Senate based on population and a House based on geography, they imply that the present General Assembly is based solely on population. This is not true.

North Carolina now has a Senate based on population and a House based mostly on geography. Every county, no matter how small, now has one representative in the House. A House in which the 61 smallest counties of the state, with only 27% of the population, can control all legislation is not a House based solely on population. A House in which Orange County has as much voice as Wayne County, with nearly twice as many people, is not a House based solely on population.

The Senate was finally redistricted in October 1963, at the Special Session. This took a lot of time and hard work. Supporters of the "little federal" plan propose to scrap this fair new redistricting before they have even seen it tried. They propose to tie up the 1965 General Assembly to do the job all over again. They would give us a House in which representatives of a tiny minority of the people could block legislation vital to the progress and prosperity of the whole state.

Many Orange County residents know that the progress of our county is tied to the progress of the entire state. If the amendment is defeated we will have a workable, balanced General Assembly, geared to the 1960 census and providing full protection for small county needs. Voters who value fair representation and a forward-moving state should vote against amendment number 1 on Jan. 14.

Only That Much?

Editors, The Tar Heel:

I'm no prude, but the actions of a Watts' Restaurant employee during her "baptism" of a racial demonstrator left me quite dumb-founded. I'm also no stranger to racial demonstrations; my home town of Durham was hit by a few last spring. It may very well be that the restaurant's owner (s) may have felt that since they had invested their funds and labors in their establishment that they had the right to serve whomever they please. I'm not concerned with that. What bothers me is the fact that a supposedly mature, civilized woman lowered herself (at least in my eyes) to the point that she would unrinate on another human being. Mark Twain once wrote, "When angry, count four; when very angry, swear." Had the employee counted four or sworn at the demonstrator involved, I could understand; but she did neither. It must be exasperating to try and operate a business only to find that racial demonstrators are going to select your location to park, but is it exasperating enough to warrant urinating on another person? I think not. The waitress who chose to be so low as to complete her gross action is a discredit to her town, her country, and, more important, to her race. I'm ashamed to say that she and I are members of the same race. I only hope, for her sake, that she is feeling some small degree of shame. It's the least she could do after her grossness. She owes the more civilized that much.

"Now It's Just A Matter Of Rounding Up A Herd Of Elephants"

Currently by Fred Seely

Recollections of a Christmas vacation: . . . Standing outside in 60 degree weather in Florida —at 4 in the morning . . . Watching the number four dog, which went off at 25-1, get his nose in front of my dog at the finish, beating me out of a $40 Quinela . . . watching Edge, Willard and Co. strike a severe blow to our national defense . . . the way Hanburger and his cohorts chased the great Issacson all over the field . . . football players standing three deep in the bar of the Hotel George Washington after the game, starting a well-deserved blowout . . . the president of the student body recovering from a touch of food poisoning acquired in a Sumter, S.C., restaurant . . . the vice-president of the student body taking a fall on the ice in a gas station . . . wondering why in the world I would ever leave Florida when I stepped off the plane in Pittsburgh . . . wondering why in the world I would ever leave Pittsburgh when I stepped off the plane in Raleigh-Durham.

* * *

The racial situation in Chapel Hill has grown much more tense in the last few weeks, and the ugly spectre of violence is beginning to rear its head.

The incidents at Watts' Restaurant were just about as disgusting as I can imagine, and the ammoni-and - chlorox bath the demonstrators received at another establishment is nearly as bad.

The local integration movement and I disagree almost all the time, but they have to be admired for the courage they show. Being subjected to such things as they have in the past weeks takes one hell of a lot of guts.

I admire them for their fortitude.

The Hearst Award received by DTH Sports Editor Curry Kirkpatrick was well deserved. The story for which he won the $750 prize—the recollection of the late President Kennedy's visit here—was outstanding, and the award reflects upon the Daily Tar Heel and the School of Journalism as well—it is the highest award available to a collegiate journalist.

Many knowledgeable journalists consider Curry to be the top sports writer in the state, and he will be in much demand when he graduates. I am continually irritated by the foolish letters we receive criticizing the sports page, and as yet I have seen no move on the part of these self-styled experts to try their hand.

Criticism is a necessity to the journalist, and good criticism is always taken. The staff of the Daily Tar Heel is paid by the student body, and we are obligated to do the best job possible. It is a great experience, and there is no doubt in my mind that it will be a great help in the future.

And working with such talented people as Curry is part of the reason that it is a beneficial experience. We are fortunate to have him on the staff, and the student body is fortunate to have him at its disposal.

Perhaps the worst high school basketball team in the state is coached by former UNC great Lennie Rosenbluth.

The team in question is Fike High at Wilson, which lost its ninth straight game this week, 123-56, to Durham. Several nights before they managed to commit 67 fouls in losing to Rocky Mount, 97-64.

Ah, well, wait 'till next year.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Agreed

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Your front page photograph showing Frank Rinaldi handcuffed to a police officer in today's (Jan. 7) Daily Tar Heel is shocking! Pictures and news items are meant to be timely to depict the events of the day. This photograph immediately creates a false impression.

The police failed to show that there was "any probable cause" in Mr. Rinladi's association with his wife's tragic Christmas Eve death, and a judge declared there was not evidence to hold Mr. Rinaldi. Why, then, a photograph taken a week ago when he was under police guard Did you want sensationalism, or is this an attempt to direct our own judgments? Need I remind you that these subtle judgments are the ones that constantly distort our view, and attribute to the hate and turmoil that was so prevalent in 1963. Leave the man in peace and let the courts decide.

Jerry Goss
Dept. of City Planning

(Ed. Note: Had we desired to sensationalize Frank Rinaldi's situation we would not have placed our story below the fold with a small, two-Column headline. The picture, in our opinion, illustrated Rinaldi's grim ordeal, so we ran it.)

A Non-Reply

Editors, the Tar Heel:

Re "The Fuzzy-Wuzzy Strikes Back!" (DTH, Dec. 17, 1963) and "More Fuzzy-Wuzzy McInnis" (DTH, Dec. 18, 1963), personal attacks and name calling as substitution for concrete argument supported by positive proof do not merit the dignity of a reply. Emotion is characteristic of all humanity, but the conservative, unlike the liberal, curbs his emotions when reason is imperilled by sentiment. The two abovementioned articles only serve to illustrate once again that the impetus for Machiavellian Liberalism in America is irrational emotion.

Three UNC students, previously selected by the Board, will leave later this month to attend the University in Medellin, Colombia, for one year. The Colombian school year begins Feb. 3.

The UNC students are Scott Trull, Harvey Kline and Kathy Klumpp.

Three Colombian students, selected with the help of the UNC students in Colombia, will come here next fall. Funds for their stay will come from Student Legislature, the Campus Chest and the Office of Student Aid.

The latter pays tuition and fees for the Colombians while the ISB administers funds for living expenses.

The UNC students will receive tuition, room and board from the universidad and $200 in U. S. currency for incidentals.

They will meet with the Gomez' tonight at a dinner at Dean Cathey's home.

New Group Of Paintings Is On Display

Watercolor facsimiles of Indian drawings by colonist artist John White purchased for the UNC library's North Carolina Collection are now on exhibit at Ackland Art Center.

Showing of the 378-year-old drawings marks the 1964 publication of the two-volume "American Drawings of John White, 1577-'90" by the British Museum in collaboration with the University of North Carolina Press.

Reproductions on exhibit depict American Indian burial rites, superstitions, religious ceremonies, hunting, feasting and dress.

The drawings were reproduced by British Museum artists Jeanne Holgate and P. D. H. Page. The Holgate - Page facsimiles were purchased on the Bruce Cotten endowment for the N. C. Collection and will remain in the library.

The exhibit ends Feb. 14.

Long emphasized the students weren't being charged with an actual violation, but only with a possible violation.

He said it would now be up to SG officials to decide if the students will be tried by the respective Honor Councils for a Campus Code violation.

Commenting on SG's dilemma, Long said, "This is one of the most difficult problems that Student Government leaders have faced in a long time. I trust they will give it serious thought before coming up with a final judgment."

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Make-up, subtlely and thoughtfully applied, can work wonders for the woman who takes the necessary time to do the job right. For example: Utilizing make-up to narrow down a too-wide jawline is a fairly simple chore. Using a base two or three shades darker than your own, blend it carefully over the area of the jawline you wish to de-emphasize. Follow this by applying your regular make-up.

For the really crowning touch, follow this with a session at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon with expert attention to your hair. # Frosh Halt Deaclets, 89-77; Lewis Hits 37, Morrison 26

By JOHN MONTAGUE

WINSTON-SALEM — North Carolina's Tar Babies spiked Wake Forest with their one-two scoring punch here last night, leaving the Deaclets slightly drunk, 89-77.

Bobby Lewis pumped in 37 from the inside and Ian Morrison hit from the outside for 26 more as the UNC frosh overcame an early cold spell, took the lead with 10:06 remaining in the first half and never again trailed the hosts.

The Deaclets did tie the count early in the second half and pulled within three points with 5:25 remaining in the game, but at this point the Tar Babies gunned in three quickie lay-ups by Lewis, Donie Moe and Morrison to put the game on ice.

The only thing that kept the contest as close as it was was the height advantage enjoyed by the Wake Forest frosh. The Deaclets, particularly in the first half, were able to get two or three shots time after time while holding Ken Rosemond's sparkling play-makers to one shot at a time.

Six-five Jib Boshart led the Wakemen with 24 points and six-six Newton Scott was right behind with 20.

The Deaclets roared to a 7-0 lead before Lewis finally put UNC on the scoreboard after three minutes of play. From then on, the Tar Babies slowly chopped away at the margin and midway through the half Morrison put on a fantastic outside shooting exhibition, hitting three in a row to knot the count at 20-all. Moments later Moe sank a foul shot which gave UNC its first lead of the night, 23-22.

Halftime came with UNC up, 42-39. At this point Lewis, who has been averaging 38.7 per game, had 13 points and Morrison led the pack with 16.

Footballer Danny Talbott made his first hardwood appearance for Carolina and his floor play and defensive work was particularly impressive. But it was Lewis and Morrison who put on the big show for the fans last night.

This Is Basketball? PhiKap 100, Beta 5

By AL KAPLAN

The intramural basketball season began this week and some very unusual scores were recorded.

Phi Kappa Sig A won their first game of the year by 95 points, 100-5 over Beta, in a white league game. Gary Roser, Jim Greene and Charlie Langdon each scored in the 20-point bracket. Langdon was high man with 29, Roser added 28 and Greene 22. Bill Deegan also scored in double figures, contributing 16.

In a closer game (the margin was only 79), DU(w) walked over the Chi Phi Fab Five 83-4. High man was Neil Goforth, tickling the twine for 28 points. Carl Gooding scored 20, while Bryan Wright had 16.

Not wanting to end a good thing, the boys from Pi Lamb(w) scored 48 points and allowed ATO(w) only 3. Pacing the attack were Nose Neuwirth (13) and Howie Stein (11).

In other games (?), DKE Red (w) walked over the Delta Sig Rigs(w) 53-9. Jim Davis beat the opposition by himself, scoring 12 points and Clay Moore aided the cause with 10.

Five men scored in double figures as Phi Kappa Sig B(w) trounced Chi Phi(w) 75-20. For the victors, Sam Martin was tops with 20, while Dave Pearce had 17, Bob Hall 14 and Don McGowan and Morris Griffin each scored a dozen.

Cards' QB Leads East In Pro Bowl

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—Young Charley Johnson of the St. Louis Cardinals was named Thursday as starting quarterback for the East in the 14th annual Pro Bowl game Sunday.

West Coach George Halas will go with veteran Johnny Unitas of the Baltimore Colts for a starter but plans to insert his own Chicago Bear quarterback Billy Wade in the second period.

Johnson, 25-year-old New Mexico State graduate, was the surprise of the National Football League during the past season when he pitched 28 touchdown passes and completed 222 tosses for 3,280 yards.

Starting with Johnson will be fullback Jim Brown of the Cleveland Browns, halfback Tim Brown of the Philadelphia Eagles, and flanker Buddy Dial of the Pittsburgh Steelers who was traded to Dallas at season's end.

Unitas, chosen player of the Pro Bowl twice, will be teamed in a backfield with fullback Jim Taylor of Green Bay, halfback Tommy Mason of Minnesota, and flanker Terry Barr of Detroit.

When Wade goes into the game in the second quarter, as promised by Halas, he will be joined by another Bear, fullback Joe Marconi, and by halfback Dick Bass of the Los Angeles Rams.

This is Halas' first participation in the Pro Bowl but it's the third consecutive time for East Coach Allie Sherman of the New York Giants. Sherman coached the East to an upset 30-21 win last year.

The West is favored this time also—by six and a half points. The West leads the series, 8-5.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: BEN COOK

Because of Ben Cook (B.I.E., 1958, M.B.A., 1961), businessmen in five southern states now benefit from new Dial Teletypewriter Service. Ben, a Traffic Supervisor with Southern Bell in Atlanta, supervised the mechanizing of the Operating Center that serves Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Tennessee.

Ben qualified for his latest position by skillfully handling a variety of other assignments given him by the company. On one, he supervised three groups of instructors who train customers in the use of new telephone services. On another, he was responsible for personnel administration and planning involving a $250,000 yearly payroll. On all, he showed ability that will take him far with Southern Bell.

Ben Cook, like many young engineers, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

Durham-CH March Planned

CORE Head To Speak At Rally

By JOEL BULKLEY

An uneasy calm prevailed over Chapel Hill yesterday as integration leaders prepared for the renewal of demonstrations in support of a public accommodations law.

Members of the Durham CORE and NAACP chapters have announced plans to march from Durham to Chapel Hill Sunday to show their support for the anti-discrimination ordinance.

James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, will address a rally here at the First Baptist Church on Robertson St. Sunday at 4:30 p.m., following the march.

Local CORE officials declined to comment Friday night on the group's other plans for the weekend.

Officials said the march will begin from two points in Durham —the campuses of Duke University and North Carolina College—at 1:30 a.m.

They said the two groups will merge at Forest Hills Shopping Center (southwestern section of the city, toward Chapel Hill) and continue to the Durham-Chapel Hill boulevard (U. S. 15-501).

Other integrationists, including some NCC faculty members and a group from Chapel Hill, plan to join the mass march at Eastgate Shopping Center here and to continue with the Durham groups to the church for the rally.

The march is intended to express support for a proposed public accommodations, which was proposed last June to the Board of Aldermen and a "fair employment practices" law, a spokesman said.

The Aldermen are expected to take definite action on the law at their Monday night meeting.

After five days of racial calm here this week, the Town appeared to be bracing itself for intensified demonstrations this weekend.

Police Chief William D. Blake said Friday he hadn't been notified about Sunday's march, but indicated the police would be ready to handle it. "All we know about it is what we've read in the papers," he said.

More than 1800 signatures have have been gathered for a petition supporting the controversial accommodations have been gathered, Rev. Charles Jones said yesterday. The signatures will appear Sunday in an advertisement in the Chapel Hill Weekly.

The Aldermen voted 4-2 June 25 to postpone for an indefinite length of time any action on the measure aimed at making it illegal for retail establishments doing business with the general public to discriminate on the basis of color.

Two hundred and thirty-nine arrests have been made here since demonstrations resumed Dec. 13, with five incidents of violence being reported.

Durham officials planning the march issued the following statement on their plans.

"Members of Durham CORE and NAACP chapters will walk to Chapel Hill Sunday.

"The gradual pace of this journey is a reflection of the gradual pace of America toward a true realization of its ideals.

"We ask you our fellow Americans to walk with us on this journey—if not in deed, then in spirit—then to the end of the road through the ammonia and jail cells, to a society where every American citizen can patronize, and seek employment in, every American business."

REIFLER TO SPEAK

Dr. Clifford Reifler, instructor in psychiatry at the UNC Medical School, will speak at the In-Service Training Program for Dean of Women office staff members and associates on Thursday, Jan. 16.

Dr. Reifler will speak on problems of student mental health and how to manage them.

The meeting will be held in Room 105 of Hanes Hall at 4:30 p.m.

Legislature Gets 2 Bills Differing On Sit-In Cases

By HUGH STEVENS

Thursday's regular Student Legislature session was highlighted by the introduction of two bills concerning student sit-in demonstrators and the passage of a $2,500 appropriation for a residence hall social room project.

The two bills dealing with student demonstrators represent a legislative conflict — one urges that arrested students be exempt from student judicial procedures, while the other calls for their cases to heard by the Honor Councils.

The bills were introduced by Bill Straughn and Borden Parker, respectively.

Straughn's bill praises the non-violent demonstrations as being "in the highest American tradition" and urges that arrested students "not be subject to any disciplinary action by the student judiciary whatsoever."

Parker's resolution asks the legislature to go on record "as feeling that there is no violation in participating in peaceful and lawful demonstrations," but as being unable to condone "the willful, premediated, and persistent violation of the law."

The two bills were referred to committee for consideration.

One legislator expressed the opinion that "they will never get out of the committee."

The $2,500 appropriation will provide for a "pilot project" in residence hall social room improvements.

Don Carson, sponsor of the bill, said yesterday the project, which includes complete refurnishing and redecorating of a social room, will depend on students for its success.

"We must prove that the residents can take care of a properly furnished room if we hope to get more improvements," he said.

The administration has agreed to help improve social facilities if the pilot project proves successful.

J. A. Branch, UNC business manager, agreed yesterday that if the students could make the project work, the administration would make every effort to uphold the bargain.

"We are dealing with limited funds for this sort of thing," he said, "but I am sure that we could move ahead with the project if it proves worthwhile."

Carson said work on the project will begin as soon as the final site is approved.

In other action, the body agreed to set up a revolving TV fund for the repair and replacement of sets in residence halls. Money for the program will come from a Television Maintenance Fund, supplemented by loans to the residence halls from the General Fund.

Also passed was a bill sponsored by Evelyn Morris creating the post of Assistant Attorney General for the IFC Court. The new assistant will investigate alleged violations of fraternity rules of conduct.

Other new bills introduced included a request for $313 for the State Student Legislature delegation, and a resolution asking the Buildings Department to investigate and improve fire safety precautions and equipment and fire alarm systems in residence halls.

Mike Chanin introduced a resolution supporting a bill in the U. S. Congress which would provide income tax exemptions for money spent for higher education by parents and students.

Legislators absent were Phil Baddour, DM II (SP); Paul Chused, TM III (SP); Neilds DeVere, TM IV (SP); Bernard Dotson, DM VII (UP); Dick Ellis, DM VII (SP); John Getsinger TM IV (SP); Harvey Kline, DM V (SP); and Larry Poe, DM I (IND).

NASA Lends UNC 3½ Ton Exhibit

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) has loaned the Morehead Planetarium three and a half tons of new models and exhibits to accompany its present program, "Space Probes and Satellites."

"Space Probes" is a detailed explanation of several of NASA's chief projects, and will be performed daily at the Planetarium through Feb. 3.

To help earthbound imaginations adjust to the concept of man-in-space, NASA sent to Chapel Hill two moving vans filled with exhibits. The exhibits will remain on display in the Rotunda and north gallery of the Planetarium through February 24. They cost $18,000 and took two days to set up.

A triad is a special structure invented by NASA with which to display large pieces of equipment without simply placing them on the floor. The NASA exhibits used two triads, one of which supports a full-scale model of the NIMBUS cloud data satellite. Facing outward in three directions from each triad are automatically changing slide projectors that describe action in a pictorial sequence.

Other satellite models exhibited are TIROS (Television Infra-Red Observation Satellite), used for global weather-casting; Relay, an active-repeater communications satellite.

Displayed in quarter-scale models are the Apollo capsule, and its LEM (Lunar Excursion Module) in which astronauts will leave the mother capsule to land on the Moon; and the Gemini capsule. There is a full - scale model of a space-suited astronaut; one-third scale model of the Mercury capsule, and a visual display of the history of NASA.

The exhibits, one of which stands higher than the chandelier in the center of the Rotunda, are open to the public without charge daily from 2 to 5 and from 7:30 to 10; Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.; and on Sundays from 1 to 10 p.m.

Rapist-Murderer Is Granted Stay

RALEIGH (UPI) — U. S. District Judge Algernon Butler Friday granted a stay of execution for Frank Marion Crawford just 30 minutes before the 27-year-old Spartanburg, S. C., Negro was to die in the gas chamber.

Butler granted the stay through a habeas corpus that was requested by Floyd McKissick, a Durham Negro attorney hired Thursday by the NAACP to appeal Crawford's case to the federal courts.

The Negro, convicted of the rape-murder of an 8-year-old Negro girl in Winston-Salem last Feb. 21, was scheduled to die in the gas chamber at Central Prison at 10 a.m.

McKissick claimed in his request for a writ of habeas corpus that Crawford's constitutional rights were violated during his trial, that he did not have time to prepare for his trial, that his confession was obtained before he had a lawyer, and that he was denied due process of law guaranteed by the 14th Amendment.

McKissick was given 20 days to file an amended writ setting forth additional contentions. After that the state will be given 20 days to answer. Butler will then set a hearing date.

McKissick said that Crawford was arrested Nov. 29 in Jonesville and that he remained in jail there without privilege of counsel or contact with his family or friends until February.

He also said that Crawford could establish his whereabouts at the time the little girl was killed and that he could prove his innocence.

McKissick further charged that Crawford's counsel resigned from the case Tuesday and that he was left without an attorney while facing execution.

A petition asking clemency for Crawford was circulated on campus earlier this week, but it is not known how many persons signed it.

Cosmo Club Will Choose Officers

The Cosmopolitan Club executive committee will meet at 4 p.m. Sunday to elect a new president and a new vice president.

President Terence Yen and vice president Harotune Dekirmenjian have resigned their positions because of heavy academic loads.

The meeting, which will conclude the Club's activities for the fall semester, will be held in Roland Parker Lounge of Graham Memorial.

The Cosmopolitan Club presently has its largest membership since 1948, with 170 student members and 130 honorary members, who are the host families for foreign students on the UNC campus.

In his last letter to the members of the Club, Mr. Yen expressed his deep gratitude for all the support given by members, many campus organizations and the Hospitality Committee of Chapel Hill, headed by Mrs. W. R. Straughn.

Extracurricular? No Such Thing, Says Hilliard

Robert L. Hilliard, UNC professor of RTVMP said in a recent magazine article that educational institutions should provide situations for students to apply to theories learned in the classroom.

"Most colleges and universities adhere to a divided curricular and extra-curricular system," said Hilliard in a recent issue of Liberal Education. "I don't think there should be anything called extra-curricular—everything is curricular.

"Student organizations provide very effective college-related opportunities for learning group cooperation. Education should provide students with experiences which will ultimately give him better than a trial-and-error approach to life."

Hilliard said the college campus provides a laboratory for the testing of the ideas and theories presented in the classroom.

"A college should no more permit a student to proceed unescorted into the campus laboratory than it would permit him to proceed without guidance into the chemistry lab," he continued.

Hilliard proposed "planned experiences and guided situations" to give students a practical education. He disagreed with the viewpoint that a liberal education should not have to provide vocational preparation.

"Students," he said, "learn most not through intellect alone and not through activities alone, but through intellectual activities."

"A college curriculum limited to the formal courses of the classroom is, at best, only half curriculum."

EAVES JOINS STAFF

Dr. Robert W. Eaves, executive secretary of the department of elementary school principals of the National Education Association, will be on the staff of the UNC School of Education from February 1-September 1.

While on leave from his position with NEA, he will teach full time in school administration, working mainly with public school principals.

3 Americans Among 27 Killed In Canal Zone

News Researcher Danielson Named Dean of 'J' School

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Wayne A. Danielson, 34-year-old Journalism professor was named new Dean of the UNC School of Journalism yesterday.

Danielson's new duties begin July 1. He will succeed Dr. Norval Neil Luxon, who is retiring because of a University regulation which requires that administrative heads step down at the age of 65. Luxon will teach here for another five years.

The announcement of Danielson's appointment was made by Consolidated University President William C. Friday on behalf of the Board of Trustees.

Commenting on Danielson's appointment, UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock said, "First of all I would like to express my strong appreciation to Dean Luxon for his excellent leadership.

"I am sure that we have a worthy successor to him and that with Dr. Danielson's leadership, I believe we will continue to move forward."

In accepting the five year appointment, Danielson said, "I consider it a great honor to be selected for this position. I have a great admiration for the school, and I am proud and pleased to be named its Dean."

Danielson expressed his "great admiration" for retiring Dean Luxon, who is credited with establishing the school as one of the best in the nation.

Danielson said he plans no major changes in the school, which has produced some of the nation's top journalists.

"We do anticipate an increased enrollment, especially in the graduate school area," he said. "So we plan to expand this area to accommodate those students who want to enter journalistic jobs at a somewhat higher level and to accommodate experienced journalists who return to school to prepare for careers in teaching and research."

Danielson is the youngest man ever to head the School of Journalism. But he is no newcomer to journalistic endeavors.

"I started writing for my junior high paper when I was in the seventh grade. I knew from that time on I wanted to be in the newspaper business. I never changed my mind.

"When I attended Iowa State University, I wrote for the college paper. After graduation, I wrote for the San Jose (Calif.) Mercury and News.

"But the man who was working on research had to leave, and I took his place, and I've been doing research since then."

Danielson's time is not completely occupied with research projects or with teaching his Communication and Opinion course.

"I am very interested in music, both folk and classical. Also I like to collect records," he said.

Danielson is also quite an amateur gardener.

Nationally known as a scholar in the field of mass communications research, Danielson has been working in recent years on computer applications in journalism.

He has also studied the diffusion of knowledge about major news events such as the launching of the Explorer satellite, President Eisenhower's heart attack, and passage of the Alaskan statehood bill.

He is editor of "Journalism Abstracts," a yearly summary of graduate research in the United States schools and departments of journalism.

Danielson, born in Burlington, Iowa, December 6, 1929, earned the bachelor's degree in journalism in 1952 from Iowa State University, the master's in 1953 and the Ph.D. in 1957 from Stanford University.

He is married to the former Beverly Grace Kinsell of Santa Barbara, Calif. They have four children, ranging in age from four months to six years.

At UNC, Danielson has taught undergraduate courses in news

Dr. Ewing Named Med School Head

Dr. John A. Ewing has been named acting chairman of the Department of Psychiatry at the UNC School of Medicine and Dr. John E. Larsh Jr. has been given the additional duties of assistant dean of academic programs at the School of Public Health.

These and other personnel changes were approved in Raleigh yesterday by the executive committee of the University's Board of Trustees.

Dr. Ewing, a professor of psychiatry since last summer and a member of the UNC medical faculty since 1953, fills a vacancy created by the resignation of Dr. George C. Ham.

Dr. Ham has resigned to enter private practice in Chapel Hill, but will remain with the medical faculty on a part-time basis as clinical professor of psychiatry. He had been chairman of the department for 12 years.

Dr. Larsh fills a newly created position of assistant dean of academic programs in the School of Public Health. He continues as head of the Department of Parasitology, a position he has held since 1945. He is also professor of parasitology in the UNC School of Medicine.

Trustees approved the appointments of Kurt Schlesinger as assistant professor in the Department of Psychology, Dr. Luther Clarence Hollandsworth as instructor in the School of Medicine and Margaret Catherine Moore as assistant professor in the School of Nursing.

Dr. Henry Bradley Wells has been promoted from assistant professor to associate professor in the School of Public Health. The promotion is effective July 1.

Leaves of absence were granted as follows: Werner P. Friederich, Kenan professor in the Department of Germanic Languages, to teach during the spring semester under a Fulbright grant at Canberra, Australia; William Albert McNight, associate professor in the Department of Romance Languages, during the fall semester to complete a work for publication; and Bryce S. DeWitt, professor in the Department of Physics, for one-year beginning Feb. 1 to work under a National Science Foundation post-doctoral fellowship at Princeton University.

Trustees approved the following for retirement: on July 1—Dr. Roger E. Sturdevant, School of Dentistry; R. H. Wettach, a former dean of the School of Law; Ethel D. Clamp, dormitory hostess; R. L. Hutchins, grounds maintenance superintendent; Maud W. Price, records and registration clerk; and B. L. Smith, power lineman.

6,897 On Registrar's Books Here

Registered voters in the ten precincts of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro area number 6,897, according to Clyde Carter, County Board of Elections Secretary.

A count of new registrants showed an increase of 599 in this area of the Chapel Hill Township for the January 14 redistricting referendum.

Two rural precincts, Patterson and Cole's Store, in the northwest part of the Township, were not counted in the Chapel Hill-Carrboro total.

Polls will be open Tuesday from 6:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. for the referendum. Saturday is Challenge Day.

Total voters in each precinct follow.

North Carrboro, 621; South Carrboro, 845; Country Club, 701; Dogwood Acres, 371; East Franklin, 723; Estes Hills, 744; Glenwood, 750; Kings Mill, 429; Northside, 975; and Westwood, 738.

COED CONVICTED

A coed was found guilty of a campus code violation and campused for two weeks by the Women's Council in a closed trial Thursday night.

The coed pleaded guilty to a charge that she had consumed alcohol "to the extent that she was not in control of her actions."

Panama Cuts Diplomatic Relations

PANAMA CITY (UPI) — Panama servered diplomatic relations with the United States Friday night and opened a campaign to drive it out of the Panama Canal Zone after two days of bloody fighting between U. S. troops and Panamanian civilians.

President Roberto F. Chiari already had ordered Ambassador Augusto Guillermo Arango home from Washington in preparation for the formal rupture.

Arango was reported standing by in Washington awaiting "the first plane out."

The announcement of the formal break was made by the Panamanian Foreign Ministry to the U. S. Embassy in Panama City. Embassy personnel had abandoned the embassy earlier Friday under threats of an armed mob.

American authorities said three American soldiers were killed in the fighting, but Panama Radio said the death toll stood at 27 including four American soldiers and 23 Panamanian students.

The radio said 294 persons had been wounded, including 260 students and 34 U. S. soldiers.

President Chiari opened the campaign to force the United States out of the Canal Zone by announcing renunciation of the treaties giving the United States use of the canal "in perpetuity." The treaties have caused anti-American resentment for decades.

Panamanian crowds battledUS troops along the border of the Canal Zone throughout the day and wrecked and burned U. S. buildings and cars.

Two Americans were saved by police from lynchings by street mobs which roughed them up and beat them.

Totally unconfirmed reports said two other Americans had been lynched in Chiriqui Province.

In New York the Security Council was called into emergency session to hear Panamanian charges of "aggression" against the United States.

Panama demanded an international force to police the Canal Zone.

Anti-American sentiment was mounting by the moment. Panamanian flags were at half staff in a day of national mourning while speakers and broadcasts inflamed mobs to angry mood.

At the airport 20 miles outside the city Friday morning a score of U. S. servicemen were nervously awaiting for a plane to evacuate them to U. S.-controlled Canal Zone territory.

Rioting climaxed long-smouldering Panamanian resentment of U. S. sovereignty of the Canal Zone.

The specific cause of the rioting was the action of American high school students Thursday in tearing down a Panamanian flag in front of the Balboa High School.

Last night Chiari, who had conferred by telephone during the day with President Johnson, threatened to renounce all treaties with the United States, presumably including use of the strategic canal.

Thursday he announced a suspension of diplomatic relations with Washington.

Chiari said the diplomatic mission ordered to return from Washton would not return until the United States agrees on a "complete revision" of its relations with Panama.

He said he had "invited" Johnson to take rapid action to solve the two nations' differences.

The key treaty was negotiated in 1903. Under it Panama granted the United States full jurisdiction in perpetuity over a zone five miles wide on each side of the canal.

The United States paid Panama $10 million and an annual rent of $250,000. The rent now is $1.9 million.

Johnson, faced with the first international crisis of his presidency—and one begun by schoolchildren—sent Assistant Secretary

Ask Not For Whom The Siren Sounds

The resignation of two more officers from Chapel Hill's generally fine Police Department to take higher paying jobs ought to shake the town more than it probably will.

The resignations of Patrolman Albert Brinkley and Detective John Nesbitt are simply the latest evidence of the fact that Chapel Hill pays its officers poorly.

It can only be chalked up to good fortune that men such as Chief William Blake, Lt. Graham Creel, Patrolman James Farrell and the many other fine officers on the force have not resigned before now.

Why? Because Chapel Hill not only pays its policemen poorly, it expects a lot from them—as witness the past several weeks of demonstrations and the Rinaldi murder case investigation, to cite only two examples.

The police department has put in some 400 hours of overtime on the demonstrations alone—with none of the officers at all sure he'll ever get compensated for his extra effort, even slightly.

The town cannot, and should not, continue to impose on the dedication of its police officers. Higher salaries with clear-cut overtime provisions are sorely needed.

The Race Is On, Move Ever Backward

After little or no serious thought and debilitating deliberation, The Daily Tar Heel has decided to institute a new honorary award of rather significant import. We do this with no little trepidation, as we fully realize the burden of sifting fact and fancy, pouring over press clippings and weighing personal appeals in an effort to reach a sound decision on the award's recipient each month.

It is to be called the Crawdad Award, and will be given to that person who unfailingly dedicates himself to the closest emulation of that creature. (The crawdad moves only backwards).

The staff of the DTH will judge the awards, but candidates names may be submitted in letters with references enclosed. References should include at least two notable quotes from the candidate. Something like "The test-ban treaty is dangerous," or "Eisenhower is a communist dupe" would do quite well, and will receive the judges serious consideration.

Unfortunately, The Tar Heel budget does not permit the trophy to be retired by those fortunate enough to capture the honor three times in a row, but lest it be thought that this is just another honorary with no material gain for the recipients, let us hasten to enumerate the myriad prizes that accompany this singular honor.

Each lucky winner will get to spend a day in the home of Strom Thurmond, reminiscing over old press clippings from "Farm and Ranch" magazine, or if he perfers, spend a Sunday afternoon on the town with Margaret Chase Smith. He'll also receive a bound copy of of an essay on Economics and Government by Christine Keeler; a western novel Mr. Eisenhower never finished reading because his lips got tired; one of Checkers' puppies; an original reproduction of General Walker's campaign map of Oxford, Miss.; Chester Bowles' real address; a $20 tour of Billie Sol Estes' house in Texas; a reserved seat at the first Carolina Forum presentation (good till 1966); and last but not least, a first edition copy of Dean Kathrine Carmichael's astounding new book, "Saltpeter and the Wolf."

The first award will be made at the beginning of the next semester and the judges are already hard at work. Entries should be submitted at the earliest possible time.

Smoking Report

We have just finished reading a secret advance copy of the Surgeon General's report on the health hazards involved in heavy smoking. It is obvious that something must be done. We suggest, as a starter, that everyone give up reading.

CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE:

'A New Kind Of Persuasion Of The Last Resort'

(An article based on a sermon preached on Sunday, January 5, 1964, by the Reverend Charles M. Jones of the Community Church of Chapel Hill.)

Civil disobedience is practiced on a grand scale in Chapel Hill. Within a month's time two hundred thirty-nine anti-segregation protestors have been arrested and charged with violating trespass and other laws. It is a sad and serious situation. What can we do about it?

Some are already doing something about it. In a grocery store which has a sign on the door "Whites Only" protestors have had chlorox and ammonia poured on their bodies and sprinkled in their eyes. Some of them have required medical treatment before they could be jailed. At a restaurant on Pittsboro Road the management and others did not call police to protect their rights but by pouring water, kicking and using other violent tactics met the demonstrators with violence. This response of physical violence to the practice of non-violent civil disobedience is made by only a few and I am sure regretted and condemned by many.

Others are responding to the wave of civil disobedience in verbal anger. The words one hears most often are "anarchists," "irresponsible students."

This morning I want to place some thoughts before you concerning our sad situation. They will be in the context of faith and worship. This does not mean you are asked to accept them simply because they are uttered by a minister from a pulpit in the hour of worship on Sunday morning. They are offered only for your prayerful and thoughtful consideration.

First, let us try to consider with some calmness and objectivity the whole problem of civil disobedience. Is the willful, planned persistent disobeying of law to be simply labeled anarchistic or irresponsible? It is a new problem for Chapel Hill but an old problem for civilization. The Bible shows that. Shadrach, Meschach and Abednego were heroes because they practiced civil disobedience in refusing to obey the King's order to worship his idol. An attempt was made to get Jesus in trouble by asking him if he approved of paying tribute to Caesar as the law required. Probably because the question was not asked in good faith but to trap him, he answered it indirectly saying, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's but unto God the things that are God's." It is worth noting that he was arrested for disturbing the peace and charged with teaching people to do things which were "unlawful" for them to do. Martin Luther, greatly honored by Protestants, defied the constituted authority of his day because his consicence which he claimed was instructed of God would allow him to do nothing else. There is thus in our religious faith sustained and strong support for the right, indeed the duty, to disobey the laws of men when they conflict with the laws of God.

If we, who are white, had been more aware of the deep hurt and the unspoken dissatisfaction of our Negro brethren we would have expected civil disobedience to become a part of the struggle against racial injustice. In 1958 Dr. Martin Luther King wrote in his book, "A Stride Toward Freedom":

> "This is written, not to lift all the persons involved in the present wave of civil disobedience to the high status of sainthood . . . but to put our situation in the perspective of religious and democratic tradition and practice that we might do more than react angrily with invective."

> —Rev. Charles M. Jones

"We will take direct action against injustice without waiting for other agencies to act. We will not obey unjust laws or submit to unjust practices. We will do this peacefully, openly, cheerfully because our aim is to persuade. We adopt the means of non-violence because our end is a community at peace with itself. We will try to persuade with our words, but if our words fail, we will try to persuade with our acts.

"The way of non-violence means a willingness to suffer and sacrifice. It may mean going to jail. If such is the case the resister must be willing to fill the jail houses of the South. It may even mean physical death. But if physical death is the price a man must pay to free his children and his white brethren from a permanent death of the spirit, then nothing could be more redemptive."

Not all law-breakers are immoral according to the long teaching and practice of Protestant Christianity. Man's conscience does not belong to Caesar, it beolngs to God. When men's laws violate God's laws, then man has not only the right but the duty to disobey them. Mr. Leslie Dunbar, speaking to students in Earlham College, built the major part of his talk around a resolution passed in 1960 by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States which reads in part:

"Acknowledging that Christians have historically upheld the just authority of the state as being constituted by God for His own glory and the public good so long as the state has not commanded anything contrary to the law of God . . .

"Affirming that some laws and customs requiring racial discrimination are, in our judgment, such serious violations of the law of God as to justify peaceful and orderly disobedience or disregard of these laws . . .

"Believing that current student demonstrations against racial segregation, while in some cases conflicting with local laws or customs, seem to be consistent with our Christian heritage, the Federal Constitution, and the moral consensus of our nation;

"The 172nd General Assembly . . .

"Assures students of our common cause with those who for the sake of conscience participate in such responsible non-violent demonstrations;

"Urges them to continue to recognize the dangers to civil order inherent in conflict with established authority."

Since the passing of this resolution, Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, highest executive officer in that denomination, with clergymen of other faiths, deliberately and openly broke the trespass laws in Baltimore and submitted to arrest and paid the penalty of their violation.

One does not have to be a Presbyterian or agree in detail with their resolution supporting the right to be a law-breaker when man's laws violate what one believes to be a higher law, the moral law of the Universe, to realize civilization is in a shaky position whenever its citizens assume their laws are so just and right they must never be violated. What are the laws of any time but the public expression of the minimum amount of justice the majority of citizens are willing to give each other? Laws must be supported by a majority of the people and seldom does a majority vote on anything raise anything to its greatest height. Few of us would want to take our musical standards by the popular vote that produces the ten most popular tunes of the month. If a man will not foolishly submit his musical conscience to popular vote, then he will be equally sensible not to submit his moral conscience to the unchallenged domination of the state.

Seldom, if ever, have men at the time it was happening been able to approve of men who broke man's laws because they could not consent to the injustice of them, but generations later such law-breakers have been the honored ones of civilization. I have no desire to make saints out of sinners or suggest that the two hundred thirty-nine persons who have recently been jailed in Chapel Hill are carbon copies of Martin Luther or even Martin Luther King, Jr. Indeed, some of them would be unable to philosophize as we have done; all they could or would say is they are tired of being greeted with words, signs or actions which say to them, "You aren't really a man. Don't come in here." Others, who are more sophisticated, might not use the language we have used. The word "God" has lost favor with them. But the words "right" and "justice" have not. I would not claim that all or any of those so disturbing the peace of Chapel Hill by violating laws are one hundred per cent pure in motivation. I am saying the angry and emotional judgments expressed in the words "anarchist" and "irresponsible," the automatic assumption that law breaking is evil, is not justified.

The law-breakers in our midst are troublesome to many of us because they are breaking the law to change the law and that, even though we are sympathetic with their cause, does not seem right. We know how dependent we are on law and respect for law to promote peace and tranquility, to establish justice, to promote the general welfare, to educate us and enable us to be civilized persons. It is because of an awareness of the inherent goodness in the state that many are saying, some angrily, some simply sadly, "It isn't right to break the law to change the law."

Let me offer you some thoughts on this aspect of the problem. I am indebted for them, almost in entirety, to a lawyer, Mr. Harris Wofford, Jr., who is the author of an article entitled, "The Law and Civil Disobedience," which appeared in the "Presbyterian Outlook," September 26, 1960. Mr. Wofford, a graduate of the University of Chicago and of the Howard and Yale University Law Schools, is an Episcopalian and has served as professor in the Notre Dame Law School. Lawyer Wofford, perhaps recognizing that it will be lawyers, men convinced of and dedicated to law, who will see most celarly the high value of respect and obedience to law and the dangers of disrespect and disobedience to law, writes: "I am not an anarchist and I did pass the bar . . . I want to make a lawyer's case for civil disobedience."

He cites the freedom of speech guaranteed in the First Amendment and the principle of equal protection of the laws stated in the Fourteenth Amendment as two areas where any laws in conflict with moral law ought to be civilly disobeyed. He recognizes it is risky business, to ask men to judge the law to see if it be right rather than simply let the law judge them always as right or wrong. But let me use his own words:
